Farm, Garden and Household.

Thoughts for the Month.

Work for the present month differs little from that of the last—fall plowing and fall seeding of grain, grass and clover being the chief occupations outside of the regular housing of the crops. We shall not therefore repeat, except to advise the pressing forward and completing the sowing of all grain (except wheat,) grass and clover by the fifteenth of October in localities north of 33°; south of that line the time may be extended two or three weeks later. In very mild winters late sowings may do well, but no one can foresee the nature of the weather, and a prudent man prepares for the worst.

We have just finished putting in some oats in a very cheap and yet satisfactory manner. A part of the land was rested and part stubble. About three weeks ago it was carefully plowed with a two-horse turning plow, the weeds and grass very handsomely hurled, and the land left with a moderately ridged surface. Upon this the seed were sown, and also about one hundred pounds acid phosphate per acre, and both seed and fertilizers effectually covered by passing a drag or smoother over the surface. The field now looks as if a very heavy roller had been over it. In the spring, if the oats are not killed out, it is our purpose to give it a top dressing of nitrate soda and salt—seventy-five pounds of the former and one hundred pounds of the latter per acre.

WHEAT-SOWING.

Wheat-sowing in the cotton States extends from the first of October to the first of December, according to latitude and elevation, the majority of farmers, even as far north as 34°, regarding November as the best month. It is worthy of investigation, however, whether earlier sowings, judiciously grazed by sheep and calves, would not make better returns; but whatever the time decided on, it is not too early to begin preparation. The surface soil should be very thoroughly pulverized by repeated plowings and harrowings, and whatever manure is applied should be most thoroughly mixed with it.

White wheats are more delicate than the red, and require richer soil. For general purposes, perhaps the amber varieties are best, being hardy, and making flour sufficiently white to satisfy the good housewife. Again, we urge upon every farmer to raise enough wheat for home supply. It will not cost much to do this. It will look better. It will make him more independent, and it will exert a most wholesome influence on the condition of the country at large. Cotton does not bring such remunerating prices that we can afford to raise it to buy everything else in the world.

HOUSING CORN.

Clean out the crib thoroughly, and paint over the inside with coal tar, if weevils are troublesome. Gather corn as soon as it is dry, to prevent rotting and destruction by vermin. Feed very economically now, that you may be able to feed more liberally next May and June. The disposition to be lavish and extravagant is very great on a Southern farm when the crops have just been gathered—one feels so rich after having been pinched and stinted for months.

PEA CROP.

An abundant supply of seed, at least, should be gathered. They will be needed both for planting the next crop and for sowing on wheat and oat stubble. Don't trust to buying them "in town." They will be scarce and high, money not overplentiful, and you will not get as many as you ought to have. Mow or pull up the vines, thrash out the peas, store them away in a cool cellar, and put away the vines for forage, or use them for litter in the stalls, and the land will still get the benefit of them. Everybody admits the value of the pea as a fertilizer, and yet how few make full use of it.

SWEET POTATOES.

Dig before a hard frost, and, if possible, in dry, cloudy weather. Handle carefully, put in old-fashioned "hills" or banks, leave an "air-hole," and cover lightly for some weeks, and when the weather gets cold pile on the dirt at least one foot thick. When the "sweat" is over, close the "air-hole," and be sure that the potatoes are kept from getting wet.

FODDER AND HAY.

As the stacks of these have had ample time to cure, fodder and hay should be housed before the winter rains set in. During long rainy spells water is almost sure to penetrate the stacks, and cause more or less damage.

STOCK.

As pastures begin to fail, commence at once feeding stock. Keep them fat if you wish to winter them easily and economically. Animals kept fat all the time will eat less in the long run. Have hogs fat and ready for the knife when the first "hog-killing spell" in November comes. The meat will cure better than if killed later, and the corn crib will be decidedly the gainer thereby. Southern Cultivator.

WEEDS AS WATER PURIFIERS.—It is pleasant, if only for the sake of variety, to be able to say a good word for weeds, as Mr. J. J. Mechi does in the following communication to the London Agricultural Gazette:

"Into my pond runs a stream (of twenty-five gallons per minute) of pure water from a drain which I cut, twelve feet deep, some thirty odd years ago. Weeds will grow and thrive in this pond, and we have annually to rake out large quantities of them. They look very beautiful as they grow in the pellucid water, which is used for household purposes. Said a visitor to me one day: 'If you had a pair of swans your pond would be free of weeds.' So a kind friend presented me with a pair, and very soon they cleared the pond, pulling the weeds up by the roots and feeding on them. My family were delighted with the graceful swans and the removal of weedy obstructions to boating; but, although the pond was free of weeds, the water was no longer pure and pellucid, but most decidedly muddy in taste, and when the steam issued from the kettle the smell of mud was unmistakable. Well, no one thought it could be the swans, but at last I came to that conclusion, and, despite family and other remonstrances, returned them to their original owner. After a short period, the weeds reappeared, and as they increased in bulk the water gradually assumed its pellucidity and purity, and 'Richard was himself again.' What the weeds do for the water and its occupants the land vegetation does for the air—men, animals and other living creatures poison it, while vegetation absorbs the injurious gases, and reconverts them into wholesome food and fuel for man and beast, filling the atmosphere with that precious oxygen without which men and animals and other living creatures could no longer exist. So it is in the vast ocean, whose living occupants and vegetation probably exceed in quantity that which is on land. We owe to the river vegetation much of the purity of water. It is the excess of impurities from our towns which are beyond its powers of appropriation."

RYE FOR PASTURE.—We do not wish to be too persistent in urging a field of fall rye for winter and spring pasture. It is, however, of so much value in saving other feed, giving a wholesome change to all kinds of domestic stock, that its advantages cannot be too thoroughly brought forward. The fresh cows in the spring, when butter is always high, will improve upon rye pasture with great rapidity, increasing the flow of milk and general health of the animal. Besides all this, the crop of rye pays all expenses.—Kansas Farmer.

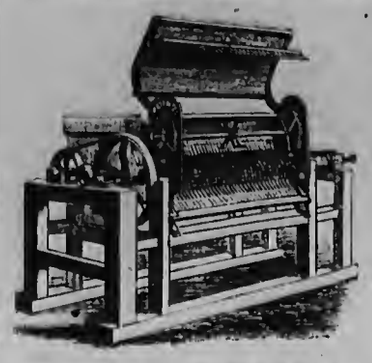
PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past two seasons, and some recent improvements added. It obviates all friction in the cotton box, prevents the rolls from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint than any other Gin in use. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, and in consequence the market price of the cotton is enhanced materially. This increased value, given by length of staple and extra production of lint, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every one hundred bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

To sell the NEW BOOK BACKSHEESH or Life and Adventures in the Orient. By Thos. W. Knox. It reveals the Wonders, Marvels, and Mysteries of the Land of the Rising Sun, and portrays life as it really is in the old and sleepy East. None can resist its 250 illustrations, mostly executed in Europe at a cost of $10,000. To YOU, reader, and every wide-awake person, it affords a splendid chance to earn BIG PAY. Only think, 500 pages, 250 superb illustrations. Scientific.

—Dr. Gustav Leipoldt, as the result of an elaborate calculation, gives the mean height of Europe as about eleven hundred and fifty-seven feet, which is two hundred and sixty-eight feet higher than the average given by Humboldt.

—The leathern "hose" or pipe through which water is pumped by a fire engine is heavy, and is liable to crack. An inventor at Brussels makes a hollow pipe of hemp, which he tans, and thereby renders waterproof. This pipe is then lined with a thin coat of India rubber, and thus is formed a "hose" which is flexible, and so light that one man can carry it a considerable length. Its strength, too, is so great that a pipe of less than two inches internal diameter will resist a pressure of fifteen atmospheres; and a three-quarter-inch pipe will resist thirty atmospheres.

—It seems that a French naturalist, M. Margelidet, has demonstrated by experiment that toads may live a very long time immured in places inaccessible to the air. On the fifteenth of January, in the year 1870, he caused a cavity to be hollowed in a large stone, put a toad into the cavity, and then sealed up the mouth of the cavity with impermeable cement. On the fifteenth of last month, five years since he had put the poor creature into durance vile, he broke open the cavity, at the French Museum of Natural History, and found the toad within alive and well, though in a torpid condition. Nor has it, it is said, since its release, taken any nourishment whatever.

—To the dangers resulting from the use of green wall paper—to which attention has been so often called that the facts are now matters of common knowledge—must be added, according to the Gazette des Hopitaux, a new series, not so well understood. Some years ago a crusade was undertaken against a bright red dye, which in woolen goods, such as stockings and the like, was the occasion of violent skin eruptions on those wearing the articles. The coloring matter, coraline, was at once condemned; but supporters arose in its favor and direct experiments on animals proved its innocuousness. Although suspicions had arisen that the poison might be associated with or even combined with the color which had caused all the mischief, it was not until quite recently that direct proof was furnished. Dr. Bijon, a physician of Quimperle, had an apartment hung with feutre Pavy, a wall paper with a red pattern on a hazel-brown (noisette) ground. Whenever he inhabited this room he was annoyed by prickings of the eyelids, with itching and burning sensations. He was even attacked with a severe inflammation of the eyes after having slept for a few nights in the room. Upon analysis the paper yielded abundance of arsenic, and the red dye used in its preparation was proved to be coraline. While, therefore, pure coraline may not be itself poisonous, it is generally associated with arsenic, and hence should be avoided.

PASSION is a storm, and spares nothing.

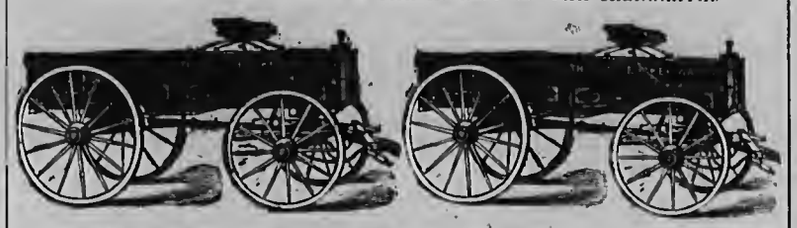
I HAVE RECENTLY ACCEPTED THE AGENCY OF THE CELEBRATED



STUDEBAKER WAGON.

FROM ONE TO SIX HORSE.

THE MOST SUBSTANTIAL WAGONS MADE!

There are several reasons why all should buy the above Wagon: First. They are made of the BEST SELECTED TIMBER, the same being cut at the proper season of the year, piled under sheds, properly dated, and allowed to remain there from three to five years. Second. The wood-work is shaped by the latest improved machinery, put together by the BEST WAGON MECHANICS IN THE WORLD, and are the best ironed and patented Wagons in the market. Third. Their thimble skeins, made of select iron, are set by patent skein setters, and weigh from four to twenty-five pounds per set more than any other, thereby making a perfect running Wagon, which will not break. Fourth. They are the only Wagon in which the SLOPE-SHOULDER SPOKE is used; hence they have the best wheel, which is actually the foundation of the Wagon, and should be carefully examined by persons purchasing. Fifth. They are sold only by responsible parties, and every Wagon is warranted; while the Studebaker Bros. are practical workmen, and attend to their business personally; hence the superiority of their work over all others.

On Saturday the business during the morning was of fair extent, but for the rest of the day the movement was contracted, and the sales were confined to the limited amount of 1,700 bales. On Monday the business during the morning was of moderate extent at about previous rates, after which, the two P. M. dispatch from New York reporting a further improvement of ⅛c. in spots and futures still higher, factors became more stringent in their pretensions, and the rest of the business was mostly at stronger prices, requiring a partial advance in quotations of ⅛c. Middling sold at 13⅜@13⅝c. The sales embraced 2,700 bales. On Tuesday the market opened with a better supply, and although the movement was checked by more stringent pretensions on the part of factors, yet the sales during the morning reached 2,000 bales, partly at figures which could not have been realized on Monday, but mostly without any quotable improvement; after which there was perceptibly more pressure to sell, and the advantage was on the side of the buyers. The entire business summed up 5,000 bales, the same as Friday last, which was then the heaviest of the season.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 9,400 bales, against 8,050 for the corresponding time last week and 7,600 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 68,768 bales, against 62,-058 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 38,325 bales. The increase by the reports per telegraph is 48,436—358,442 against 309,986. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 6,825 bales to France, of 15,316 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 13,707 to Great Britain. We quote:

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

OCTOBER.

AMONG THE HILLS.

All day the south wind nestled in the trees
With half-complaining tone;
The leaves drooped idly, fluttering to the breeze,
And fell on moss and stone.

The golden rod has lost its crown of flame,
The aster met its doom,
Ere yet adown the hills the frost king came
To blast their wildwood bloom.

The meadows still their robes of freshest green
Wore in those autumn days,
And through their brightness, with its gayest sheen,
The sparkling river plays.

The birds that winter in our stormy clime
Give their few notes of cheer,
Some glad remembrance of the genial time
Gone with the passing year.

They have no fear, and he who rules the storm
And guides their wandering wings
Embraces in his love each tiny form,
And sure protection brings.

O days whose gorgeous beauty hath no peer
Through all Time's changing round,
Stay your swift flight and linger with us here,
By all your glory crowned!

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 12.—Advices from Hong Kong state that a hostile feeling has been manifested by the Chinese in the north for some months, and seems to be extending, venting itself in the mobbing of foreigners when an opportunity offers.

The P. and O. steamer Givalior broke down when one hundred and fifty miles from Hong Kong, and was unable to sail. She drifted down to Hainark, where she anchored. A boat sent in charge of the second officer to Macoa, for assistance, was overhauled and robbed by pirates on the way, but was allowed to proceed, and eventually reached its destination.

A sharp shock of an earthquake was felt at Nagasaki on the twenty-fifth of last month.

SYRACUSE, Oct. 13.—The National Women's Congress assembled at Weiting Opera House, in this city, to-day. The attendance was not as large as at Chicago last year, although there were a number of prominent women present; among these are Prof. Maria Mitchell, Julia Ward Howe, Rev. Phœbe Hanniford, Miss Louisa Alcott and Mrs. Livermore. All professions are fairly represented. In the morning an executive session was held, from which all persons not members were excluded.

CLINTON, LA., Oct. 14.—On the evening of the eleventh Dr. Saunders, of this place, was poisoned with a solution of arsenic in a dipper and bucket of water, administered by one Catherine Mathews, sister-in-law of John Gair. When arrested she confessed her guilt, and said John Gair and Robert Ray instigated her to the act.

The deputy sheriff and posse arrested John Gair in Baton Rouge under a warrant from the authorities in this parish, and started to bring him to Clinton. About night they were met by a party of fifty or more armed men, who took from the depety sheriff and posse their arms, and took possession of Gair and sent the posse on to Clinton.

It is said Gair was killed by the men who took him from the deputy sheriff. The same body of men, or others, came into town and hung the woman. It is the opinion of the entire community that the poisoning was done by the woman, and that Gair and Ray instigated her to the act.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14.—A sharp shock of an earthqeake was experienced here about six o'clock this evening, the vibrations being from east to west. Advices from Santa Clara valley, south of San Francisco, mention the occurrence of a similar shock there. No damage is reported.

PASCAGOULA, Oct. 16.—There was a frost here this morning.

MEMPHIS, Oct. 16.—There was a killing frost last night, which probably did some damage to late cotton in the bottoms.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.—The Indian investigation committee have made their report.

They recommend the abolition of the office of superintendent of Indian affairs in the West, and that their duties be performed by inspectors.

They recommend a territorial government for the Indian Territory; the establishment of courts; the abolition of tribal sovereignty; the extension of the criminal laws of the United States over Indian reservations; the exaction of individual responsibility from the Indian for his acts; recognition of individual rights of property in their lands, with some temporary restriction in their power of alienation.

MACON, GA., Oct. 18.—The State Fair opened at Central City Park today. There was a fair attendance of visitors. Gen. Hawley and party arrived to-night. He will speak on Wednesday. The fair continues a week.

MEMPHIS, Oct. 18.—The epizootic, in a very mild form, has appeared among horses here.

FOREIGN.

PANAMA, Oct. 1.—A contract has been drawn up between Nicaragua, Guatemala and Salvador to unite and form one national government. It is not yet known whether Honduras and Costa Rica will join the movement.

News from Bogota and the Atlantic States of the Union shows peace is established.

COLLINGWOOD, CANADA, Oct. 12. Six inches of snow fell here last night. Considerable damage was done to fruit and ornamental trees by the heavy weight of snow breaking and bending them down. The snow is still falling this morning.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 15.—The following news is official: A force of two thousand insurgents have been defeated by the Turks. One hundred and sixty were killed; the rest took refuge in Montenegre. Seventeen villages, hitherto strongly insurgent, submitted to Turkish authority.

YOKOHAMA, Oct. 17.—The steamer Sunda, from Hong Kong, with European mails, struck a rock near Turnabout Island on the fourth instant. All the passengers and crew, except seven natives, were saved.

MILAN, Oct. 18.—Emperor William, accompanied by Field Marshal Count Von Moltke, Secretary of State Von Bulow, and other dignitaries, arrived here this afternoon.

King Victor Emanuel, the crown prince and princess and Prince Amadens, with the president of the Council, Signor Minghetti, and the minister for foreign affairs, Signor Visconti Venosta, received the Emperor and his suite at the railway station, where the members of the royal household and representatives from the two chambers were in waiting.

From the Work.

WATER VALLEY, MISS.—Mr. Editor: Our last quarterly meeting for this station commenced September 26 and closed October 8, having been protracted thirteen days. This meeting was looked forward to with more than ordinary interest, not because it was to be the last of the Conference year, but from the fact that we had been promised help by two of the ablest and most distinguished divines in Mississippi—Rev. Dr. C. K. Marshall, of Vicksburg, and Rev. Dr. J. J. Wheat, professor of Greek literature in the State University at Oxford.

The meeting was opened by our beloved presiding elder, Rev. Joseph H. Brooks, who preached on Sabbath morning, with his usual power, to a large and attentive audience, Dr. Marshall not arriving in time to fill the pulpit at that hour. At the close of this most excellent sermon the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered, and was honored with the presence and glory of its divine Author. At night Dr. Marshall delivered a masterly discourse. The next morning at nine o'clock a prayer meeting was held, and here God manifested himself to his believing children in great power. At this "feast of heavenly manna" saints were refreshed, backsliders were reclaimed, while conviction fastened upon the minds of the careless and indifferent. Dr. Marshall preached again at night, to a large concourse of eager listeners, with much effect, continuing the morning and evening services until Wednesday, when Dr. Wheat came to his relief, preaching three sermons in succession to crowded houses, and with great power and unction.

The prayer meetings, as conducted by Dr. Marshall, were precious seasons for the church, each witnessing new tokens and displays of divine mercy. Such was the interest manifested in these meetings that our merchants, mechanics and even saloon-keepers closed their places of business one hour each day to visit the church.

The professional engagements of Dr. Wheat calling him away, the meeting was carried on by Dr. Marshall with increasing power and effect until his diseased chest admonished him that he must desist.

We have great cause for rejoicing in what has been accomplished, as well as for what we yet hope from this glorious outpouring of the Spirit. This meeting has given us an addition of fifteen members to the church, and we have strong hope that many more will soon be brought into the fold of Christ and into the favor of God. We are led to infer thus much from the deep-seated, widespread influence that has gone out over the community since this glorious meeting commenced, and which still exists. S. M. THAMES.

OCTOBER 12, 1875.

BROOKHAVEN, MISS.—Mr. Editor: Permit me to report, through your paper, a few items connected with our church in this city. The year began with us amid auspicious events. I will mention one. After about two days' travel we arrived at the depot at Brookhaven, where we found a committee waiting, who conducted us to our destined home—the parsonage—which we found lighted up with warm fires and cheerful faces. After a hearty welcome and some pleasant conversation we were invited to the dining-room, where we found that which we seldom see on such an occasion—a New Year turkey dinner. After partaking of this rich and bountiful provision we were shown through the parsonage, a neat and comfortable building; and lastly, the pantry door was opened, the shelves of which were stocked with provisions for a month or two—a gift. I did not fly for pen, ink and paper, and begin to trouble you with the overflowings of a grateful heart, for we have heard of some of these "welcome dinners" being the minister's receipt in full for the year. This, however, has not been the case with us. My salary has been paid as I needed it; and besides, I have been the recipient of many kindly acts. Every claim of the church either has or will be brought up in full, and in some cases more than has been required.

Our church here during the summer has been in a state of revival. Up to date there have been forty-eight accessions. All save one were citizens of the town and surrounding country. In several instances whole families, and in most cases leading members of families, have joined. We have been somewhat successful in reorganizing and getting our church to work. We hope the harvest for 1875 at Brookhaven has not been fully gathered yet, for we believe more fruit has been ripened and is ripening upon the tree of Christian life than we have yet brought into our Master's house.

Whitworth College has reopened well. The attendance will be larger than last year. When one has had the opportunity of observing the operations of this college in every department—the mild yet firm and successful discipline, the number of studious yet cheerful and healthy pupils, its able management and remarkable success—he will, like myself, be constrained to say something in its praise; but this I will not do, since its past history and work speak for it more successfully than I will ever be able to do.

Yours respectfully, H. R. S.

VICKSBURG DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The Vicksburg District Conference met in the Crawford Street church, in the city of Vicksburg, August 26, 1875, Rev. F. M. Featherstun, presiding elder, in the chair. R. D. Howe was elected and served quite acceptably as secretary. The attendance of the members was good. Only two of the preachers were absent, and one of them—Rev. A. B. Stewart—was kept away by severe personal affliction. The reports from the pastoral charges showed that the church in the district is in a better condition temporally and spiritually than it was last year. The preachers generally have been attending faithfully to their duties, and the membership seem to be growing in the knowledge and practice of godliness. No dram-drinking, horse-racing or dancing reported—though these doubtless exist to some extent—but Sunday schools, prayer meetings, class meetings and good attendance upon all the ordinances of God's house throughout the district.

The Conference adopted a report on missions which recommends several important changes in the circuits and missions in the district, the practical results of which must depend upon the judgment of the presiding Bishop at our next Annual Conference. We were visited during the session by the Revs. C. G. Andrews and H. F. Johnson, who ably represented Centenary College and Whitworth College respectively. Port Gibson Collegiate Academy, presided over by the Rev. J. A. B. Jones, and situated within the district, was of course not forgotten. By the way, now is the time for our people to be forwarding their sons and daughters to these excellent institutions of learning. Let them not fail to do so. The State Female College, near Memphis, Tenn., was also well represented by Bro. Reeves.

The Conference adjourned for preaching each day at eleven o'clock. The preaching and other religious exercises, day and night, were of a highly interesting and edifying character.

Thomas L. Mellen, John G. Guice, Rev. C. K. Marshall, D. D., and William J. Lann were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, and William Crutcher and James McArthur alternates. The next session of the Conference is to be held at Port Gibson. H.

NEW CAMP GROUND.—Mr. Editor: Adjacent to Grove Hill and Jackson, pleasant villages in our Alabama, there looms up in the wilderness a most capacious, substantial and beautiful board arbor, surrounded at proper distances by neat and cozy and comfortable tents, of the same durable make. Wending our way thither, two weeks ago, as we neared this Christian encampment, somehow the very appearance of things generally refreshed our souls and gladdened our hearts; and from the Alpha to the Omega of this precious meeting there was religious and social delight pervading every hour of its continuance. God's felt presence, and the grace imparted by the indwelling of the crucified Lamb, came down upon the people, and a joyous season we had at this largely attended meeting. We had between fifty and sixty conversions, many of them already in the church fold, and so were blessed, and fifteen new accessions and reclamations among the distrustful. There were shouts of joy and songs of praise, and the still, small voice speaking peace where the waves were troubled.

Bros. Briggs, Wild, Turner, Kelly and Anderson, and Bros. Cox and Chapman, local ministers, and Bro. Powers, were in attendance. Hid behind the cross, these men of Christ, with their hands stayed by generous tent-holders, labored day and night, while signal blessedness fell upon them and the multitude of people for whom they toiled. God's power was under that new arbor, and, like little children, strong men and saintly women rejoiced aloud in this glorious refreshing. It was joy to be there, and, God willing, at the next year's Christian jubilee we trust we shall mingle our voices again with these godly people of Clarke, whose cordial kindliness has tenderly endeared them to the heart of one who met them as strangers, but who left them with warm and lasting attachments. JULIA WESTWOOD.

BUFFALO CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We have recently closed a most interesting meeting of thirteen days' continuance at Percy's Creek church. It has been years since there was such an outpouring of the Spirit of God at that church as was seen and felt during the meeting. Twenty-three united with the church—three by letter—and Christians were greatly revived and blessed.

Our beloved presiding elder, Rev. C. G. Andrews, D. D., came to our assistance on the eighth day of the meeting, and was abundant in labors. He preached for six consecutive days and nights, to the delight and profit of large and attentive audiences. Bro. Langford, of the Wilkinson circuit, also preached two excellent sermons, but, being ill, was compelled to desist from the work. Bro. Finn, superannuate, did good service as far as his strength would permit. The night the meeting closed there were twenty penitents at the altar, but we were compelled to leave in order to be at the District Conference, commencing in Woodville the day following.

Among those who united with the church were the most wealthy and influential of our citizens, and we expect ere many months to have a new church on Percy's Creek to worship God in. God grant that before the Conference year closes we may see such a work of grace at every appointment. Pray for us.

Your brother in Christ,

J. S. PARKER, P. C.

Providence Camp Meeting.

MR. EDITOR: On the first Saturday of September last the brethren of the Providence church, in the Providence circuit, Brookhaven district, Mississippi Conference, decided to have a camp meeting, to begin on Thursday, October 7. In company with Rev. J. M. Weems, of Hazlehurst station, I reached the ground about twelve o'clock on that day, and found several families there, with all the furniture and provisions necessary for such a meeting. Fourteen families pitched their tents there, and dispensed their hospitality liberally to those who came from a distance. The location is beautiful for such a meeting. The water is fine and abundant. There is a dense forest around the encampment. Eighty acres of land belong to the church. There the hosts of Zion were wont to meet and worship thirty-five or more years ago at camp meeting; but since 1848 no such meeting has been held till this year. Elijah Steele preached there. His brother, who had a large tent there this year, says Elijah preached his first sermon there. Dr. Wluans, Thomas Griffin and others of the older members of the Mississippi Conference preached at camp meetings there in years agone. It has been the birthplace of many precious souls who have gone up to the glory land.

The first service was held at three o'clock on the seventh, and the last was held on the morning of the twelfth. We had nineteen sermons. Owing to the great amount of sickness in the country the congregations were not so large as they would have been; yet it is supposed six hundred persons were present on Sunday. Perhaps there were more. We had good order and attentive hearers. The Spirit attended the word. There were many who came to the altar of prayer. So far as we could learn, twenty-five were happily converted—"they were powerfully converted," and shouted the praises of God; and twenty-five joined the church. The members of the church were greatly revived. By the sermons and other services our church, doctrines and usages have been brought prominently before the people of that region of country, as they have not been for many years before. We are understood and known better. That is an important item. Prominent citizens were reached, converted and got into the church. That was better. The brethren hope to have a good shed and thirty or more tents by their next meeting. The ground is fifteen miles from Hazlehurst, and not far from Pearl river, and can be reached by many on both sides of the river by private conveyance. The accommodations at the public tent, both for eating and sleeping, were excellent. I hope Capt. Brown will have a large patronage next year.

Let the preachers of Brookhaven and Seashore districts come up in force to the next meeting. There is work to be done. The people will be glad to see you, and will appreciate your services.

We have been blessed with some very good and successful meetings in the Brookhaven district. So far as I have learned, there have been four hundred and two accessions to the church (including those at the two camp meetings) in the district during the year. May they be properly cared for and carefully trained.

Tickling.

I notice in a recent number of the Central Methodist an article over the signature of the Rev. W. H. H. Ditzler. It is in reference to the habit our ministers and laymen have fallen into of "tickling" each other. It has come to that, that we can scarcely notice an account of a revival or protracted meeting without finding the writer devote a large share of his space to the eulogy and glorification of some minister who had assisted him in carrying on the meeting. I doubt not many of your readers, as well as the readers of our church papers generally, have often been disgusted with such fulsome adulation. How common it is to say: The minister preached a number of "inimitable sermons," "superb," "a head and shoulders taller than any man in the Conference," etc. And as Conference approaches, and a revision of the work is soon to be made by the Bishop and his cabinet, such phrases as this may be heard: "Our beloved presiding elder was with us, and maintained the high reputation he so justly enjoys as a pulpit orator of the highest rank, and unsurpassed in eloquence and delivery." Such plastering, just a little prior to the meeting of the Annual Conference, has a very suspicious air about it. It is unnecessary to extend these remarks, as this feature of ministerial correspondence has been noticed by intelligent readers generally. The writer first noticed it a few years since in the church papers of another denomination, where it is still carried on, doubtless, to the great gratification of all the parties concerned. Observer, in the Nashville Christian Advocate.

Upon reading the above the following lines were penned:

TICKLING.

'Tis true, one great man may tickle another,
But you little men shouldn't tickle a brother;
Not every one knows how such tickling to do,
And 'tisn't becoming in small folks like you.

What does it matter if you're never heard of?
'Tis the men of renown the world must have word of;
If still you're unknown, 'tisn't needful to know you—
To be dumbly obscure is the lesson we'd show you.

Let us be mum, then, my brother out famous;
If we praise when we shouldn't, our betters may blame us.
The tickler, you know, claims more shares than one;
And the strong must be heeded, though their weak kin get none.

Now tickling's an art of masterly skill,
A craft that's peculiar to knights of the quill;
Each tickler is tickled with consummate cunning;
Outsiders needn't know how the currents are running. H.

REV. H. M. GRANADE, presiding elder of Fort Smith district, Arkansas Conference, informs us that the Quarterly Conference of Downsville circuit, Fort Smith district, has refused to renew the license of T. P. W. White, an exhorter in the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

The China Grove Camp Meeting.

MR. EDITOR: The eighth camp meeting at China Grove, Dale county, Ala., began on Friday night, October 1, 1875, and closed on Wednesday morning following, at one hour by sun.

Some of the tenters moved in on Thursday; but Friday was the day upon which the masses of tenters and crowds of people came. They gathered from near and from far, until hundreds upon hundreds were upon the ground. While the people were pouring in upon five different roads, the heralds of the cross were also arriving and reporting themselves at headquarters. During the evening the following preachers arrived: Revs. M. E. Butt, E. Philips, T. C. M. Goilund, L. Patterson, J. M. Brown, J. P. Sanders, L. C. Calhoun, W. D. Owens, W. H. Hasty, G. W. Barker and the writer.

At dusk the trumpet sounded forth its solemn notes, as it had sounded years before. Soon an audience, numbering nearly one thousand persons, was seated. Then the sound of cheering song stilled and quieted the people. The service was conducted by Bro. M. E. Butt, who read the one hundred and third psalm, and then sang and all knelt, in deep emotion, and engaged in a prayer of thanksgiving, all giving God heartfelt praise for his abundant goodness to them during the twelve months which had rolled between the last camp meeting and this. Another hymn was sung and another prayer offered; then came the sermon—solid, corrective and instructive. The first service was suited to the beginning of a great and good meeting.

On Saturday the crowd continued to increase and preachers continued to arrive. During the day Revs. A. M. L. Douglas, J. A. Green, T. Z. Hildreth, H. Metcalf, E. M. Johnson, S. A. Pilley and W. S. Turner and others reported at headquarters. In fact the preachers came until there were fourteen traveling and eight local preachers upon the ground, ready to preach, exhort and pray. Taking the preaching all and in all, it was of a very high order. These words had spirit and life. Sinners were deeply and pungently convicted, mourners soundly and brightly converted, believers powerfully and gloriously blessed, and at times the whole church stood upon the mount of transfiguration.

The last day was the great day of the feast. Upon the afternoon of this day, as well as upon others, the men retired in one direction and the women in another, for the purpose of holding grove prayer meetings. As the sun of earth was setting, the "sun of righteousness" was arising upon many "with healing in his wings." The woods resounded with the shouts of triumph. From the woods they marched, victors, to the encampment. As they reached the square heavenly influences came with fresh power upon all the tents and upon the whole of the ground. Now the trumpet sounded the last signal for preaching, and the immense congregation could be scarcely quieted so as to hear the word. However, the preacher advanced to the great work, and as he proceeded the people under the arbor were still, attentive and solemn, while in the tents others were praising God. At the close of the sermon scores came to the altar for prayer and instruction. The church and ministry rallied to the work. Soon conversion followed conversion.

During the meeting there were between forty-five and fifty conversions, and twenty applicants for church membership, among whom are some prominent and influential citizens of this country. Besides, others will join in a short time.

On Wednesday morning we assembled for the last time; and after singing tearfully and praying emotionally, the benediction was pronounced. Soon the multitudes were wending their ways homeward, thanking God for the camp-meeting. It will be held again next year, at the same time as this year.

YE PEDAGOGUE.

A CONTEMPLATIVE BALLAD.

BY JOHN G. SAXE.

Richte learned is ye Pedagogue,
Fulle apt to reade and spelle;
And eke to teache ye parts of speeche,
And strap ye urchins welle.

For as 'tis meete to soake ye feete
Ye allinge heade to mende;
Ye younker's pate to stimulate,
He beats ye other ende!

Righte lordlie is ye Pedagogue
As any turban'd Turke:
For welle to rule ye district schoole,
It is no idle worke.

For oft rebellion lurketh there
In breaste of secrete foes,
Of malice fulle, in waite to pulle
Ye Pedagogue his nose!

Sometimes he heares, with trembling feares,
Of ye ungodlie rogue
On mischieffe bent, with felle intent
To licke ye Pedagogue!

And if ye Pedagogue be smalle,
When to ye battell led,
In such a plighte, God sende him mighte
To breake ye rogue his heade!

Dave after dave, for little paye,
He teacheth what he can,
And hears ye yoke, to please ye folke,
And ye committee-man.

Ah! many crosses hath he borne,
And many trials founde,
Ye while he trudged ye district through,
And boarded rounde and rounde!

Ah! many a steake hath he devoured,
That, by ye taste and sighte,
Was in disdaine, 'twas very plaine,
Of Day his patent righte!

Fulle solemn is ye Pedagogue
Anonge ye noisy churls;
Yet other while he hath a smile
To give ye handsome girls!

And one—ye fayrest mayde of all—
To cheere his wayninge life,
Shall be, when springe ye flowers shall bringe,
Ye Pedagogue his wife!

Conversation.

MR. EDITOR: It has been advised, and by very respectable authorities too, that in conversation women should carefully conceal any knowledge or learning they may happen to possess. I own, with submission, that I do not see either the necessity or propriety of this advice, for why should she forever affect to be on her guard lest she should let fall that which she does not possess?—as it seldom proves to be so considerable as to excite either astonishment or admiration; for I agree with Dean Swift when he says that, "after all the acquisitions which a woman's talents and studies have enabled her to make, she will, generally speaking, be found to possess less of what is called learning than a common school boy." It would be quite presumptuous and absurd for a young lady to pretend to give the tone to conversation in a large company; to interrupt the pleasure of others, and lose her own opportunity of improvement, by talking when she ought to listen; or to introduce subjects out of the common road in order to show her own wit, or to expose the want of it in others. If a young lady has that discretion, and modesty without which all knowledge is little worth, she will never make an ostentatious parade of her knowledge, because she will rather be intent on acquiring more than on displaying what she has. But were our sex to be totally silent when any topic of literature happens to be discussed in their presence, conversation would lose much of its vivacity, and society would be robbed of one of its most interesting charms.

How easily and effectually may an intelligent woman promote the most useful and elegant conversation, almost without speaking a word?—for the modes of speech are scarcely more variable than the modes of silence. The silence of listless ignorance and the silence of sparkling intelligence are perhaps as separately marked and distinctly expressed as the same feelings could have been by the most unequivocal language. A lady, in a company where she has the least influence, may promote any subject by a profound and invariable attention, which shows that she is pleased with it; and by an illuminated countenance, which proves she understands it. This obliging attention is the most flattering encouragement in the world to a literary gentleman to continue any topic of instruction or entertainment he may happen to be engaged in. It owed its introduction perhaps to accident—the best introduction in the world for a subject of ingenuity—which, though it could not have been formally proposed without pedantry, may be continued with ease and good humor, but which will be frequently and effectually stopped by the listlessness and inattention of silly girls, whose weariness betrays their ignorance, and whose impatience exposes their ill-breeding. A polite person, however deeply interested in the subject on which he is conversing, catches at the slightest hint to be silent—a look is a sufficient intimation; and if a pretty simpleton, who sits near him, gives the slightest evidence of weariness, he puts an end to his remarks, to the great regret of the intelligent part of the company, who perhaps might have gained more knowledge by the continuance of such a conversation than a week's reading would have yielded them; for it is such company as this that gives an edge to wit, "as iron sharpeneth iron."

That silence is one of the greatest arts of conversation is allowed by Cicero himself, who says there is not only an art, but even an eloquence in it; and this opinion is confirmed by a great modern, Lord Bacon, in the following little anecdote from one of the ancients: "When many Grecian philosophers had a solemn meeting before the embassador of a foreign prince, each endeavored to make a display of his knowledge by the brilliancy of his conversation, that the embassador might have something to relate of the Grecian wisdom. One of them, offended, no doubt, at the loquacity of his companions, observed a profound silence; when the embassador, turning to him, asked: 'But what have you to say, that I may report it?' He made this laconic but very pointed reply: 'Tell your king that you have found one among the Greeks who knew how to be silent.'"

The art of pleasing consists in making others pleased with themselves. Those who would please others should never talk for display; the vanity of shining in conversation is usually subversive of its own desires. However our qualifications transcend those of the persons who surround us, it is both unwise and unkind to obtrude them upon their notice or betray disregard of their opinion. It is never politic to humble those whom we seek to conciliate.

Fluency of conversation should not be assumed as a test of talent, for men of genius and wisdom have been often found deficient in its graces. Adam Smith ever retained in company the embarrassed manner of a student, and even Rousseau did not carry his eloquence into society. The silence of the poet Chaucer was held more desirable than his speech. The conversation of Goldsmith did not evince the grace and tenderness which characterized his compositions. Thompson was deficient, and often uninteresting. Dante was taciturn, and all the brilliance of Tasso was in his pen. Cowley was a quiet observer, and tho spirited Dryden acknowledged that his conversation was slow and dull, and his humor reserved. Hogarth and Swift were absent-minded; and the studious Thomas Baker said that he was fit for no communion save with the dead. Our own Washington, Hamilton and Franklin were deficient in that fluency which often fascinates a promiscuous circle.

As Pythagoras imposed on those who would be initiated into his philosophy a long term of silence, so they who would acquire the art of conversation should first learn to listen. To do this with an appearance of unwearied attention, and, as far as possible, with an expression of interested feeling on the countenance, is a species of amiable politeness which all should endeavor to cultivate.

EUGENIA.

My Experience.—No. 3.

In 1838, riding along, I was joined by a friend. He was irreligious still. We had been boon companions, though we were not constant drinkers. We drew near a tavern where we used to take a social glass, and he requested me to drink. I declined. He scoffed at it, and remarked that no set of men or society should deprive him of liberty. I was tenacious of my liberty, and was about to drink the glass; but the thought came: "Is it God or man that prohibits such?" The answer was: "God, who is your governor." I set it down. O how near to ruin was I then! But, thank God, he inspired me in that moment to reject it, and I was saved; and though my friend seemed vexed, he afterward spoke honorably of me for my courage.

Again there was in store for me a greater trial, even to mortify the deeds of the body. As worldly young men often do, I had fallen into the habit of exaggeration. I had often told of some wonderful sights, dangers and feats in foreign lands. These and all else had come up in my repentance, and I felt that God had forgiven me. But now a gentleman came, asking a repetition of them. I hesitated a moment. It occurred to me now: If you repeat them you are ruined. I turned to him and said: "Please do not mention those things again; for though there is some foundation of truth, yet the coloring covers the truth so deep that the truth is hard to find." It was very mortifying, but it had to be done. It was like cutting off a hand or a foot, or plucking out an eye. And so the wicked also tried to vex me, and dared me to fight, as in former days. God kept me.

By this time (1839) I had sold my vessel and settled down, determined to live a sweet Christian life in my retired home. But soon my impressions to preach became troublesome, for I feared that it was a device of satan to rob me of my religious enjoyment, and I tried to banish the thought. The brethren often asked me if I did not have such impressions. I evaded a direct answer—plead with God my want of education, my former wickedness, the attachment to home; but when I tried to pray, whether in private, in the congregation or at the family altar, I always seemed to be in the presence and pleading for a multitude of strangers; and I disturbed my friends in the night, preaching in my dreams. I read the Bible and prayed for direction with tears. Whenever I determined to yield to my impressions, and give myself to the ministry, my sky was clear—I was happy and joyful; but when I refused all was dark, for there was nothing to hinder me. I had prayed God that, if it were my duty to go out to preach, he would impress Mother Evans. It was not long before she came and said: "I believe that God wants you to preach." "O," said I, "grandma, how can I? I have been so wicked, and am so ignorant. I am just settled." "Mind," she said, "and do what you feel to be your duty." I yielded myself into the hands of my pastor, and I was licensed to preach by Rev. B. Pipkin, P. E., October 20, 1840. But I soon felt that though this was a good work, yet the inward voice said: "Go;" and whenever I spoke of going it nearly broke the heart of my wife, and friends said that I could do more good by staying than by going. I settled my business and bought an equipage for traveling; but before Conference time came I concluded to take the advice of friends, and improved a new place. Conference passed off; but before I had finished my improvements I was a miserable man. The heavens became as brass to my prayer. My joy had fled, except at such times as I felt willing to go; then I was happy. But I could not consent to tear my wife away; and now my business failed, my health declined, and I got in debt. One of my fine horses, that I bought for the circuit the year before, killed himself, and I had to sell the other. I was nearly deranged. O I felt that God would kill me! O what anguish filled my soul! I remember one evening that I went out to pray in the forest, and there I promised God, through the opening heavens (for I had access,) that if he would convince and make my wife willing to go, and open my way, so that I might get clear of debt and get the necessary equipage, that I would go. I arose light-hearted, full of joy, and returned to the house, and before retiring for sleep I was astonished when my wife said: "You had better go and do as you feel it to be your duty. I am now willing to go, for I believe you will go crazy." In a day or two I received a request to visit, on business, the State engineer. I did so, and contracted for building boats, the amount of which was just the amount required to pay up and buy what was actually necessary to enter into the work. The work was not completed till about the time the Conference at Jackson, Miss., in 1852, closed. My name and recommendation had gone up, and I was finishing my work. (I tell all this to show how God all along brought my faith to the test.) But I was praying all the time, that, if it was not the desire of God that I should go, and his presence go before me, he would so impress the Conference that they would vote against my admission. Still I felt that I was going, and I felt so confident that I told the State engineer that I should leave the State of Louisiana as soon as my work was finished. I went to New Orleans, got my draft and called on the treasurer. No money to be had. I felt: All is well; I cannot go without money. I returned home, and in two days was in New Orleans again; called and told the engineer that I had joined the itinerancy, and expected to leave the State. He went with me to the treasurer, and he took me to the bank, where I received just enough money to pay my debts and give me an outfit, with a balance of $5 (all these little matters are wonderful in my eyes,) and I had not arrived home two hours when Rev. G. Y. McNabb arrived. He rode out of his way one hundred miles on horseback to bring my appointment. But I was astonished when I learned that I was appointed in charge and alone, for I had thought that I should be put with some one to train and teach me. He waited for me two days. We traveled about one hundred miles together. Then I had only about thirty miles to my circuit (Leaf River;) twenty-four preaching-places in twenty-eight days; about three hundred miles around. We had prayer meeting nearly every night where the preacher staid. Well, it did not quite kill me, but I was happy.

A MODERN philosopher thinks it a mistake to suppose that women have stronger attachments than men. "A man," he says, "is often attached to an old hat, but who ever heard of a woman being attached to an old bonnet?"

An Afflicted Family.

SUMMIT, October 7, 1875.

MR. EDITOR: On the morning of the fourteenth of September, at dawn of day, I was sent for to preach the funeral sermon and bury one of the most lovely and beautiful children in our county—at Johnston. It was the youngest child of Dr. W. H. Germany, long a member of the Mississippi Conference, and a most excellent physician, neighbor, Sunday school superintendent and preacher. The notice has been delayed on account of my absence. Nearly all the population of Johnston and the surrounding country was at the funeral and burial. The doctor requested the whole burial service to be used, and it was done with unusual power of the Holy Spirit. Probably all in the church were weeping—holy emotions mingled with mourning. The sweet little girl's name was Ethenella—called Thella at home, in her Sunday school, and by all. She was about three years old, but was remarkable for all that was pleasing and lovely.

OCTOBER 8, 1875.

This morning we hear that one more of Bro. Germany's precious children is not expected to live. Many children have been called home this year from Summit district (with thirteen circuits.) We often hear the parents saying: "My darlings cannot come to me, but I can go to them." New family altars, more holy living, less love of the world, and a deeper Christianity, and more love for Christ, the church and each other, now prevail on account of such sad family vacancies. Let us all humbly bow to the wise dispensation of our heavenly Father.

OBITUARIES.

LUCY R. C. MCVEY, daughter of Dr. Robert C. and Mary R. Hilliard, was born in Brunswick county, Va., June 22, 1843, and was baptized by Rev. H. B. Cowles—Lucy Robert Cargill. In 1847 Dr. Hilliard removed from Petersburg, Va., to St. Martin parish, La. Lucy was converted at a camp meeting at Plaquemine Brulee, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South at ten years of age. She was educated mainly at home, but finished her education at Tuskegee, Ala., where she carried her church letter, and under the pastoral care of Rev. O. R. Blue and Rev. John Mathews continued her church relation, as she said, "with comfort to her own soul."

She returned home in 1860, a polished, Christian young woman. From that time to her death she manifested a steady growth in the Christian graces. She was firm in her principles, and nothing could swerve her from her convictions of duty. Refined and pure in all her tastes, she was a constant and devoted reader of the Bible; and though reserved and quiet in her religious life, she often spoke in love-feast, loved the class meeting, and never hesitated, when called upon, to testify of her faith and hope in the redemption which is in Christ Jesus, and to tell of her conversion and her confidence of acceptance in the beloved. She often thanked her heavenly Father for calling her into his service before her heart was wedded to this world. When her parents went to Texas, as refugees, she took her church letter, and there, under the ministry of Bro. Keener and others, often testified her hope in Jesus and her resolution to live for God. Lucy was a lovely example of a firm and constant, a bright and happy Christian during those years so often wasted upon the follies and vanities of the world and sin.

On the fourth of December, 1866, I married her to Charles McVey, Esq., at the altar of her much-loved church, where she had so often sweetly communed with God. Mr. McVey's home was at Clinton, La. At her happy Clinton home Lucy's church relations were ever dear and sweet to her, while she was the light of her home, and a joyful, brightening element in society. After her marriage her religious character exhibited all the graces of her earlier life, confirmed and enlarged more and more as years increased. But the "coming event" began to cast its shadow upon that bright scene. Lucy's health began to decline—a wasting consumption was fastening itself upon this heart-treasure of a fond husband and a widowed mother. Two years of almost constant travel and unremitting care tell how earnestly poor "Charlie" sought to retain his precious Lucy on the earth. Twice to the genial climate of Florida and twice to the pure air of western Texas he bore his wasting treasure; but all in vain! She too struggled against the ravages of the destroyer—not from fear of death, but for love of those who so fondly loved her on earth. She suffered much, but never murmured—only prayed "to be taken home to heaven, rather than linger an invalid here." She said to her mother: "If I did not know that I am a child of God I would not dare to ask this. He is mine, and all my trust is in him." Her husband writes me: "Her faith was of the kind that 'never faileth,' and reading her Bible was her 'daily bread' as long as her failing strength permitted, and toward the last she had me read it to her."

Nearly a year before her death, knowing the summons might come at any hour, she wrote a will, so characteristic of her simple, quiet faith and cheerful Christian life. It is dated San Antonia, Texas, September 15, 1874. She says: "In cheerful mood, and in trustful faith that the blessed Lord will do what seemeth him good, and call me away from my husband, best beloved of earth, and my precious little ones, in his own good time, I think it best now to dictate a few dispositions of the little individual possessions which, in the event of my death, might be overlooked." She then mentions what she leaves "to beautify my husband's home, which may God in his mercy relight." Then many gifts to each of her children, and then adds, among other things: "My gold thimble is for my own loved mother, in thankful remembrance of the usefulness she taught me." Before leaving her Clinton home for the last time she wrote to her mother of the last class meeting she ever attended, saying: "It was good to be there. It has done me more good than medicine. Although I am feeble, I felt doubly 'strengthened.'" On the twenty-fifth of June last she left her mother and all her life-long friends, and went to San Antonia, Texas, where she died August 12, 1875. Looking fondly upon the face of her husband, and then upon the pictures of each of her dear children, she said, "I'll die now," and sweetly fell asleep in Jesus, without a groan or a struggle. Her remains were brought to her New Iberia home, and rested upon the same altar where she had often knelt, and where she gave her pure heart to her now stricken husband. From there the Rev. B. F. White, with appropriate services, laid her to rest by the side of her father, to await the resurrection of the just.

A. E. GOODWYN.

DIED, in Ellis county, Texas, September 23, 1875, of bilious intermittent fever, JAMES A. SLATON, aged sixty-four years and four months.

My father was born in Jones county, Ga., and in early manhood removed to Columbus, in that State, where he resided a number of years. Strict attention to business soon conferred on him that respect that few command. His watchfulness and honesty soon secured him the best positions, and gave him a character that was enviable; and often, while I lived in the same city, have incidents of his probity and high sense of honor been related to me by men who are now gray-headed. He always enjoyed the utmost confidence of his employers, and filled the most responsible positions where his limited education allowed. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1838, and in the fall of that year was married to Miss M. A. Watson. Most of the time since he has been an official in the church, either as class-leader, steward or Sunday school superintendent, sometimes filling all three places at the same time. Although in moderate circumstances, I cannot recall a single instance where the preacher left the circuit unpaid while he was steward. If the church did not pay its assessment, he would. He considered the laborer worthy of his hire, and believed the support of the ministry a paramount duty.

He loved class meetings, and often has the Mount Zion church, Tuskegee circuit, Alabama Conference, been prepared for its glorious revivals by the efficient labors of my father and T. M. Pace, its class-leaders. That church was kept in a glow of heavenly fire by those old-fashioned class meetings. He was retired in his nature, but when duty said "Go," he never faltered, relying on that omnipotent Arm for support and direction. He was proverbial for his honesty and uprightness in his dealings with his fellow-man. He lived the life of a Christian from principle and duty. Living such a life, the arch destroyer did not find him unprepared for the great change from life mortal to life immortal. He came to Texas three years ago, impressed with the idea that he would not live long, and all his energy was exerted to its utmost to prepare a home for my mother, where she might be comfortable. To accomplish this he labored too zealously for a man of his years, and his health failed him almost entirely last spring. He was confined to his bed but a few days, yet his suffering was intense a portion of the time. A few days before he died he became inexpressibly happy. His countenance beaming with a heavenly smile, he tried to sing: "I'm going home." In his rejoicing he expressed himself ready and willing to go. "Glory! glory!" "Perfect love," "Glorious hope of immortality," and other like expressions were uttered by him. Almost the last rational word he spoke was after placing his arm around my mother's neck to tell her he was going home. He was unconscious four days—apparently sleeping—and breathed his last without a gasp or struggle.

DIED, September 16, at the residence of his stepfather, Rev. James Bowman, and his loved mother, Mrs. Jane B. Bowman, in Ouachita parish, La., JOSEPH SCOTT DUNN, aged fifteen years, six months and fifteen days. With tho "evening shadows" came this deeply painful news to dear ones far away. They heard and wept that the smile of innocence and health, the deep, pure fountain of young life, and the glad heart of childhood that knew no grief, was gone from earth to dwell with angel ones above. The "bud of promise," the love of many prayers, the hope of declining years, has been snatched from a grief-stricken mother, whose love began "even with his earliest breath"—her loved and cherished one. Death is a fearful thing! "The rich, the poor, the great, the small, are leveled. Death confounds them all." But oh! with what a peculiar tenderness and pain do we think of one taken in the first warm blush of youth, and of the bitter anguish that has come like a "mournful spell" on his doting mother. Her fondest pleasures, hopes and affections centered on her darling, only boy. Alas! no words can tell her grief. Gazing on the still, pale face, she thought of the illusions she had cherished, the anticipations once so bright and fair, and the withering blow seemed but too heavy. "The doom was written, the decree was past," leaving a wound not to be healed. God alone can give comfort to the broken heart. He can cheer us to a brighter shore beyond, to "that perfect rest naught can molest, where golden harps are ringing," where there is "perpetual spring, perpetual youth." May he who dries the mourner's tears give to her, his lone and disconsolate mother, through the remnant of her days, that peace which nothing earthly gives. May he be "her refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble."

JOHN W. MCREYNOLDS was born January 15, 1855, and died September 25, 1875, aged twenty years, eight months and ten days. Being blessed with pious parents, who sowed the seed of piety in his young heart, and impressed him in early life with the importance of doing right, he joined the Methodist Church at eight years of age. Like his blessed Master, "he was subject to his parents," and an obedient child—so much so that he was idolized by the entire family. When he grew old enough to enter society his noble and manly bearing and fascinating manners soon won the respect of all who knew him. His kind and sympathetic heart, which beamed forth in his frank and open countenance, gained for him the confidence and attachment of many friends. Though death came suddenly and unexpectedly, it found him at the post of duty. He and his brother, who were near and dear to each other, were attending a protracted meeting. They often sang together, and their music was charming to the hearer. Just two nights before he died, after returning from church, they had retired and all was still in the house, but not asleep. No; the mother's eyes rarely closed in slumber until the welcome sound of her boys' returning footsteps fell upon her ears. They sang "Come to Jesus." The beautiful and touching words seemed to come from the heart, and the music filled the house, rang out distinctly on the midnight air, and melted the parents' hearts to tears. He then sang "Come to Jesus." Oh, how soon he took his leave of all who were near and dear to him, to go to Jesus. He died with congestion in a few hours after he was taken sick.

GEORGE R. LYNCH.

ON THE twenty-fifth of September, 1875, death again visited the home of Bro. W. T. and S. J. Holland, and tore from their embrace their loved little JOSEPH EUGENE, a bright boy of seven summers. His illness was brief, but was borne with great patience. He was never absent from Sabbath school when well, and always brought up a perfect lesson. The Sabbath before he died, when the roll was called, he rose and repeated the eighth verse of the eighth chapter of Romans: "So, then, they that are in the flesh cannot please God." Before another Sabbath rolled around he was not in the flesh, but his spirit had gone up to praise God, who gave it, with little Johnny and Willie, his two little baby brothers, who outstripped him and went to heaven.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1875.

A STREET IDYL.

Wind-shaken lilies, silver-belled and sweet,
Pearls flosting down the dusty London street;
Embodied dreams—a resurrection bright
Of some foregone, forgotten, lost delight.

Who drew them from their dusky, cool retreat,
Where they could hear the spring's first pulses beat
In deep green woods, or by the silvery gleam
Of some slow-rippling, forest-shadowed stream?

Where are they drifting in that snowy dress?
To make death tender with their loveliness,
Or stir within some weary, death-cold breast
Thoughts which the dull, hard world had laid to rest?

Will they reflect their image clear that lies
In the soft depths of little children's eyes?
Or will those chalices of silver bells
Imprison tears within their fragrant cells?

Oh, myriad-voiced! beneath the summer sky,
To some a song, to some a bitter cry,
Pass to your mission, while I hear the beat
Of angel footsteps flutter from the street.

Ministry of Little Children.

"The Ministry of Little Children" is eloquently set forth in an essay written by Bishop McTyeire many years ago. Many fond hearts will respond to the sentiments expressed:

Some while ago, in a mood for such statistics, our eye fell on the item that in one year the deaths in four Eastern cities amounted to 43,432, and of this number 24,767 were children under five years of age.

The last sentence fixed our attention: 24,767 children perished during the year—we prefer to say, died. This is in four cities only! Of the rest of the 43,432, who can tell their eternal destiny? Some to heaven, some to hell! But of these little ones none can doubt. Taking the aggregate of other cities and villages, and the country at large, we comprehend a fact that finds expression at the Savior's lips—"Of such is the kingdom of God"—and in the sacred couplet:

Millions of infant souls compose
The family above.

The adults worked out their missions, or failed to do it. But these little ones—had they no mission? Was their being a failure? Lived they, and suffered and died, and is the world all the same as though they had not been? Nay, verily. Theirs was a precious ministry, and such as they only could fulfill.

What a waste of life! exclaims the worldly economist as he figures up the statistics of population. They lived in vain, is the thought of the man ambitious of making his mark on the age. Mere blanks, being in vain, flowers that came to no fruit, broken off, fallen, faded, is the thought and feeling of many.

But Christian philosophy presents a more ennobling and comforting view.

How cold and selfish would this world of ours be without these children! They preach the evangel of beauty and innocence; they break the incrustations of worldliness; they touch chords vibrating solemnly, sweetly, reserved only for their tiny hands; they stir in the heart hidden wells of feeling; they preserve human sympathies from utter ossification; they deeply subsoil our hard natures.

Geologists often show us, deep down under the earth's layers, the clear and well-defined print of a frail leaf, or the track of a little bird, made in the dim ages past. These have left imperishable memorials of themselves on the face of a world from which whole species and races and kingdoms have passed away without a record.

The Bible makes many records, minute and kind, of the death of little children. They have their significance. Take the case of David's family. We lose sight of the sickness and suffering and death of the unweaned child in the effects produced upon the royal parent. It is not saying too much that a large proportion of those who are saved will be saved by the ministry of little children.

Summing up the moral results of the year, we must not credit all to orators and press and institutions. These little preachers have visited homes, and softened the hearts of the indwellers, and drawn them heavenward, where other voices have not been heeded.

The strong man, unused to tears, has bowed over the little coffin and wept. Under what sermon was he ever so melted down? What other preacher ever availed to bow that pride of strength and unseal that fountain of tears?

The gay, worldly-minded mother sits silent, and sheds secret tears, and prays; and peradventure, as these two hearts are drawn closer by a common grief, they think of a common tie in heaven, and resolve, through grace, as the babe cannot come to them, that they will go to it.

"When our little boy died," has been the beginning of the pilgrimage of many bereaved parents. "When the baby died" dates impressions on the family circle that have matured to godliness.

The old may outlive their friends; the middle-aged may make enemies who are glad to be rid of them; or, wandering off, die where none lament; but the babe is without prejudice in life, and mighty in death. It is God's messenger of reconciliation, his flag of truce in this world of enmities and envies and wrath and strife. It has strong hold on two hearts, if no more. The empty crib, the half-worn shoe, the soft locks of hair, that few may see, prolong the painful yet pleasing memory of the angel visitor that looked in upon us and smiled, and went to heaven bidding us, amid care and sorrows, to follow on.

There is something so peculiarly affecting in the loss of a child that we sympathize with the parent who said he believed no minister was prepared to bury another's child who had not buried one of his own.

There's many an empty cradle,
There's many a vacant bed,
There's many a lonely bosom,
Whose joy and light are fled;
For thick in every grave-yard
The little hillocks lie,
And every hillock represents
An angel in the sky.

In this way heaven is receiving large contributions from earth. Next to the conversion of a soul, the enemy of God and man may take least pleasure in the death of a child. His snares are all prevented and his prey surely lost.

We bless God for our creation. The opening of a career of immortal existence is in itself a great event—a mission of praise and glory which death cannot frustrate. Though the voice of praise swell as the sound of many waters, and the celestial harpers are numberless, yet his ear detects each new voice and joyful string, and the praise of these little ones glorifieth him. In this view the babe, even of a few days, and sickly—that goeth from the cradle to the grave—is of more intrinsic importance than material worlds.

A Hindoo woman said to a missionary: "Surely your Bible was written by a woman." "Why?" "Because it says so many kind things for women. Our Shastas never refer to us but in reproach." Parents who have watched by the couch of suffering innocence, and seen the desire of their eyes taken away at a stroke, have found themselves busy running over the Scriptures for faith, and gathering up, as a stay for their hearts, what God has said for their little children. How full and precious and unequivocal are the passages of comfort! The conclusion is: Surely the Bible was given by a parent. And so it was. He knows the heart of a parent, and works in it and by it to the glory of his grace. He weaves out of this exquisite material silken cherds that draw mightily. He touches stricken souls with this divine polarity, and then sets the object of affection in the skies.

Oh, prattling tongues, never formed to speech, and now still in death, how eloquently you preach to us! Oh, little pattering feet leading the way, how many, through rude and stormy scenes, are following after you to heaven! We thank God for your ministry; and, if it be in vain, the fault and the loss will be all our own.

Progress in India.

The government report on the census return for India furnishes the Church Missionary Intelligencer with materials for a long and interesting article, from which we take the following on the present condition of Hindooism:

The influence of closer contact with European civilization and learning has been perceptible in a modification of Hindoo religion. Many natives of education have entirely rejected idol worship, and the monstrous teachings of the Puranas and Tantras, and address their supplications to one supreme Being. In Southern India Christianity has found acceptance with upward of half a million of inhabitants, and, as education evokes the intelligence and reasoning powers of the people, there are grounds for supposing that the mass of the Hindoos will awake to a recognition of a higher faith in the Unknown than the debasing ideas which now rule and guide them.

The ages of hero deification is already passing away. The magnificent temples erected in past ages in honor of Siva and Vishnu, or their human personifications, are slowly succumbing to the destroying hands of time. New temples, on a scale of grandeur equal to those of former eras, are unknown. The few buildings of the modern class are mean in structure and design, and mostly dedicated to village deities, whose peculiar claims to the worship of the people are unknown beyond the immediate neighborhood. Already thoughtful Hindoos are beginning to realize the fact that the magnificent endowments of their churches are not so certain of judicious application as in the period when Christian officials were the ex-officio managers of the temple endowments. Under purely Hindoo management the revenues of these endowments are in danger of being frittered away in law suits, and in methods still more objectionable, and probably nine out of ten Hindoos of intelligence would prefer to see the temple properties once more under the guardianship of the officials of the British administration, feeling thereby assured that the accounts of income and expenditure would be subjected to impartial audit, and that the revenues of church lands would not be perverted to uses foreign to the intentions of the founders.

The general decay of Hindoo temples throughout the country is but the visible sign of the waning vitality of the religion itself. Among the classes already influenced by Western ideas, Hindooism is practically dead. Neither Deism nor Christianity have as yet stepped in to fill the void in the religious life of the educated people. History is always repeating itself, and the day is probably not very far distant when a great religious revival—a shaking of the dry bones of Hindooism—shall occur.

Can You Stand Fire?

As I was walking along the Strand one night I came upon a fine, tall soldier. I entered into conversation with him and said: "There is one thing that I cannot understand about the British soldier."

"What is that, sir?"

"Well," I said, "he is bold and daring; you could not insult him more than by calling him a coward. There are men among you who would rush up to the cannon's mouth, even if you knew it would be certain death; and yet there are among you men who dare not kneel down in the barrack-room at night and repeat the prayer their mother taught them when they were children."

He paused and said: "That is true, sir."

"What is the meaning of it, soldier?"

He said: "You remind me of what took place in my own roll a few weeks ago. A young fellow came into our room, and the first night, before going to bed, he knelt down to pray, and instantly there was a disturbance in the room. Caps and belts were flung over at the man, but he did not move. The second night there was a general cry: 'Willie, try it again.' Down he went on his knees again. Caps and belts were thrown again, and the men whistled. The third night he went again on his knees, and again on the fourth night, with the same result, and on the fifth night.

"And then," he said, "the greatest blackguard in the room cried out: 'He is genuine—he stands fire;' and from that night every one in the room respected him, and began to follow his example."

In a large establishment in Birmingham, very similar to what many of you are in, in this town, some seventy years ago, there was a youth who came from his mother's loving home in one of our beautiful villages. He had been taught to "stand fire"—not to be ashamed of God or of prayer.

The first night he retired to rest in a room with several other youths; he knelt down to pray, and, as in the case of the soldier, he was instantly beset by the young fellows in the room, abusing him and ridiculing him, and everything was done to induce him to abstain from prayer; but he "stood fire"—he was not ashamed of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Among them was a strong-built youth, who stood on his right, and who said: "My mother taught me to do that. I have been ashamed of doing it; but I will do it." That youth became the great, the noble John Angell James. Oh, young men, if that youth had not stood fire the world might never have known or been blessed by the labors of John Angell James.

The soldier told me what I want to leave with you. He said: "Sir, as a rule, the fresh fellows who kneel down to pray do not do it a second night." Ah, young men, may that never be said of you! That explains the meaning of those words: "He stands fire." Do not be ashamed to acknowledge your Lord and Master. English Paper.

HUMILIATING TRUTH.—Dr. Jas. Freeman Clarke, of Boston, has uttered some clear, humiliating truths in the following: "Young people grow up in all our churches who have no opinions of any kind concerning God, Christ, sin, salvation, the foundation of morals, the grounds of belief in the Creator, in duty or in immortality. Instead of being educated by doctrine they are fed on sentiment. Instead of truth they get love. The consequence is they drift easily into any church, creed or opinion which happens to attract them. They easily become Roman Catholics or Free Religionists, as accident determines. If they meet a Jesuit they joyfully accept the Pope. If they encounter a disciple of Huxley or Spencer, with equal contentment they reject God. And all this in the interest of liberality and toleration? But know this: that it is impossible to tolerate the opinions of others until you have some of your own. You cannot be charitable to those who differ with you unless you first differ with them. What sort of toleration does the ship floating in the stream exercise toward the current which sweeps it along? I have heard the story of a young lady brought up in one of our Unitarian parishes in Boston, which seems to be somewhat characteristic. She was visiting some poor Irish families to help them, and she encountered their priest. 'You must not think,' said she, 'that I wish to convert them to my opinions.' 'What are your opinions?' asked the Roman Catholic. Then it appeared that she had none. But he had; so in a short time he had converted her to his views, and she has remained a Roman Catholic ever since."

DEMONIACAL POSSESSIONS.—A favorite scoff against religion has been founded on the instances, recorded in the gospels, of persons who were possessed with demons. Perhaps two items of news published recently may throw some light on the demoniacal possessions on which infidels have long exercised their wits. Jessie H. Pomeroy, the Boston boy who recently murdered two children without any motive, is thus described: "Ordinarily he is mild, easily managed, affectionate, winning the regard of those near him, even the love of the little children that at any moment may become the victims of his awful passion. At the reform school he made no trouble, but early secured general confidence, was noted for obedience and good conduct, and won his discharge from the trustees by his unexceptionable behavior." Yet he does not share in the general horror which his recent deed inspired; and he thinks that he could not have helped the butcheries—the impulse came upon him suddenly and irresistibly. Another case is that of the girl in New York who felt a strong impulse to burn the infant she was nursing. Fortunately, she confessed the desire before she fulfilled it. These are two of the latest startling items of news. Do they not look as if the devil had more power over human nature than he is ordinarily credited with, as if there was a real truth behind the legal phrase: "Incited by the devil, and not having the fear of God before his eyes?" In view of them, can we say that demoniacal possessions are impossible?—Christian Observer.

KINKS.—A kink is a spontaneous twist in a thread, and a constitutional whimsicality in a man. A thread kink has all the effect of a knot in a thread, interfering with the work of the seamstress. A man kink so twistifies him, and knots him up, that the pastor can't use him, and society don't know what to do with him. A thread kink is a great annoyance when it occurs too often. A man kink, a whim, a crotchet, annoys a pastor, wearies and disgusts a church and interferes with her work. A kinky church member never agrees with his brother members, always has a word of advice for his pastor, is always trying to carry a point, is happy only when he can gratify a notion, give his "views," or force a disagreeable alternative upon his "dear brethren," and all for the "glory of God." Brethren, pray to be delivered from kinks.—Baptist Union.

Religious Intelligence.

—The death of Bishop George A. Smith, next in rank to Brigham Young among the Mormon chiefs, was announced last week.

—The revisers of the English Bible have proceeded as far as Isaiah lii, 7 in the Old Testament, and to the middle of First Corinthians in the New.

—The Archbishop of Canterbury has recommended the Episcopalians throughout the world to observe November 30 as a day of prayer for missions.

—The Baptist Missionary Union closed its last financial year in April with a debt of $25,956, and a reduction of nearly that amount has been made in the appropriations for this year.

—The French Protestant mission among the Basutos has been so greatly prospered that it has now not only its church organization, its conferences, schools and native pastors, but also its missionaries to the neighboring tribes.

—The Paris Univers publishes a letter from the Pope to the Archbishop of Naples, Cardinal Riario Sforza, in which the National Italian Church, with Mr. Panell at its head, is solemnly condemned and anathematized.

—According to the East India Catholic Directory there are at present 1,210,671 Catholics in India. This is an increase of 220,215 during the past eleven years. In Goa or Portuguese India there are 245,388 Catholics, with 522 priests.

—Rev. Mr. Spurgeon has received the £10,000 bequeathed by Mr. Matthews—£5,000 for the college and £5,000 for the orphanage. A number of new students have been admitted to the college, and the work of the orphanage will also be doubtless strengthened.

—There are 30 American male and female missionaries in Syria, with 102 native assistants, 9 churches with 486 members, 47 preaching stations with average congregations of 2,155, 34 Sunday schools with 1,090 scholars, 61 common schools with 2,163 scholars, 3 high schools with 93 scholars, and a college, fully equipped, with 68 students.

—The Reformed Episcopal Church is rapidly gaining ground among the negroes of the South. In South Carolina 6 congregations have been organized—all in a small territory—having an aggregate of 539 members. These churches are all under the charge of the Rev. P. F. Stevens, who left 2 white parishes for the purpose.

—The Methodist Board of Publication, Pittsburg, has published in excellent style the proceedings of the late Methodist (Protestant) General Conference at Princeton, Ill. From the statistical table we find that there are in the church 775 traveling and 507 unordained ministers and preachers, 53,400 members, 1,783 probationers and 667 churches.

—The French Canadian mission has been in operation thirty-six years, and has trained at least 2,000 ministers, of whom 20 have become ministers, 67 teachers and 40 colporteurs. Its success has been so great that it has been necessary to establish a church of French pastors. This church, now eight months old, has 10 congregations, 20 mission stations and 2,000 adherents. It is called the French Evangelical Church of Canada.

—The Rev. Dr. Bronson, of the Baptist Assam mission, recently started a station in a village where he was encouraged to begin by ten influential young men, who declared to their heathen fathers their determination at all hazards to have a school, and learn for themselves what is true and what is false. Two of them have already made profession of the Christian religion, and fifteen others have renounced idol worship and heathen rites.

—The foreign mission cause requires to be extended in two directions—among the heathen, for their conversion, and among Christians at home, for a deeper interest in the evangelization of the heathen. We are inclined to believe that the work abroad is progressing more rapidly than the interest at home. Liberal as the Methodist Episcopal Church is, we stated a short time ago, on the authority of the Missionary Advocate, that the contribution for missions averaged but 43¼ cents per member of that church. This includes home and foreign missions, and the latter receive considerably less than half of the whole sum raised. In the Baptist Church the average is still smaller. It was stated in a recent number of the Independent that a majority of the last senior class at the New Brunswick (Reformed) Theological Seminary had offered themselves for the foreign field, but were not accepted, on account of a lack of funds. The Presbyterian Church is rather ahead of the other denominations in the average contribution per member to foreign missions; but a recent outspoken article in the Foreign Missionary shows how far the missionary interest is from being a general one, even in that denomination. Of the 5,000 churches connected with the Presbyterian body only 2,746 contributed anything to the Foreign Mission Board. Of these 2,746 churches 238 gave scarcely anything to the cause except through their Sabbath schools. Important churches in large cities give nothing at all. Other large churches give a trifle, apparently from some individual member. Whole presbyteries are represented by a mere pittance of contribution. It is interesting to notice that the Presbyterians of New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey, who form about one-half the church, give $195,595 of the $261,387 contributed to the board directly from churches in 1874. If this is the true state of affairs in the denomination which gives most largely to foreign missions, we may rightly hold that there will be no very great extension of the work until there has been a very considerable increase of interest at home.—Independent.

THE SAND MAN.

Two little boots I've on my feet,
With little soles so soft and neat;
With a little sack on my back I skip;
Ah, look now! up the steps I trip;
And when I enter the chamber, there
The children are saying their evening prayer.

Two little grains of very fine sand
I fling in their eyes with my gentle hand;
Then they go to sleep, and they sleep all night,
Safe in the watchful Father's sight.

Two little grains of very fine sand
I strew in their eyes with my gentle hand,
And very short the night shall seem
To the good little child in his happy dream.

Now swiftly, softly, with staff and sack,
Down stairs again I most hurry back!
I cannot idle my time away—
I've many more children to see to-day:
They're nodding now; in their dreams they smile,
And yet I've scarce opened my bag the while.

Grandpa Goodale Stories.—No. 16.

A BEE HUNT CONTINUED, OR PORPOISE TOM, OR HOW PORPOISE TOM CAME TO THRASH THE MAN AT BLUE HILL, OR PORPOISE TOM'S OLD AUNT'S STORY ABOUT PORPOISE TOM'S MOTHER.

MY DEAR CHILDREN: I believe we were, when we left off, in that part of Porpoise Tom's story where Porpoise Tom's Aunt Molly was telling about Porpoise Tom's mother's opening her eyes. Isn't that so?

"Yes, grandpa," says Harry, "and she said they were such pretty eyes."

Yes, that is true; but we must let Tom tell his own story.

"But," says Harry, "it's Tom's aunt telling this story, isn't it, grandpa?"

I'm rather inclined to think it's Porpoise Tom telling a story that his aunt told him. What do you think, Tom?

"I think," says Tom, "that it is Grandpa Goodale telling a story that Porpoise Tom told about a story that Porpoise Tom's aunt told him."

Yes, I believe that is so. Let me see—I started to tell "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest," and thought I would tell you first about a bee hunt I had once in South America with Porpoise Tom; and then you see I had to tell you how he came to be called Porpoise Tom, instead of Tom Sinkle; and as it was on account of a yarn he told once, I had to tell the yarn; and so it is that we are in the middle of so many stories at once. They are all part of "The Bee Hunt," and closely connected to "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest."

Well, to go on. Porpoise Tom's Aunt Molly, continued as follows—or was it Tom that continued as follows? It's getting terribly mixed. Let me try again.

Porpoise Tom said that his Aunt Molly said.—No, that don't sound right. Porpoise Tom said that his Aunt Molly continued as follows after she had taken the fat off from the fire:

"We had all been so busy in trying to bring the little girl to, and so anxious like about her, that our hearts had been way up in our throats, and we could scarcely speak, any of us; but when she opened her eyes, and looked up at us out of the deep eyelashes that were black as coal, and looked from one to another sort o' scared like, as though she was hunting for something, we all broke clean down, and every one of us began to cry.

"'Poor little thing,' said my father; 'who knows but she's looking for her mamma, who may be drowned long since, or dashed against those sharp rocks.' But mother made a sign to him to hush, so as not to hurt the poor child's feelings; but she didn't seem to notice any, but kept calling 'Mamma, mamma,' all the time, and we soon found that she was unable to comprehend anything we said to her; for her 'mamma,' though nearly the same in sound as ours, was French.

"My father carried the little girl in his arms back to the cove, and laid her down gently on a bed which we had made by spreading a blanket over a heap of sea weed, and she soon sank into a sound sleep, she was so beat out, I suppose; while he went back to the point to see if he could be of any use in saving others. I staid with mother and the little girl, while your father, Tom, went with our father to the point.

"Mother and I couldn't sleep any more that night, we were so anxious, and everything was so strange like. Mother took the little girl up, and took off all her wet clothes, and wrapped her in a dry blanket, and put her back on the sea weed, and she didn't wake up once all night, though she did turn over once or twice, and mutter in her sleep something in which all we could make out was 'mamma.' My mother told me that she looked like she belonged to rich people, for her clothes were made of rich stuff, and were fastened with a gold pin that had a bright stone of some sort set in it.

"In the morning father came back with a rich-looking cloak, which he had found entangled in the ropes on the spar the child had been lashed to, and which father said he supposed the child's mother must have wrapped her in to try to save her life, even at the cost of her own. We searched the cloak very carefully to try to find some clew to who the unfortunate people were, but could find nothing but a lady's handkerchief, with the initials 'E. G.' carefully worked in the corner in raised letters. Mother then searched the child's clothes all over for a name; and, sure enough, on some of the underclothing were written in ink the letters 'F. G.' This was all we could find.

"The sea ran so high that day that we did not try to go home. Besides, father wanted to stay to help save what he could from the wreck, and lay out the bodies for burial as they were washed ashore. Several boats came over from the main to help, and before night seven bodies had been washed ashore, which were placed up high on the beach, all in a row—six men, all sailors, and one woman—a handsome, frail-like creature, with long black hair, and white skin, as delicate as a fleecy cloud, who my father said he was right certain was the mother of our little black-eyed girl.

"'You mustn't think,' said Porpoise Tom to us, throwing away the tobacco he had been chewing and taking in a fresh supply, 'you mustn't think that all the time my Aunt Molly had been telling this story she had been just standing still talking. That wasn't her style by a long shot. She had made no ends of biscuits and doughnuts and pies, and just kept on working and talking, and talking and working, as though they both helped each other, as I believe they really do with some folks, and every now and then she would stop and flourish her rolling pin or spoon, which ever it happened to be, in the air whenever she wanted to come out right strong on anything.'

"So father came to the cove and asked mother hadn't he better take the little girl to the dead woman and see if she would know her; but mother, who was afeared of distressing the little crater, said no, she would go and look at her clothes and see what she could find. So mother went and found that the lady's clothes, which were the finest she ever saw, were marked all of them either 'E. G.' or Eugenie Gerondin, and the handwriting was just the same as that on the little girl's clothes. So we were right certain that this was our little girl's mother, and that the family name was Gerondin; but what the little girl's first name was we didn't know, except that it began with F.

"The next day the little thing seemed right well, and had quit crying for her mamma, and father said that he would take her home with us, and take the body of her mother home too, so as to bury it in a Christian manner in the grave-yard.

"All this was done, Tom. I need not tell you how, but in some way, while the body of the mother was laying out in the front room, waiting for a coffin to be made, the little girl got into the room and saw her lying there so stiff and cold. I was in the room at the time, Tom, but was looking the other way, and I just heard the little thing scream 'Mamma, mamma,' and looked round just in time to see her frightened, puzzled look as she threw herself on her and found how cold and stiff she was.

"After she was buried mother showed us a roll of papers, all stitched together, she had found wrapped up in a piece of oiled silk in one of the pockets of the lady's dress; but none of us could read it, for it was all written in French. We took it to a French lady who lived upon the hill yonder, and she did something to it—translated it, I think they called it. Anyhow, she got it into English, and here it is, Tom. I have kept it for you ever since." "So my Aunt Molly went to an old secretary and took out of a side drawer

"MY GRANDMOTHER'S STORY,"

which Porpoise Tom's aunt read to Porpoise Tom, and Porpoise Tom went on to tell to us, and I will tell to you next time; but now good-night and pleasant dreams. You may even dream about Porpoise Tom or

GRANDPA GOODALE.

IT IS related that an Indian once brought up a young lion, and, finding him weak and harmless, never attempted to control him. Every day the lion gained in strength and became more difficult to manage. At last, when excited by rage, he fell upon the Indian and tore him to pieces. It is thus with evil habits and bad passions. They are like this lion—they will cause us much vexation in after life, and may perhaps destroy us. Youth, remember and beware.

A MAIDEN went out in early morn to gather flowers, and she said: "These are only buds, and I will not gather them till the sun has opened their petals." At noon she went into the garden and found those same buds all wilted in the sun. She deplored her folly, and the next day gathered her nosegay early. Thus God often calls his loveliest children home ere they are blighted by sin and sorrow.

The Morning.

Doctors are not agreed about the hygienic effects of early rising. It used to be regarded as eminently wholesome, and all the children of a half century ago were familiar with those sage and impressive lines:

Early to bed and early to rise
Make a man healthy, wealthy and wise.

The popular voice, we fear, will go against the old-time notion, as the world seems naturally to take to its morning nap. The elder Pitt admonished his son to write it upon the walls of his room and upon the curtains of his couch, that nothing great in life can be accomplished without early rising. That boy certainly became great and celebrated. Perhaps he got up betimes.

Modern ways and fashions keep people up half the night, and, while this is so, there must be late sleeping to make up for it. The system needs a stated amount of "tired nature's sweet restorer," and if it cannot be had at one end of the night it must be taken at the other. The better way would be to retire soon, and then we could wake to some purpose with the dawn. Late hours sow the seeds of many diseases, and lead to that breaking down of the nervous system which is so common in these days. There is dissipation in business, in pleasure and social gatherings, and also in religious meetings. The world is set in this way now, society has established the usage, and owing to the conditions of business, and the general demands upon our daylight hours, it is almost impossible to hold even a prayer meeting without continuing far into the night.

We judge that in ancient times the tendency was to sleep too much. Solomon in his wisdom warns: "Love not sleep, lest thou come to poverty; open thine eyes, and thou shalt be satisfied with bread." In his day it was doubtless common for some others than growing boys to oversleep themselves. It was an unthrifty habit, and to be condemned. The sleeper was a man void of understanding. The vineyard, with its thorns, nettles and dilapidated walls, id not of strong drink, inordinate love of pleasure and the gaming table, but of sheer sleepiness. Things were going to rack while the proprietor was taking his ease and indulging in a perpetual siesta. "Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep." Wisdom warns and expostulates with him who is given to such extravagant and inveterate somnolency: "How long wilt thou sleep, O sluggard? When wilt thou arise out of thy sleep?" It is different now, as some argue. In this progressive, busy age—this era of steam and lightning, and all sorts of expresses—there is much talk of overwork and of inability to sleep. Insomnia is the trouble now, and the prophets, instead of exclaiming: How long wilt thou sleep? are impatiently demanding: Why don't you go to sleep? Chloral, valerian, opiates, are the needed specifics. The very babies must have soothing sirups. Were there any Mrs. Winslows in the times when Solomon uttered his maxims? We verily believe that the cure of the legion of neurotic disorders now rampant in the world may be found in the simple but long-neglected formula:

Early to bed and early to rise.

There is more sedative power and more tonic effect in this than in all the doctors' stuffs extant. It is the order of nature and the divine law.

The present generation is in danger of losing altogether the moral, esthetic and physical benefits of the morning. The blessings of the day-spring are pretty much given up to the birds and flowers, while human beings close their senses to its beauties. The elder poets dwelt much upon the morning, but who knows or cares now about

The breezy call of incense-breathing morn?

Thomson is said to have written the Seasons in bed, "The Castle of Indolence" may have been incubrated in the interlude of his morning dreams, but such a passage as this indicates that he was sometimes abroad at an early hour:

With quickened step
Brown night retires, young day pours in apace
And opens all the lawny prospect wide.
The dripping rock, the mountain's misty top,
Swell on the sight, and brighten with the dawn.

If Milton rightly describes the habits of the unfallen pair, early rising was the order in Eden. Adam thus reminds his spouse, the beauteous Eve:

To-morrow, ere fresh morning streak the east,
With first approach of light we must be risen
And at our pleasant labor.

Our modern housewives may object that Eve's domestic toils and tribulations were few, and that it was just like Adam, and all of his sons since, to volunteer such advice. Besides, it is only a poet's conjecture that Adam ever said it.

But what shall we say concerning that inspired portraiture of the model wife, that virtuous woman whose price is far above rubies? "She riseth also while it is yet night, and giveth meat to her household and a portion to her maidens." Such patterns of excellence were doubtless scarce even in the palmy days of the kingdom of Israel; for the question is significant in the connection: "Who can find a virtuous woman?" More easily found now than then. "The lost cause" and its present sequel of struggle and suffering are illuminated and made glorious by the courage, industry and energy of our Southern women. But this homily is not for them. Languid misses who give the night to novels and balls, and misguided matrons who live more for society and fashion than to help their husbands, need to be reminded that morning air and exercise are the things which contribute to beauty, health and virtue. For all—for men, women and children—early sleeping and early rising are best. The morning hours are most favorable for study, for work and for devotion.

It is the time especially for important duties. Abraham, in his zeal to obey the command, rose up early in the morning and started for the land of Moriah. Moses rose up early in the morning and built an altar. The manna was gathered early in the morning. There was the morning sacrifice under the law, and the divine mercies are described as new every morning. The Master sometimes prayed all night, but his usual habit is probably noted where it is said: "And in the morning, rising up a great while before day, he went out and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed." It is the time for the beginning of great and trying duties, for altar-building and worship, for the gathering of the spiritual manna, and for quiet and uninterrupted prayer. How one hour, before the work and turmoil of day begin, given to the Scriptures and prayer would brace and prepare the soul for all that awaits it! Who can awake to the freshness and music of a Sabbath morning in the early spring and not think of the rising Savior? It was the fitting hour to awake from death, and for the sun of righteousness to burst upon the world.

Inspired poetry abounds with images and illustrations drawn from the morning. The Holy Spirit seizes upon these forms of the sublime and the beautiful, and wields them with an inimitable grace. The morning has wings, it is invested with golden plumage, and its first beams are as pinions of light. God's gracious manifestations are as the morning spread upon the mountains, and his going forth is prepared as the morning. The church in her power and glory and purity "looketh forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners." The promise to the righteous is that their light shall break forth as the morning. And all these earthly dawns are the lavish types and prophecies of the ushering in of "that day." They tell us of the resurrection and the heavenly day, and admonish us to "seek him that maketh the seven stars and Orion, and turneth the shadow of death into the morning."

The Song and the Chorus.

BY C. K. MARSHALL, D. D.

Some new songs sung at our late meetings have greatly charmed and cheered me. But of the songs I will not now speak. I wish to say a few words respecting two or three choruses in very general use, and to the use of which, as I have heard them sung, I seriously object. One of them has these lines in it:

"Will the waters be chilly
When I am called to die?"

I object to the use of the word chilly. It has in it a ring of criticism on the quantity and quality of the sufferings we may be called to endure in the "article of death." It sounds as if St. Paul, when told he was to be beheaded, had plaintively asked: "Will it hurt?" Or St. John, when told he was to be thrust into a caldron of oil, had exclaimed: "Hot or cold?" Washington once led his men through a freezing stream. But listen to the feminine—no, excuse me, infantine—cry: "Is the water 'chilly?'" of the rank and file—if faint-hearted enough to utter such an inquiry.

How unlike the heroic man of God! How daily experience among the ascending saints from Israel's womanhood ignores it. Even children pass the stream regardless of its thermal condition.

What did the psalmist care whether the valley were dark or deep, or rugged or "chilly?" Hear him sing: "I will fear no evil, for thou art with me. Thy rod and thy staff, they comfort me."

And what an anthem of joy and victory was that chanted by St. Paul: "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all that love his appearing."

No matter whether the ax be sharp or dull, warm or "chilly," whether it hurts or soothes—those are trivialities that are of minor importance, even in the family of vulgar fractions. "Chilly," indeed! When the waters were just touching the lips of John Wesley, and rising higher, he never referred to the thermometer or the temperature, but exclaimed: "The best of all is, God is with us."

Now if that chorus could be so amended as to read: "Will the Savior be with me?" it seems to me it would teach a better lesson, and more truly minister to the comfort of the soul.

The next chorus I wish to sample reads thus:

"Jesus paid it all—
All the debt I owe;
Sin had left a crimson stain;
He washed me white as snow."

Methodism does not indorse the theology of the first and second lines. There be thousands, and I often meet some of them, who flatter themselves with the silly conceit that "Jesus paid it all" in such a sense that their past sins have all been forgiven, and all present and future transgressions have been so covered, paid out, and paid for or pardoned in advance, that, do what they may, no charge can ever lie against them. If hell is not in that cup of nostrums I don't know where a poor, misguided dupe of a corrupt and materialized skepticism could find it. They can sing "All the debt I owe," and feel that it contains a sort of spiritual chloroform that lulls them to slumber, and makes the very conscience drunk.

And yet in a most essential sense Jesus did pay it all. He made a full atonement. "After he had offered one sacrifice for sins forever, sat down on the right hand of God."

"His blood atoned for all our race,
And sprinkles now the throne of grace."

Still the multitudes singing are in danger of misapprehending the sense intended; and for the lack of the "form of sound words" may carelessly sing words that merely sound, until they convey a false lesson, erroneous doctrine and a destructive impression.

Hence I would greatly prefer that this chorus should read thus:

"Jesus paid it all;
All to him I owe."

Everybody can say or sing that. That is true. No shadow rests on that form of expression. If I am correct, let us adopt and use that mode of singing it.

But there is more of it. The chorus goes on to say: "He washed me white as snow." How many can sing that truthfully? Has he washed you "white as snow?" Would God I were so washed. He can do it. Hear Isaiah (first chapter:) "Come, now, let us reason together, saith the Lord; though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow." Yea, more—he can blanch beyond snow whiteness. The psalmist appeals to the great Purifier: "Wash me and I shall be whiter than snow."—Psalms 51, vii. And there hastens on a day when in our Father's house we shall all sing: "Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, * * * to him be glory and dominion forever and ever. Amen."

But I think even a Wesley would hesitate to sing our chorus. At any rate, he sung similar strains in a different tense, with equal faith. Take hymn 494:

"Wash me, and make me thus thine own;
Wash me, and mine thou art:
Wash me, but not my feet alone—
My hands, my head, my heart."

And the symphonious Watts sings:

"Thy blood can make me white as snow;
No Jewish types could cleanse me so."

Therefore he pours out his heart's earnest purpose thus:

"To the bless'd fountain of thy blood,
Incarnate God, I fly;
Here let me wash my spotted soul
From crimes of deepest dye."

Now observe I do not say we may not "go on to perfection," as apostolically enjoined to do, but, as few have "already attained, either were already perfect," I question the propriety of our putting words into the mouths of promiscuous multitudes which they cannot truthfully utter. There is but one congregation that can sing:

"He washed me white as snow."

Now let us put the suggested amendments together:

"Jesus paid it all;
All to him I owe;
Sin had left a crimson stain;
He washes white as snow."

What think you? Is it not nearer the general experience? Does it not equally glorify "the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world?"

Fraternity Among the Presbyterians.

The Presbyterians North and South have had this question under discussion for some time. With them, as with us, the definite point is the establishment of official intercourse or fraternal correspondence between the representative bodies of the two churches. The bar to such intercourse is reduced to two grounds by the Southern General Assembly: "Unjust and injurious accusations preferred against the Southern Presbyterian Church, and the course pursued in regard to church property." In the final conference between the representatives of the two churches at Baltimore, last year, the property question seems not to have been reached, and the discussion was broken off on the refusal of the Northern commissioners to meet the demands of their Southern brethren in reference to the unjust and injurious accusations. In a correspondence between Rev. Dr. H. A. Nelson, of Geneva, N. Y., and Rev. Dr. B. M. Palmer, of New Orleans, published in the Southwestern Presbyterian, we find a pretty full and free exhibit of the matter in dispute. From one letter of Dr. Palmer we make an extended extract, as showing how the matter stands between the two great Presbyterian bodies, and as containing much that is suggestive to ourselves in reference to the fraternity discussion.

But let all this pass, that I may come without further delay to the inquiry of your letter. I take the liberty of inclosing to you a copy of the proceedings of the Baltimore conference, in pamphlet form, for convenience of reference to the passages which I shall indicate. Upon turning to page 32 you will find a statement by our committee as to the political utterances of your Assembly, to the effect that these "constitute a most weighty grievance to us," and "also a serious hinderance to establishing fraternal relations," etc. But upon turning to page 64 you will discover that this difficulty was raised for the express purpose of being waived; and upon turning back to page 24 you find the points "which have debarred the Southern Assembly from holding official intercourse with the Assembly North" reduced to two: "Unjust and injurious accusations preferred against the Southern Presbyterian Church, and the course pursued in regard to church property."

The case lies within a nutshell. Your political differences are declared to be a grievance, because they were directed against us; and a hinderance to fellowship, because in our judgment a church court was incompetent to make them, and a Presbyterian Assembly was positively inhibited by its written constitution from doing so. Being put in providential relations with all this action of your body, we are obliged to consider how far an official correspondence will weaken the testimony we feel constrained to bear in favor of the non-secular and non-political character of the church and kingdom of our Master. Some of us have been a good deal troubled with this difficulty. But in the Baltimore conference it was concluded to waive it entirely, upon the ground that simple correspondence does not imply indorsement of the opinions held by those with whom we are in communion. It is acknowledged by your committee (see page 43) that this political action on the part of your Assembly would be a bar to organic union; and with this our committee (page 63) fully agree, maintaining that, "as they seem immovable, they present an insuperable obstacle" to union. They add, on page 64: "We have not said that we refuse fraternal relations for these causes, or that they are an insuperable obstacle," but only that "they constitute a serious hinderance." How they constitute this hinderance I have just explained; but the above language plainly shows that, great as the hinderance may be, it is dropped out of the count, and the points of settlement are reduced to only two, as before stated. Thus we leave to you all your political utterances untouched, but under protest. You alone are responsible for them, and you may bind them to you as a crown of glory to the end of time, so far as we are concerned. We have expressly waived them as touching this matter of fraternal correspondence, and only insist that the charges affecting our Christian integrity as a church shall be withdrawn. (I say nothing about the property question, as this was never reached in the conference between the two committees.)

The accusations of which we complain are all specified in this pamphlet sent you (pages 25-34,) and they are very heavy, being no less than of "immorality and sin," "heresy," "schism" and "blasphemy." Yet, heavy as they are, what is it that our committee, in the Baltimore conference, ask? "We desire that the imputations which we conceive to be resting upon our church, by the acts of your Assembly, should be removed—we care not in what terms, so they directly and fairly cover the case" (page 38.) Still more explicitly, on page 70: "If your Assembly could see its way clear to say, in a few plain words, to this effect: that these obnoxious things were said and done in times of great excitement; that they are to be regretted; and that now, in a calm review, the imputations cast upon the Southern Church are disapproved—this would end the difficulty at once." Could anything be more moderate, or be more modestly propounded? Observe, too, in this connection, that we have never approached you with even this demand. You summoned us to conference with you, after repeated failures to effect reconciliation, to ask the question what would satisfy us; and that is the answer we returned to your inquiry. It was not thrust upon you as an original demand of ours; but it was a plain, simple, modest, truthful reply to your own interrogation of us. And there, it seems to me, the matter must rest until your body can feel free to remove the aspersions which, because they affect our integrity and honor, disable us from official intercourse with it.

What, now, is the reply to all this? Your committee, at Baltimore, remind us of the famous Concurrent Declaration, adopted in 1869, by the two wings of your now united church; of its reaffirmation, in 1870, with special application of it to our case; of the generous resolutions passed by the Assembly of 1873, fully indorsing our orthodoxy, piety and the like; and tho still more expanded exposition of your position and principles, in 1874, in response to what is known as the Brookes memorial; and the question is asked: In all conscience is not this cumulative testimony sufficient to convince you that we charge you with nothing? A few words will be necessary, if you desire to know how all this matter is regarded by us.

In the first place, it is unfortunate that you ever approached us with the Concurrent Declaration; and still more, that every action you have subsequently taken has been professedly, and in a most pronounced way, based upon it; so much so that when that declaration, as a basis, is stricken away, all your complimentary resolutions fall to the ground with it. Now that declaration was originally only a short method of disposing of certain obstacles in the way of fusing together the two parts of your now existing church. It does not bear upon its face, nor is there any historical trace that it ever had originally any reference to us. It has always, therefore, seemed meaningless when used by way of accommodation to the settlement of our grievances. You will pardon my employment of a word which you must not appropriate in its offensive sense, since it is used simply to express definitely my meaning. It always appeared to us disingenuous, because an indirection—a method of getting round the difficulty with us, instead of openly meeting it—an invitation to come into your house through a hole in the wall, rather than through an open door. I beg you to feel that I write this with reluctance, and with no desire to give pain; but only to put you in exact possession of our view of that proposition.

Then, secondly, that Concurrent Declaration, by its own terms, defeats itself in its application to our case. Old and New School Assemblies were both equally denunciatory of us; and you are in the singular position of annulling and making void through an instrument which, by its express terms, makes it fast and binding forever. But, you will say, the New School, claiming no jurisdiction over you, passed no acts or decrees. Precisely. And this brings me to the third and conclusive objection to your proposed basis of reconciliation. The terms "null and void" are well-understood legislative terms, proclaiming the repeal of what is in force. They have no application to anything but acts and decrees. It is a solecism to apply them to aspersions upon character. A calumny can be annulled only by open retraction, with regret that it was in the first instance uttered. By the force of the Concurrent Declaration you can constructively annul the obnoxious decrees of 1865, by which our people were excluded from participation in ordinances in your churches; but you cannot in this way make void the imputations which were cast upon our integrity. As to the legislation, we are comparatively indifferent; as to the defamation, we are sensitive, especially if we are called upon to allow, even in the faintest manner, that we ever deserved it.

But it is asked on your side: Even if the Concurrent Declarations be inadequate, do not the favorable resolutions which we have repeatedly passed cover the whole difficulty? To this I reply: By the statement of your own committee, these resolutions touch only the present status of our church, and your whole difficulty in accepting our moderate proposal is that you do not mean those resolutions to touch the past. On page 72 of the pamphlet you may read their language: "That in so far as they, or any of them, can be supposed to import any injurious imputations upon the present character and standing of the churches and members of the Southern Assembly as Christians or Presbyterians, such an application of them would be unjust to you and regretted by us." I leave you to interpret this passage for yourself. And now, my dear brother, we are brought to the exact pinch of the difficulty. You say: We bring no accusations against your present character and standing. We answer: You brought them against us a few years ago. Yes, you reply, but they were true of you then. But, we ask, why are they not true of us now? Because, is the response, your circumstances are so changed that you cannot repeat the offenses now. But, we rejoin, our principles are unchanged. We are in heart just the same as when you denounced us. Is it not clear, then, that we cannot accept a reconciliation upon the basis of this discrimination, without being untruthful before God? Surely, if we originated in schism, we are schismatics still, as long as we persist in it. If we were heretical on the subject of slavery, we are heretics still, as long as we hold the same views. If we blasphemed once, the sin remains upon us until it is sincerely repented of and confessed. Now I solemnly declare to you, in the presence of the whole world, that just what we were from 1860 to 1865, we have also been from 1865 to 1875, and shall continue to be until we go to the judgment. What becomes, then, of your committee's discrimination between the past and present? If a man should swindle the government of a million, and be lifted by this wealth above temptation to steal in future, does he not continue to be a thief until he makes restitution? Would you undertake to say to that man: Sir, you stole once, but "any injurious imputations upon your present character and standing would be unjust to you, and would be disapproved and regretted by us." It seems to me, Dr. Nelson, that your committee, in Baltimore, placed your church in an awkward dilemma; so that you are now obliged, in justice to yourselves, either to wipe out these aspersions altogether, or else to cancel all your commendatory resolutions, and place us again under the ban.

We have no desire to dictate to your body. Indeed we have never opened our lips on this whole subject, except at your instance. Whatever you do must be done under the suggestions of your own wisdom. If you cannot in conscience remove these imputations upon our integrity in the past, there is an end of the matter. Let us agree to be as we are, without any further agitation of the subject, which only sets us wider apart. The universal desire on our side is to hold ecclesiastical fellowship with you as a co-ordinate branch of the great Presbyterian family, if it can be had upon terms that are consistent with truth and with honor. But, not having created the obstacles that are in the way, we are powerless to remove them. That remains exclusively with you. All that we can do is to meet you in the spirit of fairness, and, as we have already done, to reduce our demands to the minimum.

Take Heed.

We are still in almost daily receipt of marriage notices, obituaries and other communications without the name and address of the writers. Sometimes they are sent to the publisher in connection with business letters, and when they reach the editor the names cannot be ascertained. Obituaries, marriage notices and all communications for the columns of the ADVOCATE must be directed to the editor, not to the publisher, and if name and address are not furnished the communications will be consigned to the waste basket. The name may not be published, but the editor must have name and postoffice.

A word especially about obituaries. Of infants we publish only the announcement of death, time, place and name of parents. It is needless to send with them poetry, exhortations and homilies of consolation. In regard to children who have reached an age of conscious experience, and have borne their testimony for Christ, it is meet that more should be said. The notices of these and also of adult Christians should, however, be short. There is much complaint that so much space is given to them. We abbreviate many, and after we have cut out perhaps a third, still it is too long. The preachers, who write the most of the obituaries, can help us in this thing. Do not sermonize, do not exhort, do not apply the dispensation to the bereaved. This can all be done orally and in personal intercourse. Then do not attempt to tell all about the deceased. A few facts and traits and characteristics will do. There is, of course, a difference growing out of character and circumstances. Some biographies are edifying and entertaining more than others, but we are apt to overestimate. The average obituary should not be more than fifteen lines; from ten to thirty lines are usually enough for the very best of people.

A PROTRACTED MEETING of two weeks' duration at the Moreau Street church of this city closed on Friday night, October 15. The pastor, Rev. J. T. Sawyer, reports twenty conversions and eight accessions. A good and profitable meeting.

THE missionary ship John Wesley has recently started from the Friendly and Fiji Islands with missionaries and teachers, chiefly natives, to the coast of Guinea, to organize a mission where the agents of other societies have never been, and among tribes who have never heard the name of Christ.

MARRIED.

ALLEN–SPEARMAN.—On the twenty-ninth of September, by the Rev. John Pipes, Willard Allen to Miss Geraldine Spearman.

BUTTERWORTH—RICHARDSON.—On the same day, by the same, John Butterworth to Miss Tillie Richardson.

Books and Periodicals.

THE SOUTHERN REVIEW, October, 1875, contains the following articles: 1. The Ninth Chapter of Romans. 2. The Times of George the Third. 3. Bacon's Philosophy. 4. New France and her New England Historians. 5. Termites. 6. James Russell Lowell. 7. The Ground of Right. 8. Our Critics. 9. Tenuyson's Queen Mary. We have found time to read only one article—Our Critics. In it Dr. Bledsoe lays about him with a strong arm and with a sharp blade, giving to every man his portion in duo season. He clears up and explains his doctrine of perseverance by affirming the distinction between the perseverance of the saints and the perseverance of the elect. On the subject of preventing grace we think the editor's answer to Dr. Granbery will not be generally received as altogether satisfactory. We are glad to know that Dr. Bledsoe intends to make a tour of the South and Southwest during this fall and winter. The purposes of this visit are in part to increase the circulation of the Review, and to obtain subscribers for the first volume of his forthcoming history of the late war. The doctor will receive a cordial welcome in the South, and we trust that nothing may arise to hinder the contemplated tour. We were never more hearty in our recommendation of the Southern Review than now. Our preachers and people should sustain it and read it, and work earnestly to extend its circulation. At $5 a year it is the cheapest literature we know of. Any one number is worth much more to a thoughtful reader than the cost of a volume.

THE METHODIST QUARTERLY REVIEW, October, 1875, has the following articles: Motley's John of Barneveld, Georg Stjeruhjelm, the Father of Swedish Poetry, Mr. Wesley's Ordination of Dr. Coke, The Religion of the Christ, A Statesman of the Period, Our Next-Door Neighbor. There is the usual voluminous and valuable editorial matter, embracing Synopsis of the Quarterlies, Foreign Religious Intelligence, Foreign Literary Intelligence, Quarterly Book Table.

CASELLA, OR THE CHILDREN OF THE VALLEYS. By Martha Farquharson. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co., 1875.

This is a story of the Waldenses. Their character and sufferings are described, and much valuable historical material is furnished in connection with a tale of absorbing interest.

EIGHT COUSINS, OR THE AUNT-HILL. By Louisa M. Alcott. Boston: Roberts Bros.

This is said to be a good work. The author is a writer of many books, and popular withal. She sometimes has a very gushing way in delineating negro characters, but this is a matter of taste.

THE premium plate for Petersou's Magazine for 1876, Christmas Morning, is a very beautiful engraving. It is a large and well-executed picture, and will delight the subscribers. We have received a copy.

THE WAY OF HOLINESS for October has been received. This excellent monthly periodical is published at Spartanburg, S. C. Price, $1 per annum. William Baker and R. C. Oliver, editors.

NO FEVER IN THE CITY.—The appended letter from the president of the Board of Health will be read with interest and gratification, and will effectually set at rest all speculations touching the presence of yellow fever in the city:

OCTOBER 12, 1875.

No case of yellow fever has occurred in the city since October 4. The general health of the city is excellent. Mortality last week only one hundred and fourteen.

C. B. WHITE,
President Board of Health.

WHEN we first enter into the divine life we propose to grow rich; God's plan is to make us feel poor.—Rev. John Newton.

E. E. F. ROSS, ESQ., connected for several years with the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, is now on a tour through the West and North on business connected with the office. He will confer freely with our patrons and agents in the different cities in regard to our mutual interests, and we bespeak for him the courtesies which have been so liberally extended heretofore, and which we have not forgotten.

A NEW CITY DIRECTORY.—A well-compiled directory, such as the one last published by Soards for 1875, is of almost universal necessity in the stores and offices of New Orleans. We have never had a better directory than his for this city, but the publisher himself promises to surpass it in his New Orleans Directory for 1876. He will soon call upon our merchants for advertisements and subscriptions, and commence the canvass. The publication will involve much labor and expense, and the publisher relies upon the liberality of many subscribers to reimburse his investment. The advantages of advertising in this work are known to our business men, and they will only help themselves when they help make a good City Directory.

CHAMBERS' ENCYCLOPEDIA.—This valuable work, which contains a vast fund of useful information in a convenient form for reference, is offered by Messrs. William D. Allen & Co., of Philadelphia, at half the original price. It is not necessary to say to an intelligent reader that it is an inestimable treasure to those who are able to place it in their libraries, and the reduction of price places it in reach of a large number who could not afford to pay the former price. See advertisement.

STAINED GLASS WORKS.—Messrs. H. J. Smith & Co., at 617 South Broad street and 1727 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, as manufacturers of stained, embossed, enameled and cut glass, give the best of references. Indeed, if we were expecting to use any of the articles in their line, we should certainly consult them, and we advise any of our readers interested in material for lights in churches, halls or any other buildings to read their advertisement in this paper.

QUINTUPLE PICTURE OF THE CENTENNIAL.—We are in receipt of a set of Mr. Thomas Hunter's series of lithographs representing the Centennial building. We have not seen any lithographs in the same style so well executed. They are pleasing to the eye, and offer an improving study to the architect and builder. They are very cheap, as will be seen by reference to the advertisement elsewhere. Agents are wanted.

SWAIM'S CELEBRATED PANACEA for scrofula has been before the public for a long time. It has good and worthy references, and its claims are stated with a modesty and straightforwardness becoming truth and sincerity. Without knowing anything personally about the merits of the Panacea, we can say that all we do know about the character of the doctor or his agents is favorable.

THE GRAND CHEAP LIBRARY advertised by the American Sunday School Union in another column is one of the cheapest and best libraries of the kind we have ever seen. The books are all good. They are well bound, and afford a very suitable variety of subjects. We should like to see it generally circulated. It would be an ornament and a blessing to any household.

ILLUMINATED DOUBLE CARDS.—We call the attention of the readers of the Advocate to the advertisement of Messrs. McCalla & Stavely, fine art printers, 237-9 Dock street, Philadelphia. We have not had the pleasure of seeing specimens of their cards, but are assured by good judges that they execute their work in a style not to be surpassed.

THE SOUTHERN FARMER for August comes to hand laden with fresh, interesting and useful matter. The present managing editor, S. C. Rogers, has very clearly proven that he is not wanting in skill in the management of an agricultural Journal. The Farmer is a semi-monthly, and well merits a place in every Southern home.—Religious Messenger.

THE Standard Glass Cutter, Knife and Scissor Sharpener and Can Opener combined, judging from the cut and descriptions in the catalogue, is a most ingenious contrivance. The Philadelphia Novelty Manufacturing Company want agents. See their advertisement in another column.

SKIN DISEASES.—Dr. Van Dyke advertises in another column to cure diseases of the skin. See card.

A GENTLEMAN (calling at the house of a lady friend)—"Is your mistress in?" Mary—"She is, sir." Gentleman—"Is she engaged?" Mary—"Faith, she's more than that—she's married."

BETTER is little with the fear of the Lord than great treasure and trouble therewith.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

FOR FIFTY YEARS

SWAIM'S CELEBRATED PANACEA

HAS attracted the notice of the most eminent and leading members of the medical profession, in this country and Europe, by its great power and excellence in curing what were considered incurable cases of disease, where the patients have been almost destroyed by SCROFULA, etc.; and Prof. VALENTINE MOTT, of the New York University, Profs. GIBSON, DEWEES and CHAPMAN, of Philadelphia, and many other physicians of celebrity and eminence, gave, over their own signatures, letters recommending it, and certifying to its great merits. It has been occasionally advertised during this long period, and thousands of families throughout the United States recommend and use it. The Laboratory is under the direction of Dr. FRANKLIN STEWART, who has devoted his attention and skill in its careful preparation during the past twenty-five years, and not a bottle put up that is not worth ten times its cost to the patient. It is perfectly safe for the most diseased and debilitated, and will always relieve where it will not cure. In all Cases where the Blood is not Pure it should be Used Freely.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Quintuple Picture of the Centennial Grounds.

Bird's-Eye View of the Centennial Grounds.

MR. THOS. HUNTER, of Philadelphia, whose admirable series of Lithographs has done so much toward awakening interest in our National Celebration, has published a picture containing the five Principal Buildings on one sheet, also a Bird's-Eye View of Fairmount Park, with the buildings in the foreground. Nothing could more fully supply the information sought by those interested. The Quintuple represents all the buildings on a large scale, with sufficient detail to convey to the mind some of their magnificent proportions; the Bird's Eye View is by far the most faithful representation of the Park yet printed—every building whose plan and position have been determined, every ravine, fountain and tree, is correctly drawn.

These pictures are indorsed by the Centennial Board of Finance, who afforded the publisher every facility to make them accurate, and who have distributed them largely in every civilized country on the globe. Aside from their merit as works of art, their interest now in prospect of the Celebration; and as mementoes when that event is over, entitles them to a place in every household.

Mr. Hunter's list now comprises the following: 1. Art Gallery; 2. Main Building; 3. Horticultural Hall; 4. Machinery Hall; 5. Agricultural Hall; 6. Bird's-Eye View; 7. Double (Nos. 1 and 2 on a sheet); 8. Triple (Nos. 1, 2 and 3 on a sheet); 9. Quintuple (Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 on a sheet.) All uniform price, 50 cents each. Sent free by mail, securely packed. MEDICAL.

THIS unrivaled Southern Remedy is warranted not to contain a single particle of Mercury, or any injurious mineral substance, but is containing those Southern Roots and Herbs which all all-wise Providence has placed in countries where Liver Diseases most prevail. It will cure all Diseases Caused by Derangement of the Liver.

PURELY VEGETABLE,

The SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a Bitter or Bad Taste in the Mouth, Pain in the Back, Sides or Joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism, Sour Stomach, Loss of Appetite, Bowels Alternately Costive and Lax, Headache, Loss of Memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done, Debility, Low Spirits, a Thick, Yellow Appearance of the Skin and Eyes, a Dry Cough, often mistaken for Consumption. Sometimes many of these symptoms attend the disease, at others very few; but the Liver, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and Death will ensue.

This Great Unfailing Specific will not be Found the Least Unpleasant.

NEW PATENT TIDY FASTENER.—Seldom does it occur in the history of a new invention that the manufacturers do not experience great difficulty in convincing their patrons of its merits, but our new Tidy Fastener seems to have filled a vacancy, as it were, to be the article wanted to make up the comforts of a well-regulated home.

We have spared neither time, labor nor expense in making it a first-class article, feeling assured that in so doing we shall merit a continuance of the confidence so generally reposed in us by a discriminating public.

Questions for Dairymen.

Every dairyman should have a printed list of questions posted in some suitable place on his premises, where his family and those in his employ, as well as his visitors, will have an opportunity to read frequently. We give some of them, but the list could be greatly extended:

Do your cows feed in swamps and on boggy lands?

Have you good, sweet running water convenient for stock, and is it abundant and permanent in hot, dry weather?

Have you shade-trees in your pasture, or do you think that cows make better milk while lying down to rest in discomfort in the hot, broiling sun?

Do you use dogs and stones to hurry up the cows from pasture at milking-time, thus overheating their blood and bruising their udders?

Do you cleanse the udders of the cows before milking, by washing their teats with their own milk, and practice further economy by allowing the droppings to go into the milk-pail?

Do you enjoin upon your milkers to wash their hands thoroughly before sitting down to milk, or do you think that uncleanliness in this respect is not important for milk that is to be treated for butter-making?

When your cow makes a misstep while being milked, do you allow your milkers to kick her with heavy boots, or to pound her over the back and sides with a heavy stool, accompanied by sundry profane remarks addressed to the cow to teach her manners?

Is the air about your milk-barn or milk-house reeking with the foul emanations of the pig sty, the manure heap or other pestiferous odors?

Good, fresh, clean water, and in abundance, is one of the most important requisites for milch cows, and it should be in convenient places, where stock will not be required to travel long distances to slake their thirst. If springs and running streams cannot be had, a good well, with windmill and pump, makes an efficient substitute.—Willard's Practical Butter Book.

A GOOD WAY TO START ROSE BUSHES.—The present is one of the best times in all the growing season to start a few rose cuttings. Small plants may be bought at the nurseries for a trifle; but, where one wishes to avoid even this expense, let him ask some generous florist or some rose-growing friend for a few cuttings of several desirable sorts, and "strike" the cuttings himself. Get the cuttings three or four inches long and with three buds. If possible, have a bud on the lower end of each cutting, and a bud on the upper end. Insert them two inches or more in sandy soil, shade them from the mid-day sun, and give them gentle sprinklings every evening. In three or four weeks they will probably be rooted, and may be transplanted into separate pots. If extra care is given them they will flower the first winter. The soil for potting roses should consist of a compost of sand, turfy loam and old manure, in equal proportions. If leaf-mold can be obtained, a little may be added. Charcoal crushed fine may also be put in near the bottom of the pot to promote the growth of the roots. Every pot should be supplied with an inch of drainage, made of small gravel. Plants intended for house culture should be kept in pots during the summer. Young rose bushes may be kept in pots the year round, sinking them in the ground during the summer, in some rather shaded situation, so as to check their growth. Repot them carefully in September, or add some fresh mold to the same pots, cutting out the weak shoots and shortening the strong. Let all leaves be removed from cuttings and from young bushes when transplanted. As soon as the roots take a vital hold of the soil new leaves will be produced.

THE CALIFORNIA CENTENNIAL GRAPEVINE.—The big grapevine which is to be exhibited at the Philadelphia exhibition has, after several weeks of labor, been dug up, divided into sections, and boxed for transportation. This famous vine is without doubt the largest in the world. The celebrated vine at Hampton Court, England, which grew under a glass, is nine inches in diameter three feet from the ground; this vine is fourteen inches in diameter three feet from the ground, and nearer to the ground has a measurement of eighteen inches in diameter, or fifty-six inches in circumference, while its foliage has long covered a space equal to 10,000 square feet. The Hampton Court vine produces annually from 1,500 to 2,000 pounds of grapes. The product of this vine has often reached the immense number of 7,500 clusters, of an average weight of one pound and a half each, or nearly 12,000 pounds. It is of the variety known as the mission grape, and was planted by Dona Maria Marceliua de Domlugues, at the birth of a child, according to the custom of the country. Its age is between fifty and sixty years. There still remains in the same neighborhood another vine which also outranks the Hampton Court vine, being now sixteen years old, and sixteen inches in diameter three feet from the ground, and making growth at the rate of an inch in diameter annually. Last year it furnished 8,000 to 10,000 pounds of grapes, which were plucked and eaten by visitors from August 15 to January 26.—Santa Barbara (Cal.) Press.

NEW BURN MIXTURE.—Take the best white glue (extra), fifteen ounces. Break it into small pieces, add to it two pints cold water, and allow it to become soft. Then melt it on a water bath, add to it two fluid ounces glycerine and six drachms carbolic acid, and continue the heat on the water bath until a glossy, tough skin begins to form over the surface in the intervals of stirring. The mixture may be used at once, after the glue is melted and the glycerine and carbolic acid are added; but, when time allows, it is advisable to get rid of a little more of the water, until the proper point is reached. On cooling, this mixture hardens to an elastic mass, covered with a shining, parchment-like skin, and may be kept for any time. When using it it is placed for a few minutes on the water bath until sufficiently liquid for application (it should be quite fluid.) Should it at any time require too high a heat to become fluid, this may be corrected by adding a little water. It is applied by means of a broad brush, and forms, in about two minutes, a shining, smooth, flexible and nearly transparent skin. It may be kept for any time, without spoiling, in Delft or earthen dishes, or pots turned upside down.—American Journal of Pharmacy.

D. F. C. RENNER, of Frederick county, Md., writes to the Department of Agriculture that several years ago he collected some poke root (Phytolacca decandra) for medicinal purposes, and placed it at various places about the house to dry. After several days he observed that there were many cockroaches lying dead, and upon examination found they had been partaking freely of the poke root. Some of the root was placed near their haunts, and the result was that it rid the premises of those insects. Since then he has communicated the remedy to others, who have tested it with satisfactory results.

THE grand essentials to happiness in this life are something to do, something to love and something to hope for.

PROSPERITY seems to be scarcely safe unless it be mixed with a little adversity.

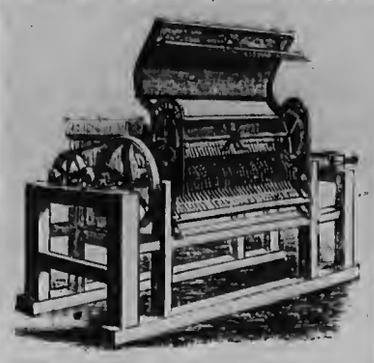
PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past two seasons, and some recent improvements added. It obviates all friction in the cotton box, prevents the rolls from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint than any other gin in use. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, and in consequence the market price of the cotton is enhanced materially. This increased value, given by length of staple and extra production of lint, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every one hundred bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

Scientific.

—The pottery-tree is one of the remarkable vegetable growths of Brazil. Its botanical name is Moquilea utilis. It grows to a great height, its stem being slender. The wood is very hard, and contains a very large amount of silica—not so much, however, as the bark, which is largely employed as a source of silica in the manufacture of pottery. In preparing the bark for the potter's use it is first burned, and the residue is then pulverized and mixed with clay in varying proportions. With an equal quantity of the two ingredients a superior quality of ware is produced. It is very durable, and will bear almost any amount of heat. The natives employ it for all manner of culinary purposes. When fresh the bark cuts like soft sandstone, and the presence of the silex may be readily ascertained by grinding a piece of the bark between the teeth. When dry it is generally brittle, though sometimes hard to break. After being burned, if of good quality, it cannot be broken up between the fingers, a pestle and mortar being required to crush it.

—Various theories have from time to time been offered in explanation of the aurora borealis. A recent one is that of M. Gronemann propounded in the Astronomische Nachrichten. He assigns to the polar light a cosmic origin, supposing it to be formed by masses of fine meteoric powder entering our atmosphere with a high velocity (say forty thousand meters per second,) and so becoming incandescent; just as the same matter in a less fine state of division produces falling stars. This meteoric powder, composed in great part of magnetic metals—iron, nickel, etc.—comes under the influence of terrestrial magnetism, and is grouped in the lines of magnetic force (rays of the aurora) as steel filings are on a plane placed over the poles of a magnet. The rays do not always point to the origin, and the auroral bands frequently noticed perpendicular to the meridian may result from powder chiefly composed of diamagnetic substances (a high temperature and fine division favoring the diamagnetic properties of certain bodies, such as compounds of carbon.) At the equator there is no longer magnetic distribution, and the friction of the cosmic matter in the air only produces a general illumination of the heavens, which may be the true cause of the brightness of tropical nights. M. Gronemann explains the fact of auroras commencing in the earlier hours of the evening, and disappearing toward midnight by the mean direction and velocity of the cosmic dust, relatively to the earth, being more favorable at that time than any other in the day. The annual variation would have a cause similar to that of the maximum of falling stars, and M. Gronemann specifies the fourteenth of February as regularly bringing auroras with it. The various electrical phenomena accompanying auroras are attributed to liberation of electricity through the friction of the dust against the air.

There are several reasons why all should buy the above Wagon: First. They are made of the BEST SELECTED TIMBER, the same being cut at the proper season of the year, piled under sheds, properly dated, and allowed to remain there from three to five years. Second. The wood-work is shaped by the latest improved machinery, put together by the BEST WAGON MECHANICS IN THE WORLD, and are the best ironed and painted Wagons in the market. Third. Their thimble skeins, made of select iron, are set by patent skein setters, and weigh from four to twenty-five pounds per set more than any other, thereby making a perfect running Wagon, which will not break. Fourth. They are the only Wagon in which the SLOPE-SHOULDER SPOKE is used; hence they have the best wheel, which is actually the foundation of the Wagon, and should be carefully examined by persons purchasing. Fifth. They are sold only by responsible parties, and every Wagon is warranted; while the Studebaker Bros. are practical workmen, and attend to their business personally; hence the superiority of their work over all others.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals for the three days ending October 19:

Mississippi river and bayous	bales... 9,486
Red river	2,806
Ouachita river	996
Railroads	3,709
Lake	61
Mobile	1,212
Texas	3,128
Total	21,490

On Saturday the movement commenced under the rather depressing influence of the Agricultural Bureau crop report, which, from its comparatively favorable statement of the condition in the several States, was calculated to make buyers pause and await its effects abroad. The sales embraced 2,950 bales. On Monday the market opened quiet, with only a moderate demand, and a disposition on the part of factors to meet it freely at Saturday's rates. The business during the morning was of comparatively limited extent, but later in the day parties came together more freely, and the movement exhibited increased animation, resulting in sales of 3,750 bales. In some cases buyers claimed that they had executed their orders at ⅛c. less than Saturday's rates, and in others that the decline was barely ⅛c., while in others again they reported no quotable variation. On Tuesday the Liverpool telegrams reported an easier market, but not quotably lower, with sales of only 10,000 bales, but at New York the improvement of 3-16c. on Monday was lost, and the market closed quiet at Saturday's figures, while futures ruled lower, and closed at a decline of 3-16@⅛c. The demand was, nevertheless, fair, but under the influence of the news factors were compelled to make some concessions, and the closing rates showed a further decline of fully ⅛c. The sales summed up 4,900 bales.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 12,600 bales, against 9,400 for the corresponding time last week and 8,650 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 163,125 bales, against 86,365 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 60,227 bales. The increase by the reports per telegraph is 65,313—508,403 against 434,690. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 9,563 bales to France, of 26,221 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 27,259 to Great Britain. GRASS AND ROSES.

I looked where the roses were blooming—
They stood among grasses and weeds;
I said: "Where such beauties are growing,
Why suffer these paltry weeds?"

Weeping, the poor things faltered:
"We have neither beauty nor bloom,
We are grass in the roses' garden,
But the Master gives us room.

"Slaves of a generous Master,
Born from a world above,
We came to this place in his wisdom,
We stay to this hour from his love.

"We have fed his humblest creatures,
We have served him truly and long;
He gave no grace to our features,
We have neither color nor song.

"Yet he who has made the flowers
Placed us on the self-same sod:
He knows our reason for being—
We are grass in the garden of God."

From "Exotics."

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

MEMPHIS, Oct. 19.—In the so-called treaty of peace between Gov. Ames and the Democratic State Executive Committee, at Jackson, Miss., whereby the militia was disbanded, the committee assured the Governor that there was no other desire among the whites than that peace should be preserved, the laws enforced and a fair election had, and the leading whites would do all in their power to this end. The Governor responded that, in view of this assurance, he would meet their views as far as possible, and would order all the militia companies to disperse and return to their homes. It was agreed that the arms of these companies should be placed in depots in the neighborhood in which the companies were raised, be guarded by United States troops, and be removed only by order of the Governor. The arms would not be delivered to the militia except in case of a riot or insurrection which could not be suppressed by the civil authorities.

LITTLE ROCK, Oct. 19.—A contract has been entered into for the completion of the Little Rock and Fort Smith railroad, a distance of forty-five miles between the present terminus and Fort Smith.

LOUISVILLE, Oct. 20.—At a session of the Christian Missionary Society of America, to-day, a report recommending the raising of a fund to be known as the Centennial Fund was adopted. The money thus raised will be used for the advancement of the objects of the association, and the enlightenment and Christianization of negroes in America.

NEW YORK, Oct. 22.—Commissioners representing the city of Mobile are now here, endeavoring to effect an arrangement by which its debt may become less burdensome. From their statement it appears the total debt, principal and interest, to be paid in sixteen years will be $4,445,890, being twenty-five per cent. of the total assessed value of the city. If held to this, the commissioners say the city will become hopelessly insolvent, and can never pay; and to help toward the settlement of these difficulties the Legislature of Alabama passed an act giving the Governor of the State authority to appoint three citizens of Mobile as commissioners to settle the city debt. This act provides for the issue of $2,000,000 of six per cent. bonds, payable in thirty years from May 1, 1875, and creates a first lien on the real estate belonging to the city, as well as on the revenues of the city.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 24.—The establishment of the United States fish commission, under the direction of Livingstone Stone, on the McCloud river, in California, for securing the eggs of California salmon for introduction into Eastern waters, and which has just been closed for the season, has been extremely successful in its object, no less than nine millions of eggs having been obtained. The greater part of these have already been shipped to the fish commissioners of the various States, to be by them hatched out and planted in appropriate waters. Due provision has been made for a supply to the waters of every State. Large numbers have been sent to Texas, to be hatched out under the direction of the commissioner.

NEW YORK, Oct. 24.—The first of Moody and Sankey's revivals was held at the Brooklyn rink this morning. The building was crowded, fully ten thousand people being present. Rev. Dr. Buddington opened with prayer, and, after singing by Sankey, Moody delivered a long discourse. Among those on the platform were Rev. Drs. Cuyler, Duryea, Prime, Buddington, DeWitt Talmage, and George Stewart, of Philadelphia. In the afternoon the rink was again packed, at least five thousand people being unable to gain admittance. After services it was announced that there would be revival meetings at the rink every evening during the week except Saturday.

DENVER, Oct. 25.—The returns thus far received from to-day's election indicate that the Republicans have carried the Territory, and that they will have a considerable majority in the Constitutional Convention. All points heard from so far report Republican majorities.

FOREIGN.

SAN DOMINGO, Oct. 9.—Political affairs are tranquil, but the financial condition is deplorable. Secretary of the Treasury Amalma has indicated to Congress that the republic is bankrupt.

Heavy shocks of an earthquake were felt throughout the island.

ST. THOMAS, Oct. 16.—Affairs in Hayti are in a satisfactory condition. The coffee crop has begun to come in, and is selling readily at 15@15½.

MADRID, Oct. 25.—The Epoca says that, in addition to the fifteen thousand troops sent to Cuba since the appointment of Valmaseda to the Captain Generalship, the government has determined to send a further force of seven thousand, which forms a tenth part of the last levy. The executive authorities of Cuba have received directions to purify the Cuban administration by punishing the authors of and participators in frauds without distinction.

BERLIN, Oct. 25.—Emperor William returned to-day from his trip to Milan.

From the Work.

VILLULA CT., ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: All through the spring and early summer we have had good meetings, large congregations, and the presence and power of the Holy Ghost manifested. There has been all the time an increasing disposition with the members to do their duty, to study the Bible, pray in their families, and they are becoming more and more convinced that to be Christians after the Bible pattern they must be workers. At my appointment at Villula, on the first Sunday in August, I determined to protract. The meeting continued thirteen days. Fourteen were added to the church, and I think about twenty or twenty-five were converted. One important feature in this meeting was that most of those who joined the church were men and women of mature age—some of our best citizens—and will make capital members. The Rev. James N. Owens, of this circuit, assisted me in this meeting. The meeting was a success.

On Friday before the third Sunday in August we commenced a meeting at Malone's chapel, near Eufaula; and what I have said of Villula may be said of this. It was a glorious meeting. Fifteen were added to the church. I do not know how many were converted, but I think not less than twenty-five; and the whole church was greatly revived and strengthened. The whole community was aroused. Bro. J. N. Owens again came to the rescue. We had also the valuable assistance of Rev. James Glenn, of the Alabama Conference, and the Rev. Dr. Thomas A. Johnson, an indefatigable and talented local preacher of this circuit.

On Friday before the fifth Sunday in August we began a meeting at Jernigan. It lasted ten days. Eight were added to the church and double that number converted. It was also a good meeting. At that place there was only one man who would pray in public; but he was a man—one who has long been the pillar of Jernigan church. His faithfulness has kept the church together. When the meeting closed there was not more than one who would not pray in public. We have had good meetings at other places. Since the first of August about forty have joined the church, and very nearly double that number have professed a change of heart, I think, and those who know most about it say that the church in this circuit is in a better condition than it has been for a long time. "The Lord has done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

I desire to say also that our worthy and venerable presiding elder, Dr. W. H. Ellison, is at his post, working with renewed power and energy for the great cause of Christ in the Eufaula district. He has been at all his appointments on this circuit, and his earnest and spiritual sermons and labors have done much to build up the church.

JOHN W. SOLOMON.

VILLULA, October 6, 1875.

RANDOLPH CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We have had several good meetings on this circuit during the last few months, God having graciously poured out his Spirit upon this people.

At Randolph station, on the Selma, Rome and Dalton railroad, we held an eight days' meeting, resulting in an accession of eight to the church and a general refreshing among the membership.

A meeting of great interest, continuing for five days, was held at Cedar Grove. There were several converts, six of whom connected themselves with the church.

At our third Quarterly Conference at Sandy chapel the meeting was protracted until the following Thursday. Four were gathered into the fold.

At Cox's chapel God met with us again, and we enjoyed refreshing seasons from on high. Our labors were eminently blessed and owned of God, and fifteen souls professed to have found peace and pardon, and united themselves to the church.

Our meeting at Tabernacle was protracted for six days, resulting in fifteen conversions and an addition of six to the church.

At Union—a new church, organized three months since—I have just closed a meeting of five days and nights. It has seldom been my fortune to enjoy a more interesting meeting. In fact it was truly glorious. As far as we could ascertain, there were over thirty who found peace in believing, several of whom manifested the brightest evidences of conversion that I have witnessed for years. I was assisted at this meeting by Bro. Richard Wood, a minister of the Baptist Church, who rendered valuable service. Thirty-two members were received into the church at this place as the fruits of our meeting, several of whom are the best citizens of the community—men of considerable influence and high social position.

Randolph circuit has indeed been blessed this year, and the Lord continues to carry on the good work.

Yours in Christ,

R. A. MIEARS, P. C.

OCTOBER 16, 1875.

SPRINGVILLE CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Union camp ground is located about eleven miles from Springville, and adjoins Webster circuit. Four acres of land were generously given for our use for ten years by Bro. H. G. Ratcliffe, of the Baptist Church. Near by is a bold sprig of health-giving water, and also a steam saw and grist mill. On the ground we have erected a large and commodious shed, forty by seventy feet square, which we think will last fully as long as our lease. On the ground we suppose we had five hundred people to hear the word. We commenced our first camp meeting on Friday evening, October 1, 1875. The Revs. S. S. Scott, J. F. Patterson, W. D. Stayton and W. D. Shea, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, with Bro. Singleton, of the Baptist Church, were present and did noble service for the Master. God came in his majesty and power, and demonstrated his willingness to save them that come unto him by Christ. We know not precisely how many found Jesus as their Savior, but suppose at least thirty. Twenty-three were received into the church by application for membership—all but four into full connection. Forty-two dollars and forty cents was raised for missions. We suppose our camp meeting arrangements are worth $400. This year we have received forty people into the church. The people on the river have made excellent crops, as a general thing, this year. Yours in love,

PHILIP ALLEN, P. C.

OCTOBER 11, 1875.

WALNUT GROVE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Our second protracted meeting for this circuit was held at a new appointment—a place destitute of Methodist preaching, except occasionally. This meeting began on Saturday before the first Sabbath in September, and went forward day and night until Thursday night, then at night until Sunday night, resulting in the organization of a church of twenty-two members, with ten or twelve professions. The brethren there expect to build a church.

Our third protracted meeting was at Scotland chapel, which commenced on Friday night before the second Sunday in September, and continued until the third Sabbath night at ten o'clock. There were twelve accessions, and twenty-one or twenty-two professions. The church was very much refreshed.

We also began a meeting at Miller's chapel on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in September. We carried it forward until Monday night. Here we had also a flattering prospect for good. We received three members, and the membership was very much revived.

We have still another protracted meeting to come off. We expect God's presence and power with us. Thanks to brethren, local and itinerant, for services rendered at these meetings. We have received on this work this year, by letter and Discipline, one hundred members, and have had forty-five or fifty conversions. The old membership has been very much strengthened. To God be praise, now and forever.

R. A. SIBLEY, Pastor.

OCTOBER 12, 1875.

MIDWAY, ALA.—Mr. Editor: In the latter part of September we had a very gracious work at Enon, in Bullock county, Ala., continuing eleven days. I have never witnessed a revival so satisfactory as this one. As far as we could ascertain, thirteen were converted—all remarkably clear and bright. Of these, eleven united with our church. The glory of the meeting consisted in the wonderful manner in which the Holy Spirit visited the members. The manifestation of "joy unspeakable and full of glory" was abundant, overflowing, pervading; yet there was not a single instance of undue or improper excitement. It was a pure work of the Spirit, with a plenty of genuine Methodist shouting.

So much for the church. Now a word about education. "The Gem of the Woods"—a pet name given to the Enon Academy by our beloved and sainted Dr. Cotton—is in a flourishing condition and doing a grand work under the control of the Rev. D. M. Banks. O that every Methodist church in the Conference were as warmly nestled, with just such a school and teacher, as the church at Enon! Yours truly,

JERE. S. WILLIAMS.

OCTOBER 7, 1875.

FORT JESSUP, LA.—Mr. Editor: On the fourth day of this month our Quarterly Conference convened at New Hope church, on the Manny and Beulah circuit, Bro. S. S. Scott, presiding elder, was at his post and preached to the edifying of all. There seemed to be a great breaking up of the fallow ground of the heart—there was great seriousness. The church was evidently built up, sinners convicted and mourners converted. The result was that twelve were added to the church. Four were heads of families. Our circuit is now in good condition for a revival, and we hope to send you good news from the camp meeting at Beulah. Our presiding elder is doing good work. We hope he will be spared and permitted to remain with us. Our district is going to try to administer the bath that will at least keep off the Oregon fever. This district has suffered much from this dreadful disease. J. M. F.

SEPTEMBER 24, 1875.

DESOTO PARISH, LA.—Mr. Editor: Our camp meeting at Bethel, DeSoto circuit, commenced on Friday, September 24, and closed on Wednesday, the twenty-ninth. It resulted in quite a number of conversions and thirty-nine accessions to the church, with a good revival throughout the membership. We were sadly in need of more preachers. The first day we had but one, and we closed with only two. We have no local preachers, and the traveling preachers, we think, do not make sufficient effort to concentrate their forces at camp and basket meetings. Regular work will do to hold what we have; but we depend in a great degree on those meetings for recruits.

JOHN PIPES, P. C.

MANSFIELD, LA., September 30, 1875.

PARSON NEWMAN'S PRAYER.—According to a Washington special of the seventeenth, the President attended divine service this morning. The court chaplain, the Rev. Dr. Newman, as in duty bound, feeling inspired by the unusual presence of this distinguished functionary, proceeded to thank God for the result of the late elections, as follows: He said he "thanked God for the recent evidences exhibited by the people of their purpose to remain true to those principles by which a people will continue to be free, and that by these signs they showed a desire to perpetuate the principles inculcated by our forefathers, and to preserve them for future generations." This prayer is only a part of the movement now going on very actively in the Republican party for the renomination of Grant upon a platform of Know-Nothingism and resistance to the Pope.

THE Bonn correspondent of the London Watchman heard a Catholic priest say, on the Sunday of the Evangelical Conference there, that "at Mary's death all the apostles, up to James, were around the bedside. A few days after her coffin was found empty" (an intimation that her body had been carried to heaven.) "He then graphically pictured her reception in the heavenly world. Choirs of angels greeted her, with the patriarchs, her parents, Jacob and Anna, and all the angelic and redeemed hosts. In fact the ascension of Mary was more glorious than that of Christ, who was greeted by the heavenly hosts, while Mary was welcomed not only by these, but by the Son of God himself."

NOTICE TO MEMBERS OF THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Please announce through the ADVOCATE the following: Preachers who expect their wives to accompany them to Conference will please inform me immediately.

H. URQUHART.

GREENVILLE, ALA., October 19, 1875.

Missouri Correspondence.

MR. EDITOR: Two of the Missouri Conferences have just closed their sessions. The St. Louis Conference met in the town of Salem, situated near the center of the vast domestic mission-field, which includes almost two-thirds of the territory of the Conference. The Missouri Conference was held in Glasgow, a pleasant Missouri river city, about two hundred miles from St. Louis, and located in the heart of the richest and best cultivated sections of the State.

The attendance upon the two Conferences is reported quite equal to what might have been expected. The past year has been one of great hardship in large sections of the work. Money has been scarce and the salaries of the ministers meager. Some of the preachers were unable to reach the seat of their Conference on account of sickness.

The reports upon the different departments of church labor have been quite encouraging. A reasonable increase in the membership of the societies appears, and a decided advance has been made in the missionary cause. The operations in this line are becoming more thorough and systematic. An enlarged and generous conception of Christian duty is beginning to come upon our people, and there is promise of a fuller missionary treasury hereafter. Certainly such a result will be realized if the pastors are diligent in pressing the claims of missions upon the heart and resources of the church.

The schools of the State have suffered very greatly under the monetary pressure of the last year and a half. It is, however, a cause of congratulation to the entire connection that our Western church educational institutions have developed sufficient vigor of life to bear them through all the trials and misfortunes of the past eighteen months. The colleges under the care of the Conferences here are well officered and most admirably conducted. In all that pertains to the highest forms of Christian education they are the peers of any schools in the land. Nobler men and more competent teachers than those who hold professorships in and preside over Central College, Howard Female College and Central Female College are not to be found in institutions anywhere.

Bishop Keener presided over both of the Conferences with great ability, and his presence, the second time in Missouri, has comforted and strengthened the churches here. He is regarded as pre-eminently adapted to the office and work of a Bishop, and none of his honored colleagues are more highly esteemed than himself by the laymen and ministry. The pulpit ministrations of the Bishop have been most delightful and instructive. There is a freshness and a vigor about his style, and a forceful presentation of his thoughts, that place him among the finest expounders of Christian faith and doctrine. I suspect but few if any of the Bishops of the church have had to consider and handle questions of greater vital interest and delicacy than those which have come before Bishop Keener in the Conferences of this State. The general opinion of the best minds of the church is that in no instance has the Bishop erred in judgment.

The St. Louis Advocate, however, has done injustice to Bishop Keener's administration in the issue of that paper of the thirteenth instant. The proceedings of the St. Louis Conference, in the case of the local administration of Discipline, of which so much has been said, were sent in advance sheets of the St. Louis Advocate to the Missouri Conference, and are published in the paper of this week. The editor says: "The Discipline of our church expressly prohibits the publication of episcopal decisions given in Annual Conferences until after such decisions shall have been approved by the College of Bishops; yet decisions made by the presiding Bishop at the Salem Conference have been published, in at least one paper, together with proceedings in which the church generally is somewhat interested; and now, in view of the fact that this much has been published, and in view of the widespread interest that has been felt on the subject, and that the church may know what was done, and have a full and correct understanding of the whole matter, it is deemed proper and perhaps necessary that this paper give a full, fair and impartial account of the whole proceedings."

The following, however, does not appear in the "fly sheet," the advance sheet or the regular issue of the St. Louis Advocate, although it is published in the St. Louis Globe of October 1, in the very column containing the part of the proceedings which the Advocate copies, and was placed on the Conference minutes by the direction of the Bishop himself:

A PROTEST.

The following is the protest of the Rev. F. A. Owen against Bishop Keener presiding in his case—that of maladministration in having received L. D. Dameron into Chouteau Avenue church after he had been expelled from St. John's:

"ST. LOUIS, MO., August 9, 1875.—J. C. Keener—My Dear Brother: Having been notified that my administration will be reviewed at the next session of the St. Louis Conference, I deem it proper for me to notify you that I protest against your presiding when my case comes up, and to request that you have one of the other Bishops present, that he may preside in the case. My reason for this is that at the Manchester District Conference you delivered an unofficial opinion (see Manual of Discipline, chapter 2, section 1, paragraph 4,) which virtually decides the point at issue in my case.

Yours in Christ,

F. A. OWEN."

BISHOP KEENER REPLIES.

To this the Bishop replied as follows:

"The protest made by the Rev. F. A. Owen does not appear to the president of the Conference to be a sufficient ground of challenge against his presiding during the examination of the character of the protestor, for the following reasons:

"1. The fact that a decision has been made by a presiding officer of a Conference is not a sufficient ground of objection to his presiding in a case involving the same principles with that upon which he may have already decided, else a new law officer might be required for every new case of trial.

"2. A Conference, whether Quarterly, District or Annual, meets by the appointment of its legal president; and, as a quorum is not requisite to its legal existence or action, he is made responsible for its purity and integrity, as well as for the conduct of its business; that it be constituted and held in accordance with the law of its organization, as provided for by the Discipline. As one charged with the maintenance of discipline he may not therefore suffer the recognition of an expelled person as a member by any Conference.

"3. The formal decision of the president of a Conference on a question of law must accordingly govern its action, and be duly respected until revised by the competent tribunal.

"4. It is to informal opinions given by presiding officers, when not actually presiding over Conference or church courts, that the article quoted (chapter 2, section 1, paragraph 4) from the Manual of the Discipline has reference. In the case of an expelled member, who has not appealed, there can be no church court from which his sentence of expulsion might be reaffirmed. 'Church courts,' technically so called, whether of investigation, original jurisdiction or appellate, are, with us, not permanent, but are especially constituted for the time being, and for the case in hand. They are a committee of three or of five, or at the Annual Conference of nine, or at the General Conference a committee of one member from each Annual Conference, according to the provisions of the Discipline for arraigning and trying disorderly members or ministers, the only exception being that at the Quarterly Conference, which temporarily becomes a court during the progress of a trial or of an appeal. To call or constitute a 'church court' in the case of an expelled person, who has not appealed, would be virtually to recognize him again as a member. Having once been tried and expelled, non-recognition must end the case until, by having given satisfaction to the society that expelled him, he shall have acquired new rights. In view of all which it must appear that the decision rendered in the Manchester District Conference in the case referred to by the protestor, and which is hereto appended as a part of this reply, was not an unofficial opinion, but an authoritative ruling by its president upon a question affecting the legal organization of the Conference that was formally presented to him, and which he only was competent to decide. J. C. KEENER."

The church in Missouri regrets the withdrawal of the Rev. Dr. Haygood from the control of our Sunday school interests. The doctor has a warm place in the hearts of our people. We have always regarded him as eminently fitted for the work to which he was assigned in the church. His name appears among the editorial corps of the Southern Advocate. Good luck to him! MISSOURI.

THE Rolfid Lake brethren, says the Methodist, had a fine day for their sale of lots, and disposed of these places for summer homes to the amount of $35,000. The well is down four hundred and thirty-five feet, with promise of striking the fluid that exhilarates people at Saratoga.

THE fire-fly only shines when on the wing. So it is with the mind—when once we rest, we darken.—Bailey.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1875.

COME, MIGHTY SPIRIT.

Come, mighty Spirit, penetrate
This heart and soul of mine:
And my whole being with thy grace
Pervade, O Life divine!

As this clear air surrounds the earth,
Thy grace around me roll:
As the fresh light pervades the air,
So pierce and fill my soul.

As from these clouds drops down in love
The precious summer rain,
So from thyself pour down the flood
That freshens all again.

As these fair flowers exhale their scent
In gladness at our feet,
So from thyself let fragrance breathe,
More heavenly and more sweet!

Thus life within our lifeless hearts
Shall make its glad abode,
And we shall shine in heavenly light,
Filled with the light of God.

Bonar.

Christian Fraternity.

God is my witness, whom I serve with my spirit, that I should feel the greatest concern for not only the prosperity but for the existence of my beloved church if I believed that such teachings as I see of late in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, over the signature of three stars, had much prevalence in her communion. The utterance of such sentiments at all, in such public and responsible manner, is cause of alarm and evidence of degeneracy.

We have arrived at a point in the history of our church—a point never before reached in the history of any church, so far as my reading informs me—when Christian fraternity, the love of the brethren is, under some circumstances, yea, under a large class of circumstances, openly and flippantly scouted, derided and put under ban of wholesale disparagement.

The war-words of opposing factions, iterated and reiterated in times out of number, North against South and South against North, have rung the changes upon the word fraternity until in certain would-be literary circles it no longer represents the idea of Christianity among Christians, or brotherhood among churches, but certain legal and technical forms, measures and advantages in diplomacy and ecclesiastical warfare. A new doctrine has sprung up, never before known in religious circles, that Christian fraternity is not enjoined as a universal obligation, but is a thing to be used or not among Christians and churches, as feelings of taste, likes or dislikes may chance to suggest.

I for one will not consent to the adoption of this new rule of ethics, especially when I so plainly see that it so fearfully threatens the integrity if not the existence of my church—my beloved Methodist Episcopal Church South. I love her Methodism, her episcopacy, her church organism, her South. "This man was born there." And so I oppose the teachings of this teacher of three stars, all over from beginning to end, his plan and his execution of it.

Will this brother—for such I take him to be—suffer me to remind him that every religious denomination that ever sank beneath the tide of history since Joshua crossed the Jordan, went down under just such teachings as he prints in the ADVOCATE? Look at either the history or the philosophy of the thing. God never permitted a church to prosper in open non-fraternity with some other church. It is against the central idea of Christianity.

The church has a war on its hands, a fearful and valiant war—a war against the hosts of Satan. But this war:

> "A war fit for Cain to be the leader of,
> An abhorred, accursed, a fraternal war"—
> (Milton.)

does not belong to her vocation. Our battle cry is: "That we love one another." "He that loveth not his brother abideth in death." From one end of the line to the other we are commanded to "let brotherly love continue." We "are taught of God to love one another." Paul exhorts: "Be of one mind, live in peace, and the God of love and peace shall be with you." And he beseeches "that there be no divisions among you." "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples: if ye have love one to another." "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." Is this war-writer "endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace?" "By one Spirit we are all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles (Greek Christians,) whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit." And we are besought to "mark them which cause divisions and offenses contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned, and avoid them." "Is Christ divided? Was Paul crucified for you?"

But then our brother of the three stars could no doubt show, in his way, that these teachings belong to a former age and to different circumstances from these. But I confess I am afraid to ignore the Bible teachings under any circumstances. It is a fearful thing to make exceptions to Bible rules. That and nothing but that is the logic of irreligion the world over. Such exceptions and such counsels, supposing them to prevail—which God forbid—will as certainly ruin our church as the same causes have produced like effects in times past.

This writer thinks he sees danger to our church of disintegration and absorption, and he prescribes non-fraternity. An unsafe and dangerous doctor. He says those who would be kind, forbearing and fraternal—who would return good for evil—are the enemies of the church. Then the Savior was its enemy! And he says that he and his fellow-belligerent scoffers of fraternity are its only friends! He has something yet to learn of both Christianity and human nature.

His writings smack of war in every line. His principles are retaliatory throughout. This is his remedy for breaches between the North and South—a remedy, by the way, that never did heal breaches of any kind, however made.

Now, per contra, I chance to be acquainted with some of our most eminent Southern statesmen, some of them eminent Christians, and will name a few: Lamar, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Stevenson, Merrimon, Stephens, Bright, Singleton, Hunton, Beck, and could name many others in the same category. They, too, have breaches to heal, which, by the way, are not wholly unrelated to our church breaches. They are civil and political breaches. The remedy they adopt, and in which they labor assiduously almost day and night, is the very opposite of that recommended by our good friend of the three stars in the ADVOCATE.

I also know other men who claim to be statesmen, and who speak from the other side of the breach—such men as Clayton, of Arkansas, Ward, of Illinois, McKee and Amee, of Mississippi, and Morton, of Indiana, and I could easily add a hundred more to the list. They seem to have been taught in the same school of belligerent raw-head-and-bloody-bones with our brother of the three stars; and so they are eloquent in relating grievances—worst side out always—and in propagating the non-fraternal principles. It is not the best way. It is bad policy, bad morals and bad religion.

I exhort my younger brethren, and older ones too, not to be led astray by such wild, new-fangled, retaliatory and belligerent Christianity.

I know that to worldly-minded men the teachings of Christ are unpalatable; but they are the best in the long run.

And now if I write much more the printer will complain; and yet I have by no means said all I wished. But I will just inquire: Did ever anybody, before these new teachings, hear of Christian fraternity meted out by bargain, stipulation, contract or negotiation? Is Christian fraternity a subject of legislation, of diplomacy and commerce? Did Paul and John treat it that way? Is it subject to conditions, equivalents—so much for so much—anywhere in the books, from Moses down? Does common sense and common Christianity so regard it?

Will the editor suffer a few additional words next week?

R. ABBEY.

The Southern Review.

In the July number the writer says, on page 30: "God, who saw the end from the beginning, elected all those to eternal life whom he foreknew would obey and live, and left all the others to perish in their incorrigible sins." He seems to use this less objectionable form of election to aid him, on page 31, to reconcile Methodism with Calvinism. If God saw from eternity all the moral contingent acts of men as certain, then the day of judgment is already past in the divine mind, and all men are certainly saved or lost. This view of the subject makes the whole moral contingent universe a mere illusion, a tragical farce. There is a real moral contingent universe, or there is not. If not, then there is nothing right or wrong, only as they are made so arbitrarily.

All theists believe that God knows all things; but that is not the question. Can God know a thing or act to be certain that he has made dependent on another will, or contingent? Can God see a thing to be round when he has made the same thing square? Then there is nothing round or square by nature, but arbitrarily so. Therefore God cannot see an act as certain that he has made uncertain. When God makes a thing white it is white, and nothing else; and when God created the moral contingent universe it was what he made, and nothing else. God can make bread out of stones; but when he changes a stone into bread it is bread, and not stone, and has the nature of bread, and not of rock. When he turned water into wine it was wine, or it was a mere illusion, and the miracle a farce. If God foresaw the contingent acts of man as certain, why did he repent afterward that he made man on the earth?—Genesis vi, 6. Why did he not repent when he foresaw what would be the result, and not make him at all? Why did he repent that he had made Saul king if he foreknew he would turn back from following him? It is solemn mockery to say God knew from all eternity that some men would not repent, and yet send his Holy Spirit and minister to plead with them, and urge them to do what he foreknew, when he created them, they would not do.

Again, on page 31: "Why may not he who foreknows all things withhold his grace in mercy, as well as bestow it in mercy?" If God can withhold his grace, or bestow it, when and on whom he pleases, regardless of his oath and covenant, then why not withhold it altogether from those he foreknew would reject it? On this principle of giving and withholding, might he not have withheld the law from Adam, and saved him and his children from the dreadful consequences of its violation? Heaven and earth can pass away easier than God can withhold any part of convicting grace from the worst sinner on earth, or withhold his pardoning grace from the humblest suppliant that lives. All the grace of God in Christ is the God-given inheritance of every child of Adam, by solemn covenant, which God can never break. The prodigal son demanded the portion of goods that belonged to him.

Again, on page 31: "That it was not any merit of congruity, or any other merit, which God saw in the elect to make them out as the objects of his favor. It was all of pure, unmixed grace that he chose them out of the mass of mankind, and put their names in the book of life." Eternal salvation or condemnation is not predicated of election, but of law and character. God has no power to 'choose,' by divine sovereignty, foreknowledge, or grace, mixed or unmixed, any part of mankind to eternal life or death. Grace is not salvation. God offers it not freely or without merit. If he did, then all men would be obliged to be saved by it. It demands the very highest possible conditions of the human soul to receive it. The old Calvinistic hobby about free grace, and unmerited grace, and sovereign grace, is not found either in experience or in the Bible. The grace of God cost the incarnation and death of Christ. There is not a case in the Bible where God has ever given his grace without charge to any one. It cost the merchant all he had to purchase the pearl. The unprofitable servant failed to pay the interest, and the capital was taken from him and he was cast out.

St. Paul uses strong language when he exhorts his brethren not to receive the grace of God in vain. It cost the blood of Christ to purchase grace, and it costs the sinner his eternal salvation to reject it. If the grace of God was salvation, then all men would be saved from original and actual sin. The Bible clearly teaches that the grace of God is not only equally but universally bestowed on all men, and declares, by the mouth of Peter, that he is not a respecter of persons. Holiness is salvation, not grace, free, mixed or unmixed. Grace is the means, holiness the end. It is admitted by Catholics and Protestants that the remedial system ends at the day of judgment. Then what will become of those who are saved by sovereign, unmixed grace? When the dispensation of grace ends their salvation must end also. The Judge will not say to those on his right hand: "I chose you out of the mass of mankind from the beginning, not for any merit of congruity or other merit. It was all of pure, unmixed grace," etc. The book says: "I was hungry and ye gave me meat." The Lord said to his prophet to say to the righteous: "It shall be well with him;" "Well done, good and faithful servant;" "Let him that is holy be holy still." When faith and hope and grace are ended, let him be holy still. Calvinism is a hideous monster of the dark ages—a bundle of paradoxes that never can be reconciled with the truth of God. Let it die and its memory perish from the earth. Amen.

The Alabama Conference.

REMINISCENCES.

MR. EDITOR: The Alabama Conference was organized in the city of Tuskaloosa, in November, 1832. Of its history for seventeen years the writer has no personal knowledge, and he only desires to write of it for the last twenty-five years.

In January, 1851, its session was held in Auburn, Ala., at which time your correspondent was admitted on trial. There were then 132 preachers connected with the body, including those on trial as well as the regular members. It had a membership of whites, 33,163; of colored, 15,484. Its territory embraced all of Alabama except about nine counties of the northern portion of the State—which were in the Tennessee Conference—west Florida, and seven or eight counties of Mississippi.

There were ten presiding elders' districts. These were subsequently divided until the number reached sixteen. In 1864-5 the Conference was provisionally divided into two. The new Conferences were called Mobile and Montgomery. There were 226 preachers when the division took place. That left over 100 in each of the new bodies. This division was confirmed by the General Conference of 1866, which convened in New Orleans, La. Four years subsequent to that time, at the General Conference which assembled in Memphis, Tenn., there was a general reconstruction, conforming Conference lines somewhat to State lines, when portions of the foregoing Conferences were thrown together, and called the Alabama Conference; and its sessions are now numbered as though the interregnum of six years, in which the name was lost, had not occurred. It is now only a little over half as large in territory as originally—by about thirty counties, which are now in other Conferences. Twenty-two of these are in Alabama and eight in Mississippi. It now has 122 preachers in connection with it, and a white membership of 27,967, and 96 colored members.* Although it has been greatly diminished in its territory, yet it is nearly equal to its former ministerial force and numerical strength.

It is desired to direct attention to the 132 preachers who were connected with this Conference a quarter of a century ago. Fifty-six of that number are known to be dead; six were deposed from the ministry; five withdrew from our church—of these, four went to the Methodist Episcopal Church, one joined the Methodist Protestant Church; ten are lost sight of—that is, it is not known to the writer whether they are living or dead; ten are known to be local preachers; twenty-five are in the itinerant work in other Conferences. That leaves twenty now in the Alabama Conference. Seven of these are superannuated; thirteen are effective. Nine of these have been on the effective list every year for the twenty-five years.

In future numbers your correspondent will enter more into particulars.

OBITUARIES.

DIED, at his residence in Leesville, Vernon parish, La., on the eighteenth of February, 1875, Elder NATHAN H. BRAY, in the seventy-second year of his age.

Elder N. H. Bray was the son of Edward Bray, of Peterboro, England. He was born April 29, 1803. He was married to Elizabeth Ann Cavil on the sixteenth of December, in the year 1832. In the year 1840 (April 9) he arrived in New Orleans with his family, consisting of his wife and five children, and soon after his arrival in this country he located near the town of Manny, in Sabine parish, La. The writer is not informed in regard to the precise date that Elder Bray made a public profession of religion, or with what church he united, but it is very probable that he united with the Manny church, for he was licensed to preach by this church July 3, 1847, and was ordained to the gospel ministry in the year 1849. His zeal in the cause and his success as a minister induced the board of the Southern Baptist Convention to employ him as a missionary to labor in the parishes of Rapides, Natchitoches and Sabine. In this field of labor he was continued by the board, the most of his time, from the year 1853 to 1859. While laboring as a missionary Bro. Bray moved from Manny and settled near the Anacoco prairie, in Sabine parish. He was in the organization of the Sabine Association, and the brethren of this association showed their appreciation of his piety and zeal in the Master's cause, and his ability as a presiding officer, by electing him moderator of the association annually up to the year 1871, except when he was prevented from attending the meetings of this body. This office he always filled with ease and dignity. In the year 1872 Bro. Bray assisted in the organization of the Vernon Association, and was annually chosen moderator of this association.

His manner in the pulpit was plain and unassuming, his subjects generally well suited to the occasion, his position well taken, and his reasoning correct and logical. Bro. Bray was not only successful as a teacher of the Scriptures, but pre-eminently so as a disciplinarian. He might truly have been called a peace-maker. If any of the churches in the associations above mentioned had a difficulty of a serious nature among its members, Bro. Bray was sure to be called upon to assist in its adjustment.

As a citizen, although Elder Bray was not strictly a politician, his advice and counsel were always sought, and freely given, when any political subject was agitating the public mind. In the year 1871 the parish of Vernon was created by act of the Legislature of the State, and in the organization of the parish Bro. Bray, in view of his declining health, accepted the office of parish judge by appointment. In November, 1872, he was elected to that office over a very strong opposition, and in 1874 he was re-elected for the same office by an overwhelming majority. The acceptance of this office necessarily caused Bro. Bray to locate in the town of Leesville, the seat of Vernon parish. Bro. Bray did not permit the duties of this office to interfere with his ministerial duties, but continued to labor in the cause of Christ as much as his health would permit. In the month of September last he was met on the road by a deacon of his church, by previous appointment, to accompany him to the Vernon Association. His health was so feeble that the deacon tried to prevail on him to return home, and not go to the association; but he would not be dissuaded from going—said it was his association, and that he must go; and he did go, and presided over that body with his usual ability, and for the last time.

For several years before his death, in most of his public prayers he would pray that he might be permitted to die at home, and in his right mind, which he certainly did, for it seems that Sister Bray had requested him some time before his death, in view of his declining health, that, in case his speech should fail him in his last moments, he would give her a sign or token of his confidence in his happy acceptance with God. This token was the raising of his hands. Up to within a few moments of his death his expressions showed that he was happy and perfectly resigned to go. His attending physician informed me that a few moments before he died his speech failed him, and that he raised his hands several times, thus giving evidence to the last moment of his abiding faith. As a minister he was wise and prudent; as a Christian he was humble, pious and benevolent; as a citizen he was active in promoting the interests of the community in which he lived; as a neighbor he was kind and accommodating; in a word, he was a worthy example for all.

PHILIP KOONCE.

MRS. L. O. BURRUSS, of Yazoo City, Miss., died on Tuesday, September 28, at ten A. M. She was distressingly sick for about twelve days. Sister Burruss was converted to God and joined the church in the year 1852, since which time she remained in connection with the church of her choice. She was a useful member of the church, and was steadily growing in piety and usefulness to the day of her departure to a better world—her eternal home. Sister Burruss was a woman of superior natural endowments, and of mental and moral culture of a high grade. She was a model Sabbath school teacher—faithful, prompt and well qualified for the pleasant task. Oh, how sadly will her presence and labors be missed! She was an earnest worker in the church. She tried to do her duty. She loved the church, and was willing to make sacrifices for the well-being of the same. She was the pastor's friend. He will miss her. She was a kind, affectionate mother. She leaves five children—three sons and two daughters. One son, the eldest, is a young man of promise in the profession of law at the Yazoo City bar. May they all follow their mother's footsteps into the church, to Christ, and finally to heaven. She had many friends and admirers, and all feel that her place will be hard to fill in the church and in society generally. But she has gone from the toils and sorrows of this life, we verily believe, to "the rest that remains to the people of God:"

> "Where the saints of all ages in harmony meet,
> Their Savior and brethren transported to greet,
> While the anthems of rapture unceasingly roll,
> And the smile of the Lord is the feast of the soul."

R. D. NORSWORTHY,
Pastor.

DIED, September 28, 1875, after a short illness, at his father's residence in Magnolia, Miss., CHARLIE E. GATLIN, aged fifteen years, two months and six days. The deceased was the son of John B. Gatlin. His mother died when he was but a child, with a sister younger than himself. A second marriage of his father supplied the place of a mother to the children so far as it could be done. In this relation Charlie was true to the prominent injunction in the religion of childhood and youth—obedience to parents. He was a remarkable boy; he had a fondness for the company of his parents that is seldom found in a boy of his age. Having been a member of the church about a year, in all his deportment he aimed to be governed by a pure morality. In business and at school he was brought into different kinds of company, but he was careful to maintain an unsullied reputation for honesty and truthfulness. Gaming and amusements on the Sabbath, which ruin the morals of so many boys, had no charms for him; he desired something more enduring. The punctuality with which he attended to business and met his engagements was remarkable in his character, and his hands found work to do without orders, for he offered his service in those kind and useful offices which may properly employ the time of youth.

J. W. SANDELL.

JOSEPH GARTHAN RICHARDSON was born in Marengo county, Ala., September 4, 1858, and died at his father's residence, in Kemper county, Miss., July 29, 1875, aged nearly seventeen years.

By this painful dispensation of Divine Providence the family of Bro. Richardson has been deprived of one of its most beloved inmates, and the community in which he lived of one who was greatly esteemed for his kind and genial disposition. At the time of his death he was not a member of the church, but a constant attendant upon the services of the sanctuary. When quite young, while his father was living in Alabama, he attached himself to the Methodist Episcopal Church South, but after the family removed to Mississippi, from some cause unknown to the writer, he failed to claim his place in the church. During his sickness, which continued two or three weeks, he manifested contrition, and said he was praying for pardon and salvation. His family and friends have strong hopes of his salvation. In the last stage of his sickness he was rational only at brief intervals, and hence said but little of his prospects. May God comfort the bereaved and stricken ones.

D. G. W. ELLIS.

HENRY A. WESTBROOK, son of William J. and Caroline Westbrook, was born June 10, 1858, in Amite county, Miss., and died July 31, 1875, in East Baton Rouge parish, La.

The catastrophe which brought this young brother to his sudden death was truly heart-rending to his family. His parents were gone from home (in the neighborhood,) and this son and a little brother were in a new ground cutting down timber. He had lodged a tree, and, after cutting the one on which it was lodged sufficient to cause it to break, he turned and attempted to escape, but was struck by this tree flying back, inflicting a mortal wound on his head and bruising his body. He only lived about an hour, but never spoke; and when his parents returned home they found their son a lifeless form. This youth obeyed the wise man's injunction: "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth," and when he was fourteen years of age united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South. This reminds us of the Savior's warning: "In such an hour as ye know not the Son of man cometh."

N. B. YOUNG.

SISTER MARY SIMPSON was born in Ireland, May 16, 1798; married Matthew Simpson in 1818; joined the church in 1830, and died in Covington, La., August 27, 1875.

Thus for forty-five years did this good woman show forth, by a faithful and upright life, the power of godliness. Regularly at church, gifted in prayer, consistent in walk and holy in heart, she was a pattern of all godly women and mothers in Israel. I never saw the power and divinity of our holy Christianity exemplified more wonderfully than in her death. Not only ready, but desiring to depart and be with Christ, she cried: "O heaven! heaven! heaven! I am happy in my journey." As I stood by the dying bed of this holy woman I could not but say: "What a tribute to our holy Protestantism!" Born among the zealots of Rome, nurtured among Catholics, she comes to die not merely in submission, but in holy triumph, giving the last best seal to the truth of her faith by a full and complete victory over death.

WALTER A., son of S. J. and Amanda Robinson, was born April 29, 1868, and died August 12, 1875. Walter was an obedient son to his parents, and said on his dying bed that he loved Jesus. May the father, mother and brothers live so as to meet little Walter in heaven.

N. B. YOUNG.

DIED, October 1, 1875, of congestion, MILTON HINKLE, oldest son of J. N. and Johnnie Lyles, aged five years, three months and sixteen days. "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

THE BRIDGE OF LIFE.

Across the rapid stream of seventy years
The slender bridge of human life is thrown;
The past and future form its moldering piers;
The present moment is its frail keystone.

From "dust thou art" the arch begins to rise,
"To dust" the fashion of its firm descends,
"Shalt thou return" the higher curve implies,
In which the first to the last lowness bends.

Seen by youth's mingle light upon the arch,
How lovely does each far-off scene appear!
But ah! how changed when on the onward march
Our weary footsteps bring the vision near!

'Twas fabled that beneath the rainbow's foot
A treasure lay, the dreamer to bewitch:
And many wasted in the vain pursuit
The golden years that would have made them rich.

So where life's arch of many colors lends,
The heart expects rich wealth of joy to find;
But in the distance the bright hope recedes,
And leaves a cold, gray waste of care behind.

A sunlit stream upon its bosom takes
The inverted shadow of a bridge on high,
And thus the arch in air and water makes
One perfect circle to the gazer's eye.

So 'tis with life: the things that do appear
Are fleeting shadows on time's passing tide,
Cast by the sunshine of a higher sphere
From viewless things that changelessly abide.

The real is but the half of life; it needs
The ideal to make a perfect whole:
The sphere of sense is incomplete, and pleads
The closer union with the sphere of souls.

All things of use are bridges that conduct
To things of faith, which give them truest worth;
And Christ's own parables do us instruct
That heaven is but the counterpart of earth.

The pier that rests upon this shore's the same
As that which stands upon the farther bank;
And fitness for our duties here will frame
A fitness for the joys of higher rank.

Oh! dark were life without heaven's sun to show
The likeness of the other world in this;
And bare and poor would be our lot below
Without the shadow of a world of bliss.

Then let us, passing o'er life's fragile arch,
Regard it as a means and not an end—
As but the path of faith on which we march,
To where all glories of our being tend.

Good Words.

Training for the Life-Battle.

POINTS THAT WANT LOOKING TO.

BY REV. DAVID MACRAE, OF SCOTLAND.

Paul Richter says: "The body is the breastplate of the soul." It is a vital truth that needs to be more widely proclaimed. We are only wakening up now to its importance—only beginning to recognize practically that body, soul and spirit, though distinct, are not independent; that none of them can be neglected without peril to the others; that the three together are the three-fold cord that is not quickly broken. The intellect is not physical, but in a physical world the intellect depends for its activity on its physical instruments. Napoleon attributed the loss of a battle to a badly-cooked dinner, which, by disturbing his digestion, had temporarily affected his brain and made it unfit for its usual work. It was like the breaking of an oar in a rowing match. The power was there, but its instrument was unfit for use.

Even the moral nature is dependent on the bodily state to a greater extent than most people believe until they think. Old Samuel Johnson used to declare that every man was a rascal when he was sick. It was putting it too strongly. But we have all observed how selfish and surly people are apt to become when in pain. How often toothache or even a bad cold in the head will make a cheerful person gloomy and peevish! How apt we all are, if under the irritating or depressing influence of sickness, to say and do things from which in the joyousness of health we would have recoiled. Sydney Smith averred that old friendships are often destroyed by toasted cheese, and that hard-salted meat has led to suicide.

A greater than Sydney Smith advised a sickly evangelist to use a little wine for his stomach's sake and his many infirmities. If Paul had lived in our day he would have seen reason to advise people to take less wine for their stomachs' sake, in order to get rid of their infirmities. But in either case the advice would have the same significance. Paul knew that if Timothy's digestion was impaired he would be less clear in head and less strong in heart, less able to see through the sophistries of heathen philosophy, and less able to fight the good fight of faith, than if enjoying robust bodily health.

Sometimes the very care that parents exercise over their children defeats its own end by depriving the children of facilities for developing their physical powers. Dr. Lyon Playfair, of Edinburg, said he had occasion to compare the health of two streets—one a street filled with well-to-do tradesmen, the other a tumble-down street occupied by the very poor. Yet the sickness and mortality in this poor street was far less than in the other. The explanation he found to be this: that the children of the poor were seldom or never within doors during the day, but spent their time running wild about in the street. The well-to-do tradesmen, on the other hand, had their children at school; and, being more genteel, kept them off the street. They gave them too little of the open air, too little exercise. The consequence was weaker bodies, more sickness and more death. Beware of that. Let the youngsters grow up not only spiritually, but physically, "children of the light."

A word now about one or two points apt to be overlooked in intellectual training. I do not so much refer to training in school as at home. Children are often made or unmade for school before they are sent. They are taught from infancy, at home, to be observant or unobservant, to remember or be forgetful, to be accurate, to be discriminating or undiscriminating, to be thoughtful or thoughtless, to be obedient and attentive, or the reverse; and these habits go far to determine whether the teacher gets a weapon of steel or a weapon of pasteboard to sharpen in school.

Habits are so vital an element that precocity, when it leads to their neglect, becomes a misfortune. How often we see the precocious boy come to nothing, and the slow boy, in the very same family, rise to distinction! Why is this? Generally because, with the precocious boy, the formation of habits was thought superfluous. He could get on without them. Whereas with the slow boy it was felt that unless pains were taken to train him to habits of diligence and concentration there was no hope for him in the competition of life. And so he is found growing in strength long after the other one's precocity and life prospects have faded together.

Here let me say to parents: If a child is slow, even if it be apparently stupid, don't betray your despondency over it. Don't call it a blockhead. Don't let it hear you say, as I once heard an otherwise prudent man say in the hearing of his boy: "It is no use trying to get that boy to learn." A boy who hears his parents say that will, if he wants to learn, be totally discouraged, and if he doesn't want to learn will gladly avail himself of the excuse that he hasn't the power. Don't be discouraged yourself. Slow growth is often sure growth. Some minds are like Norweginn pines. They are slow in growth, but they are knitting their fibers closely, they are striking their roots deep, and in the end they are the strongest and hardiest giants of the forest. Some of the greatest men—some even of the greatest wits—have been dull as boys. Dryden and Swift were dull as boys. So was Goldsmith. So was Gibbon. So was Sir Walter Scott. Napoleon at school had so much difficulty in learning his Latin that the master said it would need a gimlet to get a word into his head. Douglas Jerrold was so backward in his boyhood that at nine he was scarcely able to read. Isaac Barrow, one of the greatest divines that the Church of England has ever produced, was so impenetrably stupid in his early years that his father more than once said that if God took away any of his children he hoped it would be Isaac, as he feared he would never be fit for anything in this world. Yet that boy was the genius of the family, and but for him the existence of his father and the whole family would long since have been forgotten.

Another point in which both parents and teachers often err is in resorting too often to corporeal punishment—in the too ready use of what we in boyhood used to call "the taws." My views on this subject may be somewhat prejudiced from the circumstance that during part of my boyhood I was under a ferocious teacher, who lashed us unmercifully, and on the slightest provocation. I do not know if his treatment of us did any good; I know that to some of us it did a great deal of harm. No doubt Solomon said: "He that spareth the rod hateth the child." But we must remember that Solomon was a king's son, and probably got off very easily himself in the matter of punishment. If he had been in school with me, under the flagellator I spoke of, he would probably have expressed his dogma with a little more reservation.

Corporeal punishment seems necessary in some cases; but parents and teachers should use every possible effort to bring children under a higher law than the law of the lash. The whip should never be used to a horse or a dog if your purpose can be as well accomplished by kindness. The same rule applies with even greater force to children. Every time you get a child to do from a sense of duty—or, better still, from love—what it formerly did from fear of punishment, you gain an important point in its moral development.

Particularity in Prayer.

There is apt to be a cold, unmeaning generalization in our petitions at the throne of grace, as if there was no desire uppermost in the soul, and no one want more urgent than any other. If the question were asked of a number of persons, by one who had all gifts at his command: "What will you have? Here are wealth and honors and jewels and lands and books"—all the answers made would not be the same. So our hearts' experience and our desires vary. One is pressed sorely by pride, another by covetousness. One is thinking of some recent sin, or the besetment of one day differs from that of another. How natural that the prevailing thought should give shape and urgency to prayer.

Thus it was when Elisha prayed for the son of the Shunamite woman, and restored him alive and well to his mother. There was great particularity in that prayer—a wonderful concentration of the power by which it prevails. The sympathy of the man of God for the weeping parents repressed for the time every other feeling, and he went to the mercy seat burdened with the one desire. So when Jesus plead with his Father on behalf of his disciples: "I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil that is in the world." He seemed to forget all else in the fervor of his anxiety for that one end, and the answer came in the bestowment of a "hopeful patience" upon these disciples, by which they were fortified amid all their trials, and in the gift of a vigilance that disarmed temptation and kept their names unsullied.

A sermon of a Scotch preacher—John Livingstone—was the means of the conversion of five hundred persons in one day. But the other fact to be mentioned in connection with this is that many Christians had devoted the whole of the preceding night to prayer for this very object.

John Newton, the friend of Cowper, and the author with that poet of the "Olney Hymns," had a godly mother, whose prayers in his behalf in the nursery he remembered when, as a slave dealer, he became so debased in character as to be despised and cast out by the degraded negro savages of Africa; and as he lay upon the sand, seeking repose for the night, the earnest prayers of the mother were answered, and the profligate man became an eminent preacher and writer, whose works are valued by all the friends of evangelical religion.

Rescued by prayer, earnest and special—earnest because special—prayer that went up from the little room in London, and brought the song of joy in the night to the soul that had wandered so long and so far from God, amid the sands of Africa! Is there not in one example like this, even if it stood alone, encouragement for those who come burdened with one desire, or who, if they have more than one, who still come burdened whenever they make their requests known unto God?—Presbyterian.

An Effective Reproof.

Royal lips ought to excel in politeness and gracious words, for rulers may govern their subjects by example no less than by authority. They need to rule themselves and their tempers to prove their right to control others. Rumor has said ugly things of Victoria in recent times, but the following incident in her early reign was beautiful:

When Queen Victoria was about thirty years younger than she is now she was inclined to be very exact in the way of business, and more especially in the way of promptness to appointed times and places. Seven years a queen, four years a wife and three years a mother, she felt probably a more weighty dignity resting upon her than she has felt since.

And yet no crust of dignity or royal station could ever shut out her innate goodness of heart. All the time of which we speak the Duchess of Sutherland held the office of mistress of the robes of the British Queen, and on public occasions her position was very near to the royal person, and deemed of great importance. A day and an hour had been appointed for a certain public ceremony in which the Queen was to take part.

The hour had arrived, and of all the court the duchess alone was absent, and her absence retarded the departure. The Queen gave vent more than once to her impatience, and at length, just as she was about to enter the carriage without her first lady of honor, the duchess, in breathless haste, made her appearance, stammering some faint words of excuse.

"My dear duchess," said the Queen, smiling, "I think you must have a bad watch." And as she thus spoke she unloosed from her neck the chain of a magnificent watch which she herself wore, and passed it around the neck of Lady Sutherland.

Though given as a present, the lesson conveyed with it made a deep and lasting impression. The proud duchess changed color, and a tear, which she could not repress, fell upon her cheek. On the next day she tendered her resignation, but it was not accepted. It is said that ever afterward she was, if anything, more punctual than the Queen herself.

LATIMER'S CANDLE.—The martyrdom of the venerable Bishops, Latimer and Ridley, took place at Oxford, October 16, 1555. The two noble martyrs quietly stood on either side of the stake, while, as chained captives, they were firmly fastened to it. Ridley was supplied by Stipside with some gunpowder, as was Latimer. All being ready, a light was then brought and applied to the fagots. Bishop Latimer, turned and addressed his fellow-martyr those memorable, prophetic and imperishable words, which every Protestant should have engraved on his memory: "Be of good comfort, Master Ridley, and play the man. We shall this day light such a candle, by God's grace, in England, as, I trust, shall never be put out."

The flames arose, and with them the cry of Ridley: "Lord, receive my spirit!" Latimer vehemently cried out: "Oh, Father of heaven, receive my soul!" He appeared to welcome the flames, embraced them, bathed his hands in them, and soon died with little pain. Thus Latimer and his companion, like Elijah, entered heaven in a chariot of fire.

Men may die, but their words live on; and it is well, at the present time, to ponder over Latimer's last words as a sacred legacy. Can it be possible that at Oxford spiritual decay has commenced, and that scriptural truth is less appreciated than formerly? In nature, above all things, the water must be pure at the fountain; in like manner, at the fountain-head of learning, the school of the prophets, the truth, pure and simple, ought to be taught. The martyr's memorial, standing as it does at Oxford, should be a sermon in stone to remind professors and students of Latimer's memorial words.—The Rock.

SEVEN WAYS OF GIVING.—One way is to give something to every cause that is presented, without inquiring into its merits. This is a careless way, but better than none.

A second way is to give from impulse, as much and as often as love and pity prompt. This is adapted to those of the rich who are kind-hearted.

A third way is to save the cost of luxuries, and apply them to purposes of religion and charity. This is for the self-indulgent. With the frugal it is apt to be accompanied by narrowness, asceticism and pride in good works.

A fourth way is to make a special effort to earn money for benevolent objects. This is for lazy people.

A fifth way is to lay aside, as an offering to God, a definite portion of our gains—one-tenth, one-fifth, one-third or one-half. This way is adapted to all, but especially to the penurious, economical, the hard-working, the extravagant and the poor, whose gifts would be largely increased if it was generally practiced.

A sixth way is to give to God and the needy just as much as we spend on ourselves.

A seventh way is to limit our own expenditures to a certain sum, and give away all the rest of our income. This was John Wesley's way.

We should not confine ourselves to one way of giving, but practice and teach our children different modes, each in its proper place, as occasion requires.—Presbyterian at Work.

TRUTH is the shortest and nearest way to our end, carrying us thither in a straight line.

Religious Intelligence.

—Some of Mr. Sankey's hymns and tunes appear in the Malagasy hymn-book, just published in London. The Christians of Madagascar are reported to be very fond of singing.

—The foundation-stone of a new Methodist church was laid at Cape Town, Africa, recently. The Governor of the colony and many of the Legislature were present. Wesleyan Methodism is spreading in South Africa.

—A new Presbyterian chapel was dedicated in Tokio, Japan, June 19. The church was formed in 1873, and consists of 68 members. It employs two native preachers, and sustains 18 preaching-places in the city. The building is 50 feet long by 30 wide, and will seat 300 persons.

—W. A. P. Martin, D. D., who went out, under the appointment of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, as a missionary, about twenty years ago, now holds the position of president of the Government University in Pekin, China, and teaches foreign science and law to the Chinese students.

—The Baptists are about to try camp meetings. The New York Tribune says: "The Baptists, who held an open-air meeting on the Highlands of Martha's Vineyard, were so well pleased with the result that they are making arrangements for the permanent occupancy of the ground and an annual service."

—Sir Moses Montefiore, the Jewish philanthropist, who, at the age of ninety-one, has left London for Jerusalem to see what could be done to ameliorate the condition of the Jews in that city, was received with the greatest enthusiasm. The streets were blocked up by a crowd of twenty thousand people as he left the synagogue, all anxious to do him honor. He says that the Palestinian Israelites are eager to give their attention to any kind of remunerative employment.

—The seventh world's conference of the Young Men's Christian Associations opened at Hamburg, Germany, August 14. There are 102 associations in Germany, having an aggregate of 2,851 members. In Switzerland there are 52 associations, with about 400 members. France has about 40 associations, with 1,200 members. In England, Wales and Scotland there are 261 associations, 5 in Australia and the Sandwich Islands, and 1 in Japan, making in all 462 foreign associations, besides Belgium and Holland, from which there are no reports. In the United States and British Provinces there are about 700 associations, making a grand total of between 1,100 and 1,200 associations in the world, with probably over 100,000 members.

—At Puebla, Mexico, a new Methodist Episcopal chapel, neat and convenient, was dedicated a month ago. Rev. C. W. Drees, the energetic pastor, preached in the morning, and Rev. John W. Butler in the evening. Mr. Drees writes: "All passed off quietly, although there had been serious threats. The government furnished us ample protection. That we have been able, without any disturbance, to open a Protestant church side by side with a Romish one, and that in an ancient convent in the city of Puebla, is a great triumph—greater than you can well appreciate. Many people express their surprise at what we have been enabled to accomplish. It is the Lord's doing, and marvelous in our eyes."

JAPANESE INTEREST.—The Rev. James H. Ballagh, writing to the Sower from Yokohama, speaks of the great interest felt at Yedo in the hearing of the gospel. Several brethren of the Rev. Mr. Thompson's church have a dozen preaching-places in various parts of the city, and the other missions are similarly active. The newspapers are largely occupied with religious discussions, which are conducted entirely by unbaptized persons. Two papers are exclusively devoted to opposing the truths of Christianity—one published by a body of priests, and the other by the Department of Religion. The case of the two elders, Okeena and Ogawa, charged with violating the burial law of Japan, has not yet been settled, although they have been summoned to Yedo for a third hearing. Their crime consists in having intrusted the remains of a woman to an American Christian, instead of a Hindoo or Buddhist priest, for burial.

—It will be remembered, says the Independent, that one Rabbi Sneersohn, of Palestine, was in this country some three or four years ago, and delivered courses of lectures on the present condition of the Holy Land, in Washington and elsewhere. He has lately got into serious difficulty at Tiberias, where, according to the Freie Presse, he settled as farmer, and tried to get the Jews of Tiberias to follow his example. At first they agreed to it, but soon, fearing that they should thus lose the sums sent them from their co-religionists in Europe, they attacked him as an apostate reformer, and he was ordered by the rabbi to leave the city on pain of excommunication. This he would not do, and he was seized and brought before the rabbi in the synagogue, who declared him possessed by an evil spirit, and who imprisoned him in a dark room in the synagogue for five days, scarcely allowing him food enough to support life, and then dragged him out, whipped him, put him on an ass, with his hands tied behind his back, and chased him out of the city. He would surely have perished but for the care of the Franciscan monks. Rabbi Sheersohn being a naturalized American citizen, our American consul at Jerusalem appealed to the Turkish government, which arrested nine guilty men, including the Tiberias rabbi. The rabbi, however, having been allowed to visit his house to arrange some papers, fled to the mountains, and a mob of Jews broke into the prison and set the other eight free. The soldiers were too few to recapture them, and had all they wanted to protect our consul, who returned to Jerusalem and reported the occurrence to Washington.

Our Young People.

THE ROBIN'S WHISPER.

What do the robins whisper about
From their homes in the elms and birches?
I've tried to study the riddle out,
But still in my mind is many a doubt
In spite of deep researches.

While in the world is silence deep,
In the twilight of early dawning,
They begin to chirp, to twitter and peep,
As if they were talking in their sleep,
At three o'clock in the morning.

Perhaps the little ones stir and complain
That it's time to be up and doing;
And the mother-bird sings a drowsy strain
To coax them back to their dreams again,
Though distant cocks are crowing.

It may be that they speak of one autumn day
When with many a feathered roamer,
Under the clouds so cold and gray,
Over the hill they take their way,
In search of the vanished summer.

It may be they gossip from nest to nest,
Hidden and leaf-enfolded;
For do we not often hear it confessed,
When a long-kept secret (no) is guessed,
That "a little bird has told it?"

From Our Little Friends.

WHISTLER, October 5, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I see you publish letters written by children in the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE; and as I have never seen one from my home I thought I would write, and let you know what good things have been done in our little village, which is, as I suppose you know, five miles from Mobile, on the Mobile and Ohio railroad. We have quite a large Sunday school, numbering, officers and scholars, one hundred and fifty-six. My big brother is assistant superintendent. We have a good organ, and the Bishop sent us the dearest, best preacher in the Alabama Conference—the Rev. W. M. Winn. We children think so; and oh! we do love him and Mrs. Winn, and his two sweet little girls—Ada and Lelia. We had a revival two or three months ago, and I believe fifty-seven were taken into the church. All of Mamma class (Sunday school class, I mean) joined. I do pray we may hold out faithful. I mean to try and meet our pastor in the better land.

For fear of making my letter too long, I must close after I tell you of the ice cream supper given for our preacher. We made nearly $100. Sister says I had better stop or you won't want to hear from me again. Hoping that you may live many years yet to send your dear, blessed papers as a blessing to so many homes, and that we may all at last meet beyond the tide, and each have a crown and harp, I am

Your little Whistler friend,

CLINTON, LA., October 4, 1875.

MR. EDITOR: I see so many little girls and boys writing to you that I thought I would write too. We live on a farm in the country, near Clinton. I am a little girl eleven years old. We take your paper—the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE—and I like to read the Child's Corner, and, like all others, am very anxious to hear "How Barney Milked the Boys' Nest;" but I have almost despaired. I think Grandpa Goodale is trying to fool all of us little folks. Mr. Editor, I like all those nice little stories you have in your paper so much! Sometimes when I read them I feel like I wanted to join the church and be a Christian; but I am afraid I am too young. My ma says this is the time for me to give my heart to God. I am going to try and be a good Christian. Mr. Editor, I would like so much to be acquainted with you, for I know you must love all the little children, and we all love you. Now, Mr. Editor, good-by.

Your friend,

ANNIE E. ROBERTS.

MERIDIAN, MISS., October 8, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I see other little girls write to you, no older than myself, and I thought I would write you a few lines too. I am a little girl nine years old. I have six sisters and one little baby brother. We all go to Sabbath school, and little Eddie too. I love my teacher very much. One reason is because she loves all of us little girls. My pa is from home nearly all the time. My ma gets very lonesome sometimes. Pa says this is his last year on the Marion circuit. I don't know about that; but pa will soon know, for it is just two months until Conference. But one thing I do know: if we live we will be in the Mississippi Conference somewhere, where we will get the ADVOCATE. Ma says she would not be without it for anything. If I live until I am ten years old I will write to you again. Good-by.

Your little friend,

EMMA BROGAN.

CLINTON, LA., October 1, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: We take your paper—the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE—and I like to read the Child's Corner very much. I am a boy thirteen years old. I am making a cotton crop this year. I went to school until June, when our teacher was taken sick and quit teaching. I go to Sunday school. We have a large Sabbath school. Our preacher is a good man. He is our superintendent. His name is Mr. Campbell. I love our Sunday school, for there we learn to love God. I hope I will be able to help the missionary society this winter. We are all very anxious to hear Grandpa Goodale's story about "How Barney Milked the Boys' Nest." I hope he will soon be ready to finish his tale. Now, Mr. Editor, may God bless you!

Your friend,

THOMAS ROBERTS.

Three Rogues.

A peasant was taking a goat to Bagdad. He was mounted on a donkey, and the goat, with a bell tied around its neck, was following him. Three rogues saw this little company go past, and desired to enrich themselves.

Said the one: "May I carry off that fellow's goat in such a way that he shall never be able to ask it again of me?"

And the other cried: "Grant me the wit to rob him of the ass on which he is mounted."

"Oh, truly, what an exploit!" exclaimed the third. "What would you say if I mean so to despoil him of his clothes that he will actually be obliged to fast?"

The first rascal, following the traveler softly, by stealth took the bell from the goat's neck, fastened it to the ass' tail, and made off with his booty.

The man, still riding the ass, heard the sound of the bell constantly behind him, and never for one instant imagined that the goat was no longer there, till by and by he happened to turn round. Picture to yourself his astonishment when he could not see the animal that he had been taking to market to sell. Of every one who passed he asked news of his goat. Presently the second rogue met him, who answered:

"At the corner of yonder lane I saw a man running off, dragging a goat along with him."

The countryman jumped from his ass, saying:

"Please take charge of my donkey," and ran after the thief in the direction he supposed him to have taken.

When he had been running hither and thither for some time, he came back to find that neither ass nor keeper were to be seen. Our two rascals had already got far away, both well content with their booty. The third now awaited the simple man, leaning against a well by which the latter must pass. Then with loud wails he began to lament so bitterly that the loser of the ass and goat was led to accost a person who seemed thus afflicted. Approaching him he said:

"What are you grieving about? I am sure you cannot have had as much ill luck as I have had. I have lost two animals, the price of which would have made my fortune."

"Oh, but think what a loss mine is!" exclaimed the thief. "Have you, like me, ever let a casket full of diamonds fall into a well when you were told to carry them to the judge? I shall perhaps be hanged for theft."

"But why do you not go into the well?" asked the countryman. "It is not very deep."

"Alas! I am not clever enough," answered the rogue. "I would rather run the risk of being hanged than drown myself, which I should certainly do; but if there were any one willing to do me the service, I would gladly give him ten pieces of gold."

"Promise me those ten pieces of gold" cried the poor dupe, thinking the sum would more than repay him for the loss of his animals, "and I will get you your casket back."

No sooner said than done. He threw off his clothes with such rapidity, and descended into the well so quickly, that the robber saw at once that he would scarcely have time to possess himself of his spoil. The countryman having reached the bottom of the well without finding any casket there, came up again, and was speedily aware of his new misfortune. Thus clothes, ass and goat had all gone different ways, and their unlucky owner, with all his toil, could scarcely find people charitable enough to be willing to clothe him.—The Methodist.

A WORD TO THE LITTLE FOLKS. Little boys and girls, do you think of the poor these hard, chilly times—how much they suffer with cold and hunger? In our cities fuel is dear, clothing is dear, provisions are dear. Some poor people have scarcely a shelter, much less a comfortable place to lay their heads, and are ready to perish for lack of fuel, food and raiment. Some children are left fatherless, motherless, penniless, without any to provide for them—no one to care either for their bodies or their souls. Do you think of this, young friends?

Have you a heart to pity, a tear to shed, a dime to give? Are you provided richly with the comforts of life—a good house to live in, plenty of food and raiment, parents and friends to care for you? Above all, have you the blessed Bible to guide you to life eternal? And are you thankful? Who gave you these blessings—distinguished you thus above the miserable, suffering and often degraded poor? God? Yes, God; and what does God say? "The poor ye have with you always, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good." "Whoso stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry himself, and shall not be heard." "Blessed is he that considereth the poor." Do you hear this, little folks, what God speaks?

"I was a stranger, and ye took me in; I was naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me." "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

"Be thine the joy that angels know,
Who visit oft the abodes of pain,
With interest list to tales of woe,
And bid the dying live again."

WILSON, the celebrated vocalist, was upset one day in his carriage, near Edinburg. A Scotch paper, after recording the accident, said: "We are happy to state that he was able to appear the following evening in three pieces!"

Waiting to be Converted.

This is the avowed attitude of many in relation to certain plain duties which God requires. They cannot think of confessing Christ and of taking the vows of membership in the church until they have experienced a change of heart. They further look to this change as the means of enabling them to break off their sinful practices, and of conquering any vices to which they may be addicted. There are those who look upon professing Christians with a degree of superiority, and boast how much better they will be when they shall make the same profession. We call to mind the case of a distinguished lawyer and politician, whose life and example had been eminently irreligious. On his death-bed he seemed deeply to regret the past, and declared that if he recovered he would show Christians how they ought to live. His thought all along probably was that when converted he would do better than those weak and infirm creatures who were trying to be religious. He had been waiting, but lived on in sin until sickness arrested him. Perhaps he would have done better than others, but there was no opportunity to make his boast good.

The notion prevails, we fear extensively, among those who are making little or no effort to be religious, that they are to be passive until some overwhelming divine power overtakes them. Meanwhile they live as they list, disregard the law of God, give no serious heed to the demands of the gospel, and listen to the message of salvation as if they had no immediate personal interest in it. When urged to take some decided step, as publicly seeking salvation or uniting with the church, it is a sufficient answer that they do not feel like it. They expect the right feeling will come some day. Until then it is not for them to take any measures or to give themselves concern on the subject. They are waiting to be converted.

Some are looking to the next camp meeting, to the protracted meeting, or for the advent of some revivalist celebrity. There is not power enough in the every-day gospel and in the stated means to warrant them in trying to become Christians. Perhaps they are also looking forward to circumstances in their affairs when they shall have more time, fewer hinderances and more helps, and when it shall be comparatively easy for them to change their course. Young men must sow their "wild oats," but, of course, the seed is not to come up. Young maidens must enjoy the world and have a few years of sunshine before they become serious and self-denying. The motto and mad cry of youth—sometimes of middle age—is:

> On with the dance—let joy be unconfined;

They do not intend to put off repentance always. The time will come, as they imagine, when religion will be in order, and in accord with their tastes and desires. They also are waiting to be converted, but with a postponement determined upon to suit their own wishes.

It is hardly necessary to show how utterly unreasonable is this waiting, or how monstrously sinful. Certainly it is the offsprug of our depraved hearts, and not the teaching of the word of God. Our duties are of immediate obligation. Repentance and faith are demanded now, and we are to follow Christ at once. Matthew did not put off the Savior's command, as many now do, by waiting to be converted. Christ said: "Follow me;" and Matthew arose and followed him. The man who would first go and bury his father had this peremptory reply from the Master's lips: "Follow me, and let the dead bury their dead." Christ requires our obedience and love at once, and that we confess him before men now. Every hour of delay is an hour of aggravated guilt. Conversion is not made the condition precedent to those plain duties which the gospel demands of all. By the help of God every man can turn and live. The wicked can forsake his way and the unrighteous man his thoughts. All can repent and believe who will, and hence the immediate and unconditional requirement. We know what Christ said to the young man: "Go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come and follow me." What would he say now to those who are waiting to be converted before they act in any way, to those who go on in sin and take no steps whatever, with the avowed purpose of waiting until irresistibly moved and divinely regenerated?

But there is a class of seekers, sensitive and conscientious, who regard anything that looks to an open confession of Christ as almost sacrilegious until they are perfectly clear as to their change of heart. No man who is truly penitent and earnestly seeking salvation is as he was before his awakening. He is already greatly changed, and we believe entitled to a place in the church and to the privileges of her ordinances. It is his duty to confess Christ, to enter his service and to follow him. As he goes forward, still seeking for more light and for the witness of the Spirit, he will be doing what Christ commands him to do, and he will not ordinarily be long in reaching the comfort and assurance which he knows to be the privilege of the children of God. The Savior's direction is: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." He is not to wait to be converted, in the sense of regeneration, but to move at once in the line of self-denial, cross-bearing and the open confession of his Savior. We suspect that many penitent and earnest inquirers are hesitating about coming out for Christ, fearful to join the church, and keeping aloof from the ordinances. Let them act at once. If they are prepared to enter into covenant with their God, and to take Jesus as their Lord and Savior, they should by all means place themselves in the company of God's people, and enter upon the performance of every Christian duty. It is written: "Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord; his going forth is prepared as the morning; and he shall come unto us as the rain, as the latter and former rain unto the earth."

The sum of the matter is: We are not to wait for conversion, but to seek the salvation of our souls without delay. There is a present salvation for all. Every sinner has light and grace enough to enable him to pray and to seek. God is not limited by circumstances, by ordinary means, by anything save our own unwillingness to come to Christ. Waiting for some extraordinary or irresistible demonstration will be the sinner's ruin. The tide will never so rise as to force him from the moorings of sin. He will be left to perish unless he yields to the convictions which he has. Seeking conversion, we are to act in the plain matter of personal duty. Matthew did not wait to be converted before he rose up and followed the Savior. Neither should we. Christ calls us to love him, to obey him, to believe in him, and also to confess him before men. We are to wait for nothing, but to act, to go forward in the plain path, seek as we go; work for Jesus and his cause, praying as we work, and never rest until the spirit of adoption is ours.

Changing the Issue

MR. EDITOR: I do not propose to come between Dr. McFerrin and the "three stars." I mention his name only because his article offers a style of argument on the question of fraternity that is no less delusive than specious. I am sure that if fifty years of faithful service to the church as preacher, missionary to the Indians, editor, book agent, Confederate chaplain, missionary secretary, upon committees and boards, and Annual and General Conferences, in "courts and camp," and even on the field of battle—if such service be a good argument for fraternity between the two Methodist Churches, this venerable brother has the right on his side. The service of this present writer can offer no rebutting argument. But has the personality of the advocate any legitimate bearing on the question at issue? Dr. McFerrin is a great and good man, growing better as he grows older, and I for one respect and love him for his work and character's sake; but Dr. McFerrin is not the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He should distinguish between personal intercourse with like-minded men and the official relations of his church with a body (to which these other good men belong) that has done it a great public injustice, and persists in maintaining the righteousness of its action.

But I am getting away from my subject. I do not undertake to measure swords with the excellent doctor, but I wish to enter my protest against the style of argument which his paper necessarily suggests. He alone does not use it. There has been no small amount of it, put with the supremest fascination to gushing souls, in the Episcopal Methodist of Baltimore. The editor of that journal—a novus homo among Southern Methodists—overflows with it. It is, in effect: "Everybody, Democrats and Republicans, Northern soldiers and Southern, Ex-President Davis and Vice President Wilson, capitalists, builders of churches and founders of universities, are forgetting the animosities of the war, bridging over the bloody chasm; and therefore the Methodist Episcopal Church South ought to make peace with the Methodist Episcopal Church on its own terms, notwithstanding it yet upholds the righteousness of its unexcusable repudiation, in 1848, of a solemn covenant which gave origin to the other church."

But, pray, what has the war, or its issues or sequences, to do with the real questions between these churches? Obliterate that history—secession, war, their concomitant events—blot them all out, even to the abolition of slavery—and leave nothing of new controversy between the churches since the year 1860; then, in this imaginary state of affairs, suppose the Methodist Episcopal Church to come to our church, just as it did in 1870 and 1874, claiming that all its previous conduct toward us, from the day of our organization to date, was right—to be forgotten or only to grace the pages of future history—would we not be justified in declining fraternity on these offensive terms? If so, what has war or peace—the Northern wooing or the Southern forgiveness, whereby the bloody chasm is to be bridged—Bunker Hill centennials or fourth of July centenaries—what, under the sun, have they to do with the question at issue between the two Methodisms? I protest against their being brought into the field of argument. The Methodist Episcopal Church is not the United States government—not yet, at least, quite—and my loyalty to it is not affected by my sense that that church did to my fathers and has done me an immense wrong, that it yet persists in vindicating.

The government may treat me fairly, though I have been a rebel; may need me, and thus hold out hope of advantage to compensate me for fealty; may—nay, must, first or last—admit to its legislative councils and administration my own representatives and those in sympathy with them; and these facts, in connection with that other supreme fact, that I am environed by that government—cannot get out of it, cannot help myself—these may all impel me to the cultivation of a reconciled spirit; and perhaps out of this may grow utter satisfaction with and pride in my government. These are some of the reasons for forgetting what I may yet think to be the great wrong that government did me in the days of blood. To it I must be a friend or an enemy. Indifference is out of the question in the relation I hold to it. But not so as to the Methodist Episcopal Church. Fraternity with it is neither a logical sequence of political reconciliation, nor an alternative of enmity to the government or hatred to the Northern people. I can be a good citizen, a fully reconciled rebel, and yet never cross hands with a Northern Methodist. But perhaps were this opportunity to offer, and I to decline, because he is such, I may not be counted a very liberal Christian. Granted; therefore I will so control prejudice, so drive it all away (as our venerable secretary has done,) that I will go around and shake hands generally—give both hands, do it with gusto and gushing, and in perfect sincerity of personal cordial feeling. But does this require that I as a representative man—peradventure a high official in the church—should set my face against my church when it declares, over and again, that recognition of the Methodist Episcopal Church as in fraternal relations can follow only when it has retracted officially the calumnies uttered against my church? There need be no connection between my good citizenship—my quelled rebellion—and my urging and aiding formal fraternity with the Methodist Episcopal Church. There may be the most pacific spirit and interchange of comities and neighborly courtesies between me and my right-hand neighbor, a Baptist, and my left-hand neighbor, an Episcopalian; and yet this is no reason that I should expect fraternal intercourse between my church and theirs. If I cannot be a good, pacific, forgiving, loyal citizen—living in the South, and a Methodist—because my church does not fraternize with the Methodist Episcopal Church, why is not the argument good against Romanists and Episcopalians living at the North, and yet never afflicted with solicitations to fraternity? If my argument seems absurd, its absurdity is paralleled by that style of argument I protest against, viz.: that the pacification of the country—the drawing of the lines of citizenship "closer and closer together"—a most desirable result—is an argument now to Southern Methodists, more than in 1848 and 1860, for a fraternization that ignores the deliberate, judicious, often and formally expressed platform of righteous principles on which my church proposes and desires, in all sincerity of Christian love, to meet the Methodist Episcopal Church. This kept in view, no man perhaps—at least very few—in the Church South but would, as warmly as does Dr. McFerrin on his platform, advocate.

FRATERNITY.

Dr. McFerrin's Semi-Centennial.

We take a brief report of this interesting occasion from the Western Methodist:

At the recent session of the Tennessee Conference Dr. McFerrin preached a semi-centennial sermon by request of his brethren. The American, in its report of the occasion, says: "The church was crowded to its utmost capacity. In the pulpit sat many prominent ministers, while the space around was completely filled with the brethren. Chairs were placed in the aisles, and these too were soon occupied. Many were compelled to stand up for want of room. The sermon was in commemoration of the fifty years Rev. Dr. McFerrin had spent in the ministry. After prayer by Rev. G. T. Henderson, portions of Scripture from Joshua and Peter were read. Dr. McFerrin took as his text the sixteenth and seventeenth verses of the first chapter of the Second Epistle of Peter. After commenting on the time in which that portion of the Scripture was written, he delivered a strong argument in favor of Christianity and the truth of the gospel. He then went briefly into the history of Methodism, and described the progress it had made since 1739. He followed it in America, and showed how it had increased. The first Methodist church in this country was erected in 1769. The Tennessee Conference, he said, was first organized in 1812, and held its first meeting in Sumner county. After a few remarks on the schools and other departments of the Methodist Church, Dr. McFerrin gave a brief account of his own life, hoping they would not consider him egotistical. He was received as a preacher in 1825, and has therefore served fifty years in the ministry. The doctor gave a detailed account of the life of a Methodist minister of the early days, and commended it as an example to the young ministers of to-day. He had been a member of ten General Conferences, and not a single person now lives who voted for his admission into the ministry. Of his early companions only two remained—G. T. Henderson and H. B. North. He spoke feelingly of those dear friends who, he said, were in heaven. Many of them had been prominent in the ministry, and now only three or four remained, and soon they too must go. He hoped he had done his duty. His motto had ever been: 'Do your duty and trust God for the rest.' To his aged brethren he would say: Labor faithfully to the end. He gave some excellent advice to the young preachers. He was opposed to ministers decking their wives and daughters in jewels. By doing so they lost the confidence of the people. The whole sermon was full of interest, and many parts so touching that the congregation was moved to tears."

Under Way.

Dr. Granbery, writing to the Richmond Christian Advocate, October 11, says:

The Vanderbilt was launched one week ago amid pomp and rejoicings, and started on its voyage to-day. The noise of the hammer has not quite ceased, but the lecture-rooms are ready to be occupied with comfort, and most of the professors met their classes this morning. The past week was necessarily consumed in matriculating and classifying the students. I cannot give you the number, but suppose that it approaches one hundred and fifty. Twenty of these are preparing for the ministry, and they will be joined by others in a few weeks. Some of them pursue the theological course exclusively; the majority take also certain tickets in the academic schools. They are conveniently and comfortably accommodated at Wesley Hall. The price of board is $10 per month, including fuel, but not lights and washing. They furnish their own rooms at a cost of $16 or $20 for each person. They pay no tuition fee, but the incidental fee of $5 is collected from every student. Dr. Young expects to be in condition to furnish them financial help before the close of the present session. I am pleased with the appearance of these young brethren. A few of them were put to work yesterday in our churches of Nashville and its suburbs, all the pastors being absent in attendance on their Conference. I have preached twice at McKendree, which has a membership of eight hundred. It is a large building, neat and well furnished within, but its exterior is unprepossessing. Methodism in Nashville has not yet waked up on the question of church architecture. They have no excuse for want of progress in this direction since the war, because they have been called on to contribute largely to the extension of the Publishing House and to the purchase of the site of the Vanderbilt. Methodism is strong in this city and vicinity in numbers, wealth and all other resources.

A Personal Statement.

From an advanced sheet of the Sunday School Magazine for December we take the following:

My work as Sunday school secretary began with the August number of the Visitor in 1870; it terminates with the December issues of the Magazine, Visitor and Little People. After thoroughly testing the matter by a four years' residence in Nashville, it became evident that my wife could not endure the climate of middle Tennessee. Under competent medical advice I removed my family to Oxford, Ga., in November, 1874. In this village my editorial work has been done during the past year. At the time of my removal, and repeatedly afterward, I took occasion to notify the proper persons that my resignation would be promptly and cheerfully tendered whenever it should be thought at all important that I should have my residence in Nashville. September 10 I received from the secretary of the Book Committee a note, dated September 7, embodying the following resolution, passed August 30, at a called meeting of the members of the committee residing in Nashville:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of the Book Committee that Rev. A. G. Haygood, Sunday school secretary, should reside in this city, and should have an office in the Publishing House."

I could not move back to Nashville—a matter perfectly understood by all concerned. My duty under the circumstances was transparently clear, and on the day the committee's note reached me I forwarded my resignation to the Rev. R. A. Young, D. D., chairman of the Book Committee. September 14 the resident members of the committee were called together again, when my resignation was accepted, and the Rev. W. G. E. Cunnyngham, D. D., of the Holston Conference, was elected Sunday school secretary of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

And thus, by providential circumstances and the action of the Book Committee, August 30, I have been relieved of a grave responsibility—pressing on me incessingly for five years and a half—which, of my own motion, I should not have felt free to lay down. It is a satisfaction to me to know that I have done my best, and that my work has been to me, at least, a pleasure and a blessing. If good has been done to others, God be thanked!

The retiring secretary is under too many obligations to recount them here. He has had many friends and helpers. They deserve and receive his heartfelt gratitude. His successor, Dr. Cunnyngham, is known to the entire church as a man of ability, attainments and devotion; besides, he is a true lover of the children and of the children's Savior. Dr. Cunnyngham will put his whole heart in his work, and will deserve what we trust he will realize—very great success. God make him tenfold more skillful and useful than his predecessor has been!

ATTICUS G. HAYGOOD.
OXFORD, Georgia.

The New Sunday School Secretary.

We find in the Knoxville Age the following interesting sketch of our honored successor, the Rev. W. G. E. Cunnyngham, D. D.:

The importance of the position to which Dr. Cunnyngham has been called moves us to furnish a sketch of his life for the benefit of the seven hundred thousand Methodists who are to receive their weekly rations of Sunday school food from his hands.

Dr. Cunnyngham was born in Knox county, Tenn., December 3, 1820. He is a son of the Rev. Jesse Cunnyngham, who was the presiding elder of Knoxville district at the time of the doctor's birth. The subject of our notice was licensed to preach and joined the Holston Conference in 1843. He went to China as a missionary in 1852, and was superintendent of the China missions.

He returned to the United States in the autumn of 1861, and spent the winter in New York city. In the spring of 1862 he went to Kentucky, where he taught in Science Hill Academy, at Shelbyville, for three years, remaining away from Tennessee because he would not take the oaths required by Federal officials.

He reached Abingdon, Va., in 1865, and was for eight years a professor in Martha Washington College; during which time (1867-8) he acted as assistant secretary of the Foreign Board of Missions. In 1873 the doctor was appointed to the pastorate of Church Street charge, in this city, which position he surrenders after Conference, to be held on the twenty-tenth of October.

We take pleasure in introducing Dr. Cunnyngham to the three hundred and fifty thousand Sunday school children connected with the Southern Methodist Church. If they regret, as well they may, the loss of their former secretary, we assure them that they have cause to be thankful that he has such a worthy successor. We will "go his security" that he will not be found wanting in anything. In all the trusts committed to him he has been faithful, and no matter what the emergency, he has been equal to it. Sympathetic in his nature and child-like in his disposition, he will make just such a leader as the little "soldiers of the cross" will delight to follow.

Knox county is greatly honored in having one of her sons called to so responsible an office. He is one of the "products" in which she justly feels a pride. For ourselves, and in the name of the entire people, we tender to Dr. Cunnyngham hearty congratulations because of the distinguished honor conferred, and sincerely trust that he may have a long, useful and happy life.—Sunday School Magazine for December.

The China Mission.

I have to-day had the pleasure of a few hours' conversation with Sister Lambuth, of the China mission. She is full of her work and devoted to it. Her heart and head and tongue and hands are all in the mission work of China. It would do any one good to learn from her what has been done and is now being done by our missionaries in China. O how much is to be done if that people are Christianized! Who will help to do it? Who will send their money to help those who have gone to do the work of teaching that people the gospel of Christ?

They need money to build chapels and school-houses, to print books and tracts, to pay teachers, Bible women and preachers. Native men and women can be employed to great advantage in this work. Living there is cheaper than here, but yet it costs money to live there as well as here. I hope the private members and ministers of the Mississippi Conference will awake and consider this subject, and be found contributing of their means for the assistance and support of our Bro. and Sister Lambuth. I would most earnestly urge those in the Brookhaven district to pay the amounts subscribed for the cause of missions before our Conference meets. Every dollar subscribed is needed for both foreign and domestic missions. The Lord will make the liberal soul fat, and loveth the cheerful giver.

H. H. MONTGOMERY.
OCTOBER 14, 1875.

WESLEY MONUMENTAL CHURCH, GEORGIA.—Rev. A. W. Wynn, A. M., pastor of the Wesley Memorial Church, Savannah, Ga., says the New York Christian Advocate, is now on a brief visit to this city and vicinity. On Monday morning he was present at the preachers' meeting, 805 Broadway, and was introduced, and delivered a brief and winning address, in which he furnished some interesting facts concerning his new church enterprise.

The following resolution was adopted by the Boston preachers' meeting on Monday, October 4:

Resolved, That it has afforded us great pleasure to welcome to the platform of our preachers' meeting our Rev. Bro. Wynn, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and we have greatly enjoyed his frank, fraternal spirit, as revealed in his interesting address; and we commend him and his cause to the favor of the Northern people as eminently calculated to restore the harmony between the two branches of American Methodism, which is so desirable.

BISHOP CAPERS' LETTER GENUINE.—On yesterday we were honored with a call from Dr. Henry D. Capers, of Oxford, Ga., who, to the gratification of his friends as well as those of his father—Bishop Capers, of precious memory—is spending a few days in the city. Dr. Capers assures us there is no doubt of the genuineness of his father's letter, as published last week in the Neighbor—that he is well acquainted with Col. C. B. DuPre, of Clinton, Tenn., and that he has seen the original letter and cannot be mistaken. He is unable to account for the error—putting Clinton, S. C., for Clinton, Tenn. The doctor is in fine health, and about as cheerful as the lad Henry was twenty-four years ago.—Christian Neighbor, Columbia, S. C., October 9.

PRESIDENT JOHNSON, of Whitworth Female College, gave us a brief call last week. We were gratified to learn that the college has opened finely, and that it has already nearly as many boarders as the buildings can accommodate. The president and trustees are planning to put up a large brick building, at an early day, in addition to the spacious and handsome structures already completed and in use.

OUR YOUNG FRIEND, Philip Werlein, the great piano dealer, after a sixteen months' tour of business and recreation in California, is again at home, and at his old place of business on Bronne street. The Pacific slope appears to have agreed with him marvelously well.

DR. W. H. WATKINS, of the Mississippi Conference, was in town last week and staying over Sabbath, and preaching for the Morean Street brethren. He was looking fresh and vigorous.

BISHOP KEENER reached home on Friday, the twenty-second instant. The Missouri folks seemed to have treated him well, as he appears in fine health.

THE REV. C. F. EVANS, pastor at Arkadelphia, Ark., we learn from the Southern Standard of October 16, is again on the street; and, though still using his crutches, is rapidly improving—will soon be ready for work again.—Western Methodist.

Scandinavian Bethel.

MR. EDITOR: Passing by the Scandinavian Bethel, at No. 13 Esplanade street, we were glad to find it reopened, and that Bro. C. P. Petrini, a young man of faith, ability and energy, had been appointed to fill the place of chaplain, lately held by the lamented Rudin.

This Scandinavian work is of so very great importance that it should strongly appeal to the active sympathy and substantial aid of the brethren of all the churches. When it is remembered that the Scandinavian seamen in large numbers annually visit our port, and that the Bethel is the only institution where they can find reading, receive religious instruction and attend divine service, it seems imperative upon our Christian community to provide the necessary means for its support. Let the lovers of the Lord Jesus sustain the work for which the noble Rudin sacrificed so much and labored so well. While in the reading-room we observed that it was furnished with a fine book-case, but that upon the shelves of said book-case there was scarcely a book; and so it has occurred to us that it would be quite the thing for the Christians of New Orleans to visit the Bethel at their earliest convenience, and each to carry a good book and leave the same with Bro. Petrini, to the end that his now empty book-case may be filled with reading matter for the sailors.

JOHN T. SAWYER.

NEW ORLEANS, October 17, 1875.

REV. JOHN GOODE, of the Irish Wesleyan Conference, from Ballygrune, the place from which Philip Embury and Barbara Heck emigrated to America, is in Canada, soliciting aid to complete two Methodist churches in that part of the country.

THE smallest dew-drop that rests on a lily at night holds in itself the image of a shining star, and in the most humble, insignificant person something good and true can always be found.

TENNESSEE CONFERENCE.

The Tennessee Conference held its session in Fayetteville, October 6-12. Bishop Wightman presided.

Admitted on trial—Philander W. Gavin, William T. Nesbett, George W. Johnson, Elijah Dickens, Herschel B. Reams, Charles E. Heriges, John F. Corbin, Benjamin H. Johnson, Clayton H. Yates, Samuel M. Griffin, Walter R. T. Lambuth, James H. Roberts, Zachary W. Moores, William H. Doss, John W. Bryant. Discontinued—Thomas S. McFerrin, W. G. McMillan, John N. Parrotte, Claudius Buchanan. Petway, Memphis Conference; J. P. McFerrin, St. Louis Conference; T. O. Summers, Jr., Alabama Conference.

All the preachers passed in the examination of character except S. M. Merrill, who withdrew from the connection, and John W. Hanner, Sr., who was "suspended from the Christian ministry in the Methodist Episcopal Church South." White members, 40,766; colored, 2; local preachers, 331; infants baptized, 687; adults, 2,039; Sunday schools, 361; teachers, 2,579; scholars, 17,876; necessary for claimants, $3,000; collected, $2,008.15; for missions, $6,342.84. The next session is to be held at Columbia, Tenn.

The Sunday school meeting on Friday evening, writes Dr. McFerrin, was an occasion of interest. The farewell missionary meeting on Saturday evening was most memorable. Our young brother, the Rev. J. J. Ransom, the missionary to Brazil, made a fine address. A spontaneous contribution of about $150 was made for his outfit, and many prayers went up for him. His esteemed father was in the chair when the secretaries gave the young preacher his charge, and blessed him in the presence of the people. Much is expected from this newly projected mission to Brazil.

LOUISVILLE CONFERENCE.

The Louisville Conference, says a correspondent of the Nashville Christian Advocate, closed its thirtieth session October 12, at half-past two o'clock P. M. We had a very pleasant session. Peace and harmony prevailed throughout. The attendance was large, and though the reports show that too many received but a meager compensation for a year of faithful toil, yet the brethren were strong in the Lord, and resolved on another year of toil in the harvest of the Master. The spiritual reports were rich—God had blessed the efforts of his servants with a rich harvest of souls. The preaching at Conference was good to the use of edifying. The kind people of Cloverport opened wide their doors, and the Conference was at home. The Conference passed a resolution of thanks for their "large and elegant hospitality," which but faintly expressed the appreciation of the Conference and visitors. Bishop Doggett presided to the satisfaction of all; and, though sick on the Sabbath, preached to the delight and edification of all who heard him.

THE POWER OF LOVE.—A father in good circumstances, in one of the Eastern States, had a reckless son who disgraced himself and brought shame upon his family by his misconduct. From home the prodigal went to California, to become even more reckless. For years the father heard nothing from him. A chance offering, he sent this message to him: "Your father still loves you." The bearer sought him long in vain. At last he visited a brothel, on his search, and there recognized the erring son. He called him out, and at the hour of midnight delivered his message. The gambler's heart was touched. The thought of a father that loved him still, and wanted to forgive him, broke the spell of satan. He abandoned the game, his companions and his cups, to return to his father.

THE London Christian World gives an account of a literary curiosity in the form of "the smallest Bible in the world," which, it says, has just been issued by Mr. Henry Frowde, of the Oxford University Press Warehouse, 7 Paternoster Row, London. Upon taking up the book no one would suppose that it contained more than the New Testament. A fair-sized waistcoat pocket would hold it well. It is printed in a most minute though clear type, on tough, unbleached India paper of extreme thinness and opacity, measures just four and a half by two and three-quarter inches, and weighs, when bound in limp Morocco leather, less than three and a half ounces, and can be sent through the British post for a penny.

FRANK SINCERITY, though no invited guest, is free to all, and brings his welcome with him.

LET our great concern be to be "holy as he is holy;" and then, then only, are we sure to enjoy him "in whose light we shall see light." And be the future state of existence what it will, we shall some way be happy there, and much more happy than we can now conceive; though in what particular manner we know not, because God hath not revealed it.—Mason.

A NEW CITY DIRECTORY.—A well-compiled directory, such as the one last published by Soagis for 1875, is of almost universal necessity in the stores and offices of New Orleans. We have never had a better directory than his for this city, but the publisher himself promises to surpass it in his New Orleans Directory for 1876. He will soon call upon our merchants for advertisements and subscriptions, and commence the canvass. The publication will involve much labor and expense, and the publisher relies upon the liberality of many subscribers to reimburse his investment. The advantages of advertising in this work are known to our business men, and they will only help themselves when they help make a good City Directory.

MR. THOS. HUNTER, of Philadelphia, whose admirable series of Lithographs has done so much toward awakening interest in our National Celebration, has published a picture containing the five Principal Buildings on one sheet, also a Bird's-Eye View of Fairmount Park, with the buildings in the foreground. Nothing could more fully supply the information sought by those interested. The Quintuple represents all the buildings on a large scale, with sufficient detail to convey to the mind some of their magnificent proportions; the Bird's-Eye View is by far the most faithful representation of the Park yet printed. Every building whose plan and position have been determined, every ravine, fountain and tree, is correctly drawn.

These pictures are indorsed by the Centennial Board of Finance, who afforded the publisher every facility to make them accurate, and who have distributed them largely in every civilized country on the globe. Aside from their merit as works of art, their interest now in prospect of the Celebration, and as mementoes when that event is over, entitles them to a place in every household.

Mr. Hunter's list now comprises the following: 1. Art Gallery; 2. Main Building; 3. Horticultural Hall; 4. Machinery Hall; 5. Agricultural Hall; 6. Bird's-Eye View; 7. Bonbo (Nos. 1 and 2 on a sheet;) 8. Triple (Nos. 1, 2 and 3 on a sheet;) 9. Quintuple (Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 on a sheet.) All uniform price, 50 cents each. Sent free by mail, securely packed. Prices in quantities, $4 per dozen, and 40 cents for postage; $30 per hundred; $200 per thousand; and less in larger quantities. Sent C. O. D. by express or on money order.

FOR FIFTY YEARS

SWAIM'S CELEBRATED PANACEA

HAS attracted the notice of the most eminent and leading members of the medical profession, in this country and Europe, by its great power and excellence in curing what were considered incurable cases of disease, where the patients have been almost destroyed by SCHOFULA, etc.; and Prof. VALENTINE MOTT, of the New York University, Profs. DUSON, REYNOLDS and CHAPMAN, of Philadelphia, and many other physicians of celebrity and eminence, gave, over their own signatures, letters recommending it, and certifying to its great merits. It has been occasionally advertised during this long period, and thousands of families throughout the United States recommend and use it. The Laboratory is under the direction of Dr. FRANKLIN SWAIM, who has devoted his attention and skill in its careful preparation during the past twenty-five years, and not a bottle put up that is not worth ten times its cost to the patient. It is perfectly safe for the most diseased and debilitated, and will always relieve where it will not cure. In all Cases where the Blood is not Pure it should be Used Freely.

Among the Roses.

The following excellent article on the roses we find in the Country Gentleman, from the facile pen of Daisy Eyebright:

The rose family is very numerous, and rare varieties are added to the list yearly by the careful hybridization of the florists of the United States and of Europe. Even a condensed list of the best varieties will embrace several hundred names of the various classes of roses, which have been divided into twenty-six sub-families; but of late years they have been classed as Summer or Garden Roses, which blossom only once in the year; the Remontants or Hybrid Perpetual, which bloom two or three times in the season; and the Monthly Roses, of more continuous bloom.

The garden roses are mostly hardy, and comprise the Austrian Brier, Ayrshire, Double Yellow, Damask, York and Lancaster, Provence, Moss, Scotch, etc.

The Hybrid Perpetuals are more numerous than any other class, because the florists have paid particular attention to their culture for the past twelve or fifteen years. Among their most desirable varieties are:

Alexandrine Bachmeteff—A rich red, free bloomer, strong and hardy.

Anne de Diesbach—A brilliant carmine; very large and showy.

Baronne Prevost—Lovely rose-color, perfect and unsurpassed among pink roses.

Beauty of Waltham—Bright carmine; large and full; blossoms late.

Cardinal Patrizzi—Deep velvety crimson; a splendid variety.

Caroline de Sansal—Pale flesh color; large and handsome.

Coquette des Alps—White, with blush center; a free bloomer.

Duke of Edinburg—Scarlet crimson, shaded to maroon color.

Edouard Morren—Deep cherry rose; very large and distinct color.

Eliza Bælle—White, slightly tinted with rose; very fine.

Gen. Washington—A fiery crimson; a superior rose.

Jeanne Hanet—Purplish crimson; blooms in clusters.

La France—Interior of petals white, exterior a rosy lilac.

Mme. Alfred de Rougemont—Almost white, pinkish center.

Mme. Charles Wood—Dazzling crimson.

Mme. George Paul—Dark rose, shaded with bright pink.

President Lincoln—Dark crimson; large and full.

Queen Victoria—Very pale blush; a free bloomer.

Xavier Olibo—Velvety black, shaded with amaranth.

All of these varieties are suited to garden culture, and will bloom in the early summer and the late autumn, giving great satisfaction to the cultivator.

The third class embraces the Tea roses, Noisette Bourbon and China roses, which bloom monthly; but, as many of them are not hardy, they require protection in a cold climate. Many new varieties of this class have been sent out in the past three years, which are very beautiful, both in hue and form, but space fails me to enumerate them. All the Tea roses are tender, and must be housed in winter, excepting in the southern latitudes.

Roses require the richest of plant food, and can never exhibit their charms in their greatest perfection unless they are supplied with it in the shape of thoroughly decayed horse or cow manure, the former being the best, as it possesses the most stimulating properties. Apply it around the roots, even now, and you will be surprised at the luxuriant growth of the young shoots. Mulch them also with coarse stable litter, and they will send up strong, fresh shoots from the roots, upon which are always found the handsomest flowers. Take a shovelful of fresh horse manure, and pour over it three pails of warm water, and let it stand during the day, and at night turn it upon the roots of the roses. Do this weekly for a month or more, and then you will learn how much the rose craves the richest of plant food.

After the Hybrid Perpetuals have ceased to bloom, cut back all their flowering stalks, and do not let one rose form a seed-bud, as it exhausts the growth of the plant. Trim off also all the weak side shoots, and do it with a vigorous hand, until it seems as if your bushes were half denuded of their foliage. But from the seeming ruin will spring the most beautiful buds and blossoms you ever raised. So prune with an unsparing scissors, trusting in the fair promise of the autumn to repay you for the sacrifice of the fresh branches. Now is a good season to start roses from cuttings. Select young wood of this year's growth, but so seasoned that it will break off readily, and not be too soft to strike root rapidly. Make the cuttings about six inches in length, and plant them in pots filled two-thirds with a rich compost, with an inch or two of sand upon the top. In this insert the cutting firmly, and keep it perfectly wet all the time. Place a glass over the cuttings, and shade them from the sun for three or four days.

The rose is a prey to slugs, bugs, and aphis or green fly, and it must be daily watched to avoid their depredations, which not only take from it both foliage and buds, but also make it a thing of horror, for green worms and flies are excessively disgusting. So we must closely watch each leaf and bud, and scatter air-slaked lime most plentifully all over the branches while they are wet with morning dew. Two, or at the most three, applications are always successful, and the slugs are vanquished; but the rose bugs require a hand-to-hand battle to rout them entirely; so, with a pail of boiling hot water in one hand, we shake the bushes with the other hand over it, and the bugs are disposed of for this season.

If the rose bugs and the aphides are very numerous, however, they can receive their quietus by sprinkling them with a syringe and the following solution: Take one and a half pints of whale-oil soap, a pint of fine salt and twelve gallons of warm water; mix it thoroughly and apply it freely, holding up the branches so that the wash may touch both sides of the leaves. Next morning sprinkle them with pure water, and hardly a bug will dare show itself. There are two crops of the slug—one comes in May or June, and when the larvæ are developed they fall to the ground and burrow in it, and remain in a chrysalis state until August, when they appear as moths and lay another crop of eggs; but if you succeed in destroying the first crop in toto you will not be troubled again.

Why Some People are Poor.—Silver spoons are used to scrape kettles.

Coffee, tea, pepper and spices are left to stand open and lose their strength.

Potatoes in the cellar grow, and the sprouts are not removed until the potatoes become worthless.

Brooms are never hung up and are soon spoiled.

Nice-handled knives are thrown into hot water.

The flour is sifted in a wasteful manner, and the bread-pan is left with the dough sticking to it.

Clothes are left on the line to whip to pieces in the wind.

Tubs and barrels are left in the sun to dry and fall apart.

Dried fruits are not taken care of in the season and become wormy.

Rags, strings and paper are thrown into the fire.

Pork spoils for want of salt, and beef because the brine wants scalding.

Bits of meat, vegetables, bread and cold puddings are thrown away when they might be warmed, steamed and served as good as new.—Cottage Hearth.

Minnesota Sweet Corn.—I planted two and three-fourths acres of turf with a good coat of manure plowed under. The corn didn't come up good nor appear to grow well; but it finally attained a height of from three to five and a half feet, and averaged about four and a half feet, but I harvested from that piece of ground two hundred and sixty-five bushels of ears of corn. I planted the rows three and a half feet apart, and the hills in the rows were from twelve to twenty inches apart. Cultivated in the usual way.—H. F. Fordham, Le Roy, N. Y.

Gravy for Veal or Chicken.—Put a tablespoonful of butter in a hot frying-pan. When it begins to brown dust a tablespoonful of flour into it, stirring constantly with a spoon; add salt and pepper; then one pint of milk—cream, if you have it; let it boil five minutes and pour over the dish of meat.

Temptation rarely comes in working hours. It is in their leisure time that men are made or marred.—Dr. W. M. Taylor.

PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.

THIS GIN has been in use for the past two seasons, and some recent improvements added. It obviates all friction in the cotton box, prevents the rolls from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint than any other Gin in use. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, and in consequence the market price of the cotton is enhanced materially. This increased value, given by length of staple and extra production of lint, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every one hundred bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

—When it is not convenient to take a lock apart to fit a new key, the key blank should be smoked over a candle, inserted in the keyhole, and pressed firmly against the opposing wards of the lock. The indentations in the smoked portion made by the wards will show where to file.

—A patent has been granted for an India rubber shoe, or rather overshoe, for horses, as it is called by the Scientific American. The shoe is made and lined precisely in the same way as the "Arctio overshoe," and in fact presents no difference, save in its shape and in its manufacture, from the best quality of India rubber. Horses suffering from cracked or contracted hoof are soon cured by the use of these elastic shoes. The cost of rubber shoes, as compared with those of iron, is about one-third more, and their weight is about forty per cent. less.

—When plants are found in a wild condition, departing widely from their parent forms, it has been common to regard them as hybrids. But since so much has been known of the ability of plants to leap from one form to another, without intermediate grades, and in conformity to some hidden law of evolution, it is not safe to regard these forms as hybrids. It is, indeed, the bearing on this question of evolution that makes the question of hybridity in this connection one of any value. There is often found in different parts of the country a form of raspberry which is neither Rubus strigosus nor Rubus occidentalis, but has much in common with both. This has been named by Peck Rubus neglectus, and is supposed by some to be a hybrid, but by others as a mere evolution, in the manner suggested, from some primordial form. Mr. W. Saunders, the well-known editor of the Canadian Entomologist, has been trying experiments with Rubus, by hybridizing the Black Cap (R. occidentalis) with the red kinds; and the result is varieties very similar to that named as R. neglectus by Prof. Peck. This goes far to favor the hybrid origin of some of these plants in a state of nature. In making his observations Mr. Saunders noted that if he cut off the petals of the raspberry flowers they were avoided by bees and produced no fruit. This, if confirmed, will be a great fact for those who contend for the almost universal influence of insects in fertilizing colored flowers, and that the main use of colored petals is to attract insects to them. We say "if confirmed" this will be a valuable fact, because if hybridization is so easy between these wild species, and if the flowers are incapable of fertilization, but must have the pollen brought to them by bees, the wonder will not be that we find wild hybrids, but that the species are able to preserve their separate identity and do not fall into a general intermixture all around. And then it is so easy to repeat this experiment that "if confirmed" is a safe expression. It may be that the failure to fruit was from some other cause than the absence of petals and of insect visitors. At any rate, a repetition of these experiments can do no harm.

FROM ONE TO SIX HORSE.

THE MOST SUBSTANTIAL WAGONS MADE!

There are several reasons why all should buy the above Wagon: First. They are made of the BEST SELECTED TIMBER, the same being cut at the proper season of the year, piled under sheds, properly dated, and allowed to remain there from three to five years. Second. The wood-work is shaped by the latest improved machinery, put together by the BEST WAGON MECHANICS IN THE WORLD, and are the best ironed and painted Wagons in the market. Third. Their thimble skeins, made of select iron, are set by patent skein setters, and weigh from four to twenty-five pounds per set more than any other, thereby making a perfect running Wagon, which will not break. Fourth. They are the only Wagon in which the SLOPE-SHOULDER SPOKE is used; hence they have the best wheel, which is actually the foundation of the Wagon, and should be carefully examined by persons purchasing. Fifth. They are sold only by responsible parties, and every Wagon is warranted; while the Studebaker Bros. are practical workmen, and attend to their business personally; hence the superiority of their work over all others.

On Saturday the controlling element in the market at the opening was the unsettled condition of foreign exchange, and its irregular and heavy decline, which materially interrupted operations; but a moderate business was, nevertheless, done during the morning, partly at previous rates and partly at a reduction of ⅛c, after which the movement became more active, and the sales of the day embraced 4,600 bales. On Monday the market opened under the unfavorable influence of a decline of 1-16d. at Liverpool, where the sales were 10,000 bales, while the movement was checked by brokers claiming further concessions of ⅛@¼c. Under these circumstances the business during the morning hardly exceeded 1 000 bales, but later in the day parties came together more freely, and the entire business proper summed up 5 650 bales. Prices exhibited considerable irregularity. On Tuesday the demand was checked during the morning by light offerings, and several brokers withdrew to await the opening of additional samples; but later in the day the movement became quite active, and resulted in sales of 7,300 bales, which is the largest business reported this season. Prices exhibited a good deal of irregularity. Middling sold as low as 12⅝c., but the ruling rate for that grade was 12¾c.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 17,550 bales, against 12 800 for the corresponding time last week and 9,400 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 143,024 bales, against 116,279 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 84,907 bales. The increase by the reports per telegraph is 89,269—666,930 against 577,661. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 11,698 bales to France, of 40,225 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 22,012 to Great Britain. Advertisers' Directory

OF THE

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

VIRGINIA CITY, Oct. 26.—A fire broke out about daylight in a dwelling on a street near Taylor, a point in the southwestern limit of the business and thickly settled portion of the city. It spread rapidly, extending eastward toward the ravine, in which are situated the works and mills, and several prominent mines, and reaching as far as F street northward.

Recourse was had to blowing up the buildings; too late, however, for in a few minutes the depot and hoisting works were in flames. The latter were recently completed at an expense of several hundred thousand dollars, and were the finest on Comstock lode. The fire continued to the north and east, and the partially completed mill of the California Mine and the Consolidated Virginia mill were soon in flames, which spread still further north to the Ophir hoisting works, destroying them also, which was about the limit of destruction in that direction, the fire dying out for want of fuel.

From Taylor street, near which the fire originated, it spread southward against the wind, destroying the branch office of the Bank of California, Wells, Fargo & Co.'s express office, and everything else in its line. At this point the Gould & Curry works were in imminent danger, but were fortunately saved. In short, nearly the entire business portion of the town is in ashes. Hotels, churches, county buildings, newspaper, telegraph and express offices were all swept away.

Over ten thousand persons are rendered homeless. The wind is piercing, and much suffering is anticipated before temporary shelter can be procured. It is impossible to conjecture the loss. The destruction of the mills and hoisting works above will probably entail a loss of $1,000,000. Fortunately the shaft of both the Ophir and Consolidated Virginia were bulk-headed, and the fire was kept out of the mines. The Ophir men say that possibly their loss may be less than at first supposed, as the building was of light frame, and may have burned without destroying the machinery.

SELMA, ALA., Oct. 26.—The State Grange Fair opened this morning and continues five days. There were a large number of visitors and a great many articles on exhibition.

A fire to-day destroyed two large business houses. Loss, $15,000; insurance slight.

PORTLAND, ORE., Oct. 26.—There was a light vote polled. Mr. Lane, (Democrat,) for Congress, is probably elected by 1,200 majority.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 27.—Thanksgiving Proclamation.—In accordance with a practice, at once wise and beautiful, we have been accustomed, as the year is drawing to a close, to devote an occasion to humble expression of our thanks to almighty God for the ceaseless and distinguished benefits bestowed upon us as a nation, and for his mercies and protection during the closing year. Amid the rich and free enjoyment of all our advantages we should not forget the source from whence they are derived, and the extent of our obligations to the Father of all mercies. We have full reason to renew our thanks to almighty God for favors bestowed upon us during the past year by his continuing mercy. Civil and religious liberty have been maintained, peace has reigned within our borders, labor and enterprise have produced their merited rewards, and to his watchful providence we are indebted for security from pestilence and other national calamity. Apart from national blessings, each individual among us has occasion to thoughtfully recall and devoutly recognize the favors and protection which he has enjoyed.

Now, therefore, I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States, do recommend that on Thursday, the twenty-fifth day of November, the people of the United States, abstaining from all secular pursuits, from their accustomed avocations, do assemble in their respective places of worship, and, in such form as may seem most appropriate in their own hearts, offer to almighty God their acknowledgments and thanks for all his mercies, and their humble prayers for a continuance of his divine favors.

In witness whereof I have herewith set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed. Done at the city of Washington, this twenty-seventh day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-five, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundredth.

U. S. GRANT.

By the President:
HAMILTON FISH,
Secretary of State.

COLUMBUS, O., Oct. 27.—Official Vote.—For Governor: Hayes, 297,831; Allen, 292,264; Hayes' majority, 5,549. For Lieutenant Governor: Young, 297,031; Carey, 287,968; Young's majority, 9,063. Highest Prohibition vote, 3,630.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 27.—Wells, Fargo & Co. sent $1,000 to Virginia City, and ordered their agents to forward supplies from all points free. The Board of Brokers sent $5,000.

The insurance on the burnt district will reach $1,000,000. No loss of life is reported.

MEMPHIS, Oct. 27.—A sharp shock of an earthquake was felt here to-night at half-past seven o'clock.

HOLLY SPRINGS, October 27.—A severe shock of an earthquake, accompanied with a loud rumbling, was felt here at half-past seven o'clock this evening. No damage heard of.

DENVER, Oct. 28.—Additional returns from the late election show heavy gains by the Republicans, who will have at least two-thirds of the Constitutional Convention.

NEW YORK, Oct. 29.—The House of Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church concluded its session this evening, after creating two bishops, one for the diocese of China and the other for the diocese of Africa. The Rev. Samuel I. J. Schereschewsky was elected Bishop of China, and the Rev. Dr. William C. Clark, of Georgia, Bishop of Africa.

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—Moody proposed that November 4 be appointed a day of fasting and prayer for God's blessing, and carried by a standing vote of three thousand people. It was unanimously resolved to invite all the churches in America to unite in observing the day.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 1.—The National Gold Bank and Trust Company did not open to-day. The bank has been considered weak since the failure of the Bank of California.

FOREIGN.

BERLIN, Oct. 27.—The German Parliament met to-day. The Emperor was absent on account of indisposition. The speech was read by the minister of State. His majesty says that, so far as human judgment can discern, peace is more assured now than at any time during twenty years preceding the reconstruction of the empire.

Stonewall Jackson.

RICHMOND, Oct. 26.—This day has been made memorable in the annals of Richmond, and lent an additional luster to the proud name of Virginia, by the tribute of its people to the memory of its gallant warrior, patriot and Christian soldier, Gen. T. J. (Stonewall) Jackson, on the occasion of the formal inauguration of the statue, by Foley, presented to Virginia by a number of English gentlemen.

The imposing pageant and interesting ceremonies combined to make the grandest demonstration ever witnessed in Virginia. The attractiveness of the State fair and this extraordinary event have brought together people from every direction within the borders of the State, as well as from sympathizing communities beyond. This fact was evidenced on all sides by the crowded condition of the streets, the holiday appearance of the city, the many thousands of spectators along the line of march, and the general enthusiasm that prevailed.

Decorations of every description were to be seen in every direction, embracing evergreens in every conceivable shape, festooning of the national colors, appropriate inscriptions, banners and flags of many nations, the Federal and English colors predominating.

At an early hour the principal streets began to present an animated appearance, the crowds augmenting steadily until the procession moved, by which time the sidewalks along the route of march were crowded with surging masses, and every available place where a view could be had was filled with eager spectators.

The procession occupied one hour and a half in passing a given point, moving rapidly, and was composed of all the city military, infantry and artillery, visiting companies from Norfolk, Petersburg, Charlottesville, Staunton, Williamsburg and North Carolina. The corps of cadets of the Virginia Military Institute, with their battery, the cadets of the Agricultural and Mechanical College, at Blacksburg, Va., the surviving members of many commands of the late war, including those of the famous Stonewall Brigade, Catholic societies of Richmond, the students of Richmond College, singing societies, etc., besides a large cortege of carriages and other vehicles, containing many distinguished individuals. General Joseph E. Johnston was chief marshal, and Gen. Harry Heth his principal assistant.

Notwithstanding Gen. Heth's letter, the colored organizations decided not to turn out, although it was believed they would up to the last moment.

Arrived at the capitol, the procession was massed in the vicinity of the veiled statue and the platform from which the oration was to be delivered, when, after a prayer by Bishop Doggett, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, Gov. Kemper made an introductory address, in which he spoke in most feeling terms of the occasion and in eulogy of Gen. Jackson. In one of his references to this tribute to the memory of a great man he said: "Let it endure as a perpetual expression of that world-wide sympathy with true greatness which prompted so noble a gift from Great Britain to Virginia, and by its preservation attest the gratitude of the Commonwealth to these great-hearted gentlemen of England who originated and procured it as a tribute to the memory of her son." He concluded by introducing Rev. M. D. Hoge, of the Presbyterian Church, as the orator of the day. Dr. Hoge, after an eloquent exordium, in which he alluded to the hallowed memories suggested by the occasion, and the inspiring scene before him, discussed what he considered three elements of the secret of Jackson's power and influence:

1. In the fact that he was the incarnation of those heroic qualities which fit their possessor to lead and command men, and which therefore always attract the admiration, kindle the imagination and arouse the enthusiasm of the people.

2. His was the greatness which comes without its being sought for its own sake—the unconscious greatness which results from self-sacrifice and supreme devotion to duty.

3. The purity and elevation of his character as a servant of the most high God.

Dr. Hoge eloquently and ably illustrated and enforced these points by striking incidents in the life of the great chieftain. In conclusion he alluded to the condition of the country, and said that a soldier's parole was a sacred thing, and the followers and comrades of Stonewall Jackson would be true to their parole and to the Union of these American States; but at the same time that Union can only command their heart's love when it returns to those great fundamental principles of the constitution which gives to all of the States equal rights with Massachusetts and New York.

He concluded by summoning the spirits of the heroes and statesmen of the past, whose bronze forms greet the eye on Capitol Hill, to speak words of wisdom and patriotism for the guidance of the present, and quoted from Jackson's words breathing the same hallowed lessons. The oration was frequently interrupted by enthusiastic applause. As the last words of the orator died away the veiling of the monument was suddenly withdrawn, and, amid the thundering cheers of the multitude, the thrice of musketry and booming of cannon, the bronze figure of Jackson greeted the gaze of the assembled thousands. At this point Gen. Page, of Norfolk, introduced to the crowd Gen. Jackson's only child, a little girl of thirteen, who was received with deafening and continued cheers. The ceremony was concluded by the singing of Luther's grand anthem, "A Castle of Strength is our Lord," by nearly one hundred and fifty male voices, accompanied by the combined bands that were in the procession. The city to-night is brilliantly illuminated, and there was a gorgeous display of fireworks in Capitol Square.

The Island of Cozumel.

This island, situated on the eastern coast of Yucatan, distant fifteen miles, in latitude 20° 30′, and famous as the site of some of the grandest and most impressive ruins and monuments of a prehistoric race to be found on the continent of America, is at present the object of considerable interest in New Orleans, as well as in the city of Mexico, with reference to its colonization. Attention has been attracted to this island on account of its favorable location, the salubrity of its climate, and the great variety and value of its productions.

The island is forty-five miles long, and from fifteen to eighteen miles in width; its surface is generally level, but rising in places to an elevation of seventy feet. The rocks consist of shell lime, and make lime of the finest quality. The soil is a black, sandy loam, very productive and easily cultivated, the machete being the only implement in use by its present occupants.

Its temperature during the winter half of the year ranges from 60° to 75°; during the summer from 75° to 90°. The nights are invariably cool and pleasant, rendering a blanket necessary to comfort. The rainy season is the most pleasant, rain falling less frequently than in New Orleans, and continues from the middle of May to September. During the remainder of the year there are occasional rains, generally sufficient for agriculture.

The island is surrounded by the sea, rarely without a good breeze, invigorating the system, and rendering the heat, even in the sun, not unpleasant. The coast is beautiful, and the water so clear that the bottom can be seen at a depth of forty or fifty feet, and affording good bathing on a clear white sand. Storms are believed to be less frequent than in New Orleans. The timber consists principally of hard wood, some durable as iron, unsuitable for plank, but making good scantling and heavy building timber. The well-water is good and abundant—wells from fifteen to thirty feet deep, and water about the same temperature as our eistern-water, and may be drank freely without burdening the stomach, probably from containing carbonic acid gas.

Its wild animals are principally racecoons, foxes, opossums, wild cattle and hogs; among birds, turkeys, pheasants, pigeons, doves; fish and turtle of fine quality are abundant. Musquitoes and flies are very troublesome in the woods during the rainy season, but rarely in the clearings or houses, so that generally musquito bars are not used.

Rats, mice and ants are troublesome, but there are no dangerous reptiles.

The houses are built of an easily-worked stone, or a concrete of lime, sand and small rocks, sometimes of poles or palm-leaf, which appear to answer a good purpose and last well.

The products are those common to the tropics, including cocoanuts, pine-apples, coffee, lemons, limes, oranges, sugar, bananas, plantains, figs, grapes, tamarinds, arrowroot, cashew nuts, and a variety of wild fruits. Ginger, vanilla and arrowroot grow wild, and produce largely if cultivated.

Corn and sweet potatoes are raised almost without cultivation. The first will make two crops a year.

Cattle, hogs and poultry require no care except that necessary to keep them domesticated.

Cows of improved breed sell at $15 to $18, equal to those valued at $75 to $100 in New Orleans.

Tobacco, equal to Havana, affords three cuttings a year—about two thousand pounds to the acre, if well cultivated.

Hens lay and hatch all the year round.

There are several harbors that, with some improvement, would be amply sufficient. At San Miguel a good wharf with twelve feet of water can be built fifteen feet from shore at slight expense.

The present population is eight hundred, seven-eighths of whom are Indians—a peaceable, temperate and moral people.

The climate is very healthy and peculiarly adapted to persons with weak lungs. Old age is common. As an instance, a man eighty-four years old travels every month eighteen miles, with a load weighing one hundred and eight pounds.

Labor costs fifty cents a day, without board, but is uncertain. Clearing land in the usual manner costs about $8 an acre.

By a law passed by the Mexican Congress, May 31, the executive is authorized to enter into contract with individuals or companies for the introduction of immigrants, and to subvention such companies or individuals by a payment of a stipulated amount for each family landed or settled under the provisions of the law, and to make advances to contractors for companies equal to one-half of the subvention agreed upon, to aid in carrying out the contracts.

To colonists land will be sold at moderate prices and on a convenient credit. Provisions for one year will be furnished, and advances made for the purchase of utensils and construction of buildings. They will be exempt from military service; from all taxes except municipal; from payment of certain duties and interior taxes on provisions, furniture, implements, machinery, materials for building, etc., for ten years, and all vessels bringing ten families to any Mexican port will be exempt from port dues.

Mr. McAllister, 192 Julia street, whose notes, taken during a residence of two months, have supplied the above particulars, will give any further information in his power personally. He himself was so well pleased with the island and people as to purchase a place, and is preparing to return.—Bulletin.

JARDINE & SON, of New York, are erecting one of their largest organs, costing $25,000, in Dr. J. Hall's magnificent church on Fifth avenue. It will contain fifty speaking stops, among which is a thirty-two feet open Diapason, a Tuba Mirabilis, a Vox Humana, Trianlophon, and many other new stops, some of which Messrs. Jardine obtained in Europe. The action is operated by the pneumatic lever, making the touch as light as a piano, and by a new system of knobs the performer can make all the changes of orchestral effect without removing his hands from the key-boards, and grand crescendo and diminuendo effects produced by a series of pedals, from its most delicate "Dulciana" to the immense effect of its combined forces of Diapasons, Mixtures and Reeds. The blowing is also a novelty, as the heavy wind pressure and immense consumption of wind would take six men to blow. A steam pump forces water into a tank one hundred feet high, and which is then available to drive a hydraulic engine of the largest size. The organ is creating a great sensation in musical circles, and is to be opened in a few weeks.—Benham's Musical Review.

From the Work.

SPRING CREEK CAMP MEETING.—Mr. Editor: This camp ground is located about thirty-five miles from Alexandria, in a southwesterly direction, and near the road leading from Texas to the mouth of Red river. Around it stands a forest of beautiful pines, and near by runs Spring creek, a stream of clear and never-failing water.

I suppose the congregation on Sunday at eleven o'clock numbered at least six hundred persons. While the congregation was smaller than in former years, the behavior was better. It seemed to be the desire and effort of all who went to maintain good order. The gospel was preached to the people in its purity, and with some degree of edification and success. There were twenty-one conversions and three additions. Most of these, I believe, were already members of the church, and some few were the children of Baptist parents, and will, no doubt, join the Baptist Church. The church was greatly revived and refreshed during the meeting. Many good and faithful workers were in attendance and did good service. They exhorted, held prayer meetings, prayed in the altar, led in singing, and in many other ways helped forward the work of saving souls. With such a host, ministers could hold a successful meeting anywhere.

The presiding elder had arranged his work so that he could not be there, and on account of severe family afflictions Bro. Fred. White, preacher in charge, was not able to attend. There were two local brethren present—Bro. Monroe, from Sugartown, and Bro. Cudd, assistant preacher on Spring Creek circuit. Two traveling ministers were also in attendance—Bro. Johnston, from Evergreen, and your correspondent. Rev. Mr. Kelly, a Protestant Methodist minister, preached on Sunday night. Bro. Johnston was put in charge of the meeting, and prudently conducted it to its close.

Though the camp meeting was announced as strictly self-supporting, yet the tenters took care of many who went there unprovided for. The boarding tent, kept by Mr. Dyer, afforded all accommodations necessary for such an occasion at very reasonable rates. I cheerfully recommend him to any who wish to attend there the coming year. With him they will find a bountiful table, comfortable lodgings, a lot for their horses, and plenty of corn and fodder to feed on; and, withal, they will find a most pleasant and attentive host and hostess.

Your correspondent had a delightful time, and hopes it may be his privilege to attend there again.

ROCKY MOUNT CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: I send you notice of what I have been doing since I wrote you last. We have had some good meetings, and received seventy-eight members into the church. This has been a healthy and prosperous year in the churches on this circuit. Peace prevails among us. There has been much work done in repairing, and most of our churches are very comfortable. I think we shall be able to run our Sunday schools through the winter season. This circuit, spiritually and financially, will average with any circuit on this district. Our presiding elder has labored faithfully to bring the entire district to a higher standing.

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has not been forgotten. I shall bring all dues to you at Conference. B. L. SELMAN.

RAMAH, ALA., October 2), 1875.

SUMMIT DISTRICT CAMP MEETING.—Mr. Editor: By request of the presiding elder, Rev. A. B. Nicholson, I send for publication in the ADVOCATE a short account of this meeting. At our District Conference, held in July, it was resolved to locate a camp ground somewhere in the Summit district. This was accomplished through the exertions of an effective committee of laymen, and the place selected is situated in the corporate limits of Magnolia, about one-half mile from the depot. A shed sixty by forty feet was built, and the meeting commenced on the seventh of October. It lasted five days. There were present ten ministers, all of whom live in the bounds of the district.

There were several disadvantages to contend against—a great amount of sickness throughout the community, the conflicting claims of another place for the camp meeting, lateness of the season and hurried preparations. Still we had a good meeting—a time of refreshing and edification. The congregations were large and attentive, and the decorum could not be excelled. Many presented themselves at the altar for prayer as seekers of religion, and everything seemed to be working favorably for great results; but the pressing claims of appointments to be filled, and of work impeded by sickness, constituted a justifiable reason for closing the services. This, however, is only the commencement of what is designed to be permanent, and it is expected that the annual convocations at Magnolia camp ground, already hallowed with the presence and blessing of the Master, will be seasons of great spiritual good to all who attend.

THOMAS PRICE.

FAYETTE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: It may gratify our friends and brethren abroad, as it cheers our hearts at home, to know that there has been a decided improvement in the spiritual state of the church on this circuit. "Bethany" is much used; and the sentiment, "Nearer, my God, to thee," is as prevalent as the song is popular. Meantime God has added to our numbers forty-seven souls. We trust they are "such as shall be saved." W. B. LEWIS.

"Honor to Whom Honor."

MR. EDITOR: It was my privilege, on the second Sabbath in September, to be with Bro. Morris, of the Pollard circuit, at a protracted meeting held at Powellton, a charming little community on the Pensacola and Louisville railroad. The meeting steadily increased in interest as long as I remained and after I left. On Sunday the neat little church was full to overflowing, and I never preached to a more serious and attentive congregation. The Spirit of the Lord was present in answer to the prayers of the church, the altar was crowded with penitents, and the occasion was one of enjoyment and profit to me, and I trust to others.

The Sabbath school seemed to be in a flourishing condition, and its management presented some points of special interest. The genial and whole-souled superintendent, Bro. Roberts, of the Presbyterian Church, has succeeded in infusing something of his own earnestness into the entire school. He notified the children that in the afternoon he would take up a collection for the benefit of the afflicted community at Powell's Point, three miles below Milton, who were suffering so terribly from the ravages of yellow fever. It was intended to confine the collection entirely to the Sabbath school, but the large congregation that assembled in the afternoon insisted on a participation in this expression of sympathy, and the result was the sum of $18, which was, on my return home, delivered to Mr. William Pierce, living just opposite Powell's Point, for disbursement.

Bro. Morris had taken up his missionary collection in the morning, and went beyond his assessment.

I write simply to record this instance of generous sympathy on the part of the Powellton Sunday school, and to commend to those who have committed to them the training of children the idea contained in the reason given by Bro. Roberts for wishing to take up the collection: "It may not be much benefit to the sick, but it will be a great benefit to the children themselves." The occasion seemed to be seized upon with avidity as a favorable opportunity to use in educating children to give in the right direction—a very important department of education, Mr. Editor, and one which it is to be feared was somewhat neglected by our forefathers in the education of some of their children. "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord, and that which he hath given will he pay him again." May God abundantly verify his promise in this instance. I have great faith in its fulfillment with such training.

J. O. ANDREW.

N. B.—The fever has entirely disappeared from Powell's Point, about thirty per cent. of the population having died, according to the best information I have been able to get.

THE PARADISE OF TEARS.

BY WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

Beside the River of Tears, with branches low,
And bitter leaves, the weeping willows grow;
The branches stream like the dishevelled hair
Of woman in the sadness of despair.

On rolls the stream with a perpetual sigh;
The rocks moan wildly as it passes by;
Hyssop and wormwood border all the strand,
And not a flower adorns the spirit land.

Then comes a child, whose face is like the sun,
And dips the gloomy waters as they run,
And waters all the region, and behold,
The ground is bright with blossoms manifold.

Where fall the tears of love the rose appears,
And where the ground is bright with friendship's tears
Forget-me-nots and violets, heavenly blue,
Spring, glittering with the cheerful drops like dew.

The souls of mourners, all whose tears are dried,
Like swans, come gently floating down the tide,
Walk up the golden sands by which it flows,
And in the Paradise of Tears repose.

There every heart rejoins its kindred heart;
There, in a long embrace that none may part,
Fulfilment meets desire; and that fair shore
Beholds its dwellers happy evermore.

SECOND PAPER.

There are some things which everybody knows—things never questioned—things as well known to the ignorant and the uninformed as to the more wise and the better informed. One of these things universally known is this: That there is in this world, beneath the heavens, one thing, and but one, supremely calculated above all other things to make human breaches wider and deeper. It matters not how such quarrel or difference came about—who was to blame or how much. If the breach, quarrel or contention exist, from any cause, there is one thing, and but one, supremely calculated to increase it. And everybody knows what that thing is the moment it is named.

That thing is war—any kind of war, retaliation, striking back, quarreling back. It may be a war of guns, of swords, of words spoken or written. The breach may pertain to individual persons, families, communities, churches, States or nations. It is deepened and widened universally by strife, retort, accusation, flinging back either words, missiles or war weapons of any kind.

Again, there is one and but one thing in the world, alike well known to all men, and never disputed, supremely calculated above all other things to heal breaches—any kind of social, civil or ecclesiastical breaches, no matter how such breaches came about, or who may be to blame, or how much to blame for their origin or existence.

That thing is fraternity, or a kind and brotherly or religious yielding of extreme legal rights in case of disagreement; or a religious regard for the opinions, views and feelings of others, though they may be in the wrong.

Against this principle of practical, unselfish fraternity there is and never was but one objection set up among men. That objection is retaliation, reprisal, retribution, returning evil for evil. How far this principle of hate, of sticking for full and exact legal rights, of non-fraternity, conforms to the religion of the Bible, or to the written rules of our church, he that runs may read.

The due and proper enforcement of rights by firm but moderate means is by no means an infringement upon the above principles. The reason for this is that good men may and frequently do differ as to respective rights, because men are never good judges in their own cases. And of all human rights, those between churches should always be enforced or asserted with far greater leniency and forbearance, and less peremptoriness of demand, than any other. A church will often—indeed I will say a church will generally—gain more by losing a case without contention, than by gaining it with.

And yet since these things are so, and so plain, and so completely beyond refutation, is it not strange that the plain, broad question of fraternity with a sister church is, as it really seems, an open question among us? And has it come to this that we are debating among ourselves whether we will be fraternal, or how far we will be fraternal, with our brethren of the Methodist Episcopal Church? And some persons undertake to give no lengthy reasons why we should not be fraternal with that church, as if there could be such possible reasons on Christian grounds.

Every man, it seems to me, must see at a glance that in case of social breaches of this sort, or of any sort, there are but two possible courses to be pursued. The one is kindness, forbearance, fraternity; and the other "the fist of wickedness," revenge, retaliation. I will not debate questions that are not debatable.

The three star man in the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, having learned it, I suppose, from others, would teach that retaliation is necessary to a wholesome adjustment of any differences that may exist between the two churches. There is no telling to what lengths of absurdity men may suffer themselves to be carried. One of the innate ingredients in the human constitution, universal and never-failing, is this, or works in this way: Two parties, individuals, communities, nations or churches, it matters not so they be human persons, on amicable, friendly and fraternal terms with each other, can settle any difficulties between them with ten-fold probable greater justice and satisfaction all round than when the parties are estranged from each other.

Then, to apply this never-failing principle to the case in hand, it will stand thus: Unite these churches in good, wholesome Christian fraternity, take away hate, criminations and all unfriendliness, and put them in a Christian relation, and almost any pious, well-informed man, or two men, can settle all existing difficulties to the entire satisfaction of everybody, in a very few weeks, and at an expense of certainly not over $2.50. But in this non-fraternal state such a settlement will require forty years, forty supreme courts, forty lawyers, forty Conferences and Conference committees, and more than $2.50 of expense; and, in addition—forty-fold more than all the rest—an outlay of Christian grace that the history and arithmetic of eternity alone can unfold. I am by no means alone in the belief that the belligerency of these two churches, in the last thirty years, has hindered their progress in saving grace more than all outside opposing forces combined.

I defy any sober-minded man, not sold to prejudice and belligerency of spirit, to believe that the writing and promulgation of such articles as those of the three stars in the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE can by possibility do good. They can tickle the shallow fancy of some, and pamper the unsanctified opposition and war spirit of others; but they cannot do good until human nature, the springs of human action, and the conditions of recovering grace shall be made over again.

The three star writer must not undertake to say, as a similar writer lately did in the Nashville Advocate, that he had not written in opposition to Methodist fraternity, but only "in favor of the action of the General Conference." Everybody that has read these papers knows that they both have written squarely against "Methodist fraternity" in this particular case. Nobody opposes the action of the General Conference, though very many would have preferred the minority report. I would have preferred it. But the General Conference did not speak lightly of Methodist fraternity, in this or any other case, as this writer does. Let plain issues be fairly met.

Discipline.

The organization called the church, to separate it from other organizations, "is not a voluntary society, associated upon principles of human invention, but a society divinely instituted and governed by her redeeming God and King." The origin, the source of the church being divine, nothing but a law divine suffices as a rule for her government; and this her Founder has supplied. If "the free circulation of the blood, and the proper discharge of all the animal functions, are not more necessary to the health of the body than the discipline which Christ has instituted to the spiritual health and prosperity of his body, the church," then in order to preserve this healthful condition to the church requires at the hands of the administrators a faithful application of this divine discipline. By the term administrators is meant the duly accredited overseers of the church; or, in other words, the pastors.

No person who understandingly believes the truths of the Bible doubts the fact of the divine origin of the church, or the other fact that a law was ordained by her Head for her government. And we may go a step further, and assert that this organization—the church—as much needs the application of this governmental law, if not much more, than any other society. The reason of this will be seen in the fact that the subjects of this government are under influences other than material. No mere outward conformity to this law meets its requirements, for the essence of true obedience to it is found in our affectionate embrace of its demands, and an entire, undivided submission to every part and parcel of it. Its enactments are clear and precise. It points out the way by which aliens and foreigners may become citizens thereof, and gives them specific rules for their conduct, and ordains a complete separation on their part from every other form of government. Once adopted, God becomes their King, and their inheritance is allotted them in his kingdom. This does not curtail their freedom; for by rebellion against his law and authority they may lose their citizenship.

We have the fact of a kingdom and a law suitable to the nature of the kingdom—a King divine and a law divine. Now we desire to ask, if the King has given a law to be enforced against offending subjects or pretended subjects of his kingdom, how an accredited agent of the King can excuse himself when he fails to carry out the expressed will of his sovereign? This question assumes that there is such dereliction. Without citing cases, the question will come home to them. May it be met in a proper spirit.

It is not conceived that the word "discipline" means only the trying of offenders and the punishment of the obstinate, but that it embraces every part of the pastor's duty. Suppose a pastor to preach three years to a church, and during that time omit the celebration of the Lord's Supper—would he not fail, at that point, in complying with his Master's command, and in disciplining the church in that particular? Another has in his society one who swears, fights and gets drunk, and rests quiet over the case on account of family considerations. Does the plea for non-performance of duty exculpate the agent? In the one case the crime may be greater; but how about the sin of the administrator in either case? Are they not both guilty of a want of faithfulness to their vows? If we look at the law of Christ, and get down into its spirit, we are struck with the sternness of its utterances. We are called upon to give up father, mother, brothers, sisters, wife and children for his sake to be a true disciple. Will it be replied: This is merely figurative? Alas! there is too great a tendency to this sort of exegesis, and through this false mode of exposition many a pastor has excused himself for neglecting to enforce his Lord's code of discipline. No; the words of Christ mean just what they express; and the faithful pastor will not omit to impress this truth upon the minds of his charge.

We are moving with high enthusiasm in the way of meetings and manipulations—we are on the warpath—and so great is the excitement of the conflict that we overlook the captives made in other days. We forget that they are unused to the new regime to which they are subject; and, failing to indoctrinate them solidly in all its departments, they are in a short time bad subjects. One or two societies could be polluted out whose spiritual life has become almost extinct from the want of firmness to administer discipline. With two or three of the pastors the matter has been discussed, and in each case the bad state of the society was admitted, and the necessity of enforcing the law; but each excused himself upon the ground that his predecessor knew the facts and failed to apply the remedy, and surely he was not going to raise and meet a storm. This is truth. Now will the Lord honor, bless and comfort his people when they ignore the law he has given for the government of his kingdom? Were the subjects of this holy King better instructed by his messengers in the law, and those who demand citizenship in his kingdom made fully aware of the nature of the vows they take upon entering as members of his household, there would be fewer spots on their garments, and more power be exercised by them over the King's enemies. God will not excuse our unfaithfulness in this matter. His honor must be before our wishes—his law paramount to our distorted sensibilities. A house of $25 a year must have no weight with us when God's will and command requires at our hand the performance of a duty. Our Bishops are good men, and are perhaps too experienced to accept a suggestion; but one will be offered, viz.: Would not a stricter inquiry into the matter of discipline be not only appropriate, but conducive to the growth of the church in grace? INDAMORA.

A Broken Sabbath.—No. 3.

Does God now notice the breaking of the Sabbath? Does Providence interfere to prevent, call attention to, and warn against the desecration of his holy day? And could not men see the indications of this Providence, and take warning, if they would observe? To us it seems that they might. From the results of our own observation we conclude that more fearful, disastrous and fatal accidents (so called) occur on the Sabbath than on any other day of the week; and, if so, why is it so if God does not interfere?

But we will give the results of a record kept by another of the disasters on the Mississippi river for many years—namely, the a man of blessed memory, now gone from us, but who spent the whole of his life along the waters of the Mississippi, from Kentucky to New Orleans, and from young manhood to old age in the ministry. Speaking on this subject, he informed the writer of this that, instead of the river disasters being one on the Sabbath against six on the week days (as would doubtless have been the case had there been no providential interference,) the fact was that six of these dreadful explosions, fires, etc., for the last forty years, had occurred on the Lord's day to one on the week days. Let the calculators of chances tell us what is this fearful rate of Sabbath ruin, and what is indicated by this table of statistics. And then did not God force a five years' rest on the Father of Waters during the late "unpleasantness," at least so far as commerce was concerned?

And then there is the sugar interest. Most of the sugar mills in Louisiana were in the habit of working all hands and all fires all day Sunday during the sugar season. Now we learned that this could have been easily avoided, after this manner: if the sugar planter had been disposed to "remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy." We were expostulating with a sugar planter on this subject, and finally asked him how often he had to cool off, cleanse his kettles, clean out furnaces, etc. To this he replied: "O about once a week." "Why, then," said I, "could you not cool off Saturday night, and let all rest till Monday morning?" To this he shrugged his shoulders, and replied: "O the only real reason is that we are in a hurry, and can make more money by running our mill on Sundays as well as week days, and can get through quicker." Did not God also give the sugar mills a five years' Sabbath during the same war? Has the sugar interest in Louisiana yet recovered from the blow? We knew some planters who did stop all work about their mills on Saturday night, and did not resume it till Monday morning, and they died solvent, leaving fortunes for their children.

Have not many of the sugar mills in Cuba already had a seven years' Sabbath? And how about the many recently converted into ashes in that war-cursed island?

More might be seen and said on this subject; for the handwriting on the wall—the warning hand—may be seen everywhere. Should we not, then, conclude that God is still displeased with Sabbath-breaking, and that he indicates it? A. G. M.

OBITUARIES.

DEPARTED this life, in great peace, on the third of September, 1875, at his residence in Colquitt, Claiborne parish, La., JOHN WILSON, in the sixty-third year of his age. Born in Jackson county, Ga., where he grew up to manhood, he removed thence to Chambers county, Ala., and for the last twenty-three years was a resident of the State and parish where he died. He was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in the year 1838, in which communion he lived and died, having been a useful, active member. In the dawn of his manhood he was wedded, heart and hand, to Susan M. Key, a woman eminently worthy of his confidence and affection. From the nuptial hour to his mortal illness their lives presented a pleasing commentary upon the blessedness designed by Providence to attend the marriage relation. Eleven children were the fruit of this union, seven of whom survive their sainted father.

In many respects John Wilson was a remarkable man. Endowed by nature with an order of mind that partook of the highest type of Roman virtue, yet the sterner attributes of his character were so modified by religious principles, and so blended with Christian graces, as to present a structure of massive strength, symmetry and beauty; for if he was a man of extraordinary force of will, pride of character, decision, firmness, sobriety, courage and fortitude, so too was he a man of uncommon generosity, charity, modesty, simplicity and tenderness of heart. Possessed of a clear intellect and good practical judgment, he determined his conduct with deliberation, and pursued his course with patient perseverance. Consistency was "a jewel" which he conspicuously wore, and he was never known to be fickle in business, double-minded in politics, indifferent to friendships, or a backslider in religion. Pursuing the double occupation of planter and merchant, he eschewed debt as a great evil, and died obedient to the injunction of the apostle: "Owe no man anything, save to love one another."

God had blessed him with a most amiable and affectionate family, and his influence over them for good was the chief source of his earthly enjoyment. No man ever had a more devoted wife, nor more dutiful and affectionate children. To them he was the repository of confidence, a fountain of sympathy, an oracle of wisdom. To be permitted "to rear them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," to see them all lively members of the church of Christ, and firmly established in the faith of the gospel, was the keenest anxiety of his great and loving heart. He saw all this and was satisfied. And now that his life's work was done, he seemed to have a premonition that "the time for his departure was at hand." This was evidenced by his acts—unwilling to make the sorrowful announcement to his family. While in usual health he made his last will and testament, arranged his business, "set his house in order," and then, in a spirit of consecration more thorough and complete than he had ever experienced before, calmly awaited the Lord's coming. And now, with pious zeal, with holy energy, he prayed that awakening grace and converting power might descend upon the people among whom he had so long lived and labored. He continued "instant in prayer," his consecration was complete, his humility profound, his faith sublime. Other pious souls joined in the same petition. At length the blessing came—it came in pentecostal power. It was Heaven's benediction on him and his; and this, the last meeting with his people, was a source of joy and gladness to his soul. Thenceforward, until "God took him," he was serenely happy; his peace flowed as a river. "I am ready" was his audible answer to the messenger that summoned him to the spirit land; and while standing upon the very brink of the eternal world, with grateful emphasis, he repeated the celestial invitation: "The Spirit and the Bride say, Come;" and quoted with rapturous joy the opening stanza of his favorite hymn:

"Oh! glorious hope of perfect love," etc.

May our last end be like his.

A FRIEND.

THE REV. JOHN WATSON PURVIS was a native of North Carolina, and born March 24, 1803. He came to Adams county, Miss., in 1822, and was married to Mrs. Sallie Holmes, of that county, in 1825. During the year 1828 he visited his native State, going and returning by private conveyance. On his return he visited a camp meeting in Sumner county, Tenn., where the late Rev. F. E. Pitts was laboring in the spirit and power of the gospel of Christ. Bro. Purvis was awakened to a sense of his danger as a sinner and his need of salvation. His distress and agony of soul was very great; but, being rightly directed to Christ as the Savior of sinners, he was enabled by faith to accept him as his personal and present Savior. He was blessed in believing, and received the witness of the Spirit. His was a happy conversion. He joined the church there as a probationer, and brought his certificate to Mississippi, where he united with the church, and soon became an active member—leading in prayer and class meetings, hunting up sparse and destitute neighborhoods in which to work for his Master. He was licensed to preach the gospel a few months after his conversion.

He moved from Adams to Yazoo county in 1832, and soon after his house became the place of regular circuit preaching, and where a church was organized, seventeen joining the first time the invitation was given. That was the beginning of Tranquil church and camp ground, where many souls were born to God and started for heaven. He was eminently useful as a local preacher in Yazoo and Holmes counties for several years—till his health became such as to forbid his laboring. Many will call him blessed in the last day. The late Rev. Hiram Enslo was brought to Christ through his labors.

He was married to Miss Appalonia Wamack September 24, 1865, by whom he had four children, all of whom yet survive him and mourn his loss. He was not blessed with children by his first marriage, but took into his family nine orphans, whom he endeavored to bring up to be useful citizens and Christians—whether they have all come to that good state or not. He was popular and useful as a citizen, Christian and minister of the gospel. He was liberal with his means in helping the poor and supporting the institutions of the church.

For some time before his last attack of paralysis he talked much of dying, and said death had no terrors to him—that he felt he could have the victory at any time. The day before his exit, while looking at his sister-in-law, he exclaimed with much emotion: "God is love!" He then tried to sing the song:

"O sing to me of heaven
When I am called to die."

His speech failed after that entirely, and he passed away peacefully, February 19, 1875.

May the Lord console and protect the widow and orphans, that they may be brought finally to everlasting life. H. H. MONTGOMERY.

REBECCA REID, consort of Zachariah Reid, and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Hendon, was born in Newburg district, S. C., November 26, 1792, and died in Carthage, Miss., September 22, 1875, aged eighty-two years, nine months and twenty-six days.

She was happily married to Zachariah Reid, in Newburg district, S. C., in 1811. In 1840 she moved with her husband to Elberton, Ga.; from thence to Montgomery, Ala., in 1846; in 1851 to Chulahoma, Miss., and in 1856 to Carthage, Miss., where the weary wheels of life stood still.

Mother Reid first joined the Independent Presbyterian Church in 1820, but shortly after united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which she lived until called to unite with the church above. She lived a long and useful life. I am confident the world was better and mankind blessed by her living in it. Yet many of the ills and misfortunes of life were hers. How sweet her rest will be, for she died in sight of home, saying: "I am going where sickness, sorrow, pain and death are felt and feared no more." She was the mother of eleven children. Seven of these and her husband preceded her to the spirit world. What a meeting on the other shore! Three sons and one daughter are yet to follow. The daughter is the wife of Rev. C. D. Oliver, of the Alabama Conference; Dr. C. Reid, a practicing physician, lives in Louisiana; Col. B. F. Reid resides in Alabama, and Col. Robert Reid, a lawyer, and whose house was the mother's last earthly home, lives in Carthage, Miss.

L. P. MEADOR.

JOSHUA B. HAWSEY, son of J. G. and Lucinda Hawsey, was born June 26, 1856, and died June 24, 1875. He was born, raised and died in East Baton Rouge parish, La. He visited an older brother, living from home, who was sick with flux. He returned home and took the same disease, which proved fatal.

He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1871; professed religion in 1873, and from this time he took an active part in the Sunday school and prayer meeting which were kept up in his neighborhood. In love-feast and class meeting he was always ready to be a witness for the Master. His youthful friends and the community generally had the utmost confidence in his piety. During his sickness he often praised God and spoke of the comfort the Christian's hope afforded him. In his last moments his chamber was a place of rejoicing as well as of mourning. N. B. YOUNG.

OUR hearts have been made sad by the death of our beloved little son, DORSEY C. WOOD. He was born December 8, 1870, in Wilkinson county, Miss.; baptized by Rev. P. S. Petty, at the residence of his parents, November 11, 1872, and died of pseudo membranous croup, October 4, 1875, at three o'clock in the morning. He was indeed a great sufferer for twenty-four hours, struggling for breath and life, but our kind Father gave him a peaceful hour in which to die. He was conscious unto the last moment, calling on his parents and grandparents, who were devotedly attached to him, for help; and his last act was to throw his little arms around his grandma's neck and kiss her farewell. Our blessed little son was indeed a good child, full of life, and always met us with a smile on his open countenance.

J. S. PARKER.

MRS. MARTHA L. DUNCAN was born August 28, 1823; married to Mr. James Duncan June 17, 1841, and died March 21, 1875.

Sister Duncan was one of those quiet Christians that live peaceably and die submissively—one of those whose emotional nature brings them not prominently before the church, but perhaps makes them more endeared to those within their immediate circle of acquaintances. Quiet, faithful and unobtrusive in life, she has passed the stream of death, and doubtless she will be received into mansions of bliss by those who, in the hour of sickness and want, found in her a ready friend and a helping hand. She leaves a husband and two daughters to mourn her death.

LORENA J. HENRY, daughter of Elijah and Eliza Henry, was born in Wood county, Texas, March 20, 1870. She died near Oxford, Ala., October 16, 1875. Her last illness was protracted through many days of suffering, which she patiently endured. Her disease was diphtheria. She was baptized last summer by Rev. Daniel Duncan. Since then she has been serving God with child-like simplicity and confidence. Often she would get happy while singing: "O how I love Jesus!" Just a few hours before dying she became restless, and anxiously desired "to depart and be with Jesus."

THE OLD SCHOOL-BOOK.

On the old school-book, in its dusty nook,
With a tearful eye I gaze;
Come down, old friend, for an hour we'll spend
In a talk of the by-gone days.
I gaze once more, as in days of yore,
On the task that vexed the brain;
The lesson done, and victory won,
And I feel I'm a child again.

And I seem to stand with the youthful band
In the old house on the green;
I hear the fun ere the school begun,
And I join in the gladsome scene.
I take my place with a sober face,
O'er the well-carved desk I bend,
And hourly pore o'er the learned lore
Of my wonderful page, old friend.

Then our cares were few, and our friends were true,
And our griefs were rare and light;
The world was naught (so we fondly thought)
But a region of pure delight;
But time has sped, and our path has led
Through the dark and fearful scene;
And passed away are the good and gay,
Like the old house on the green.

But we'll sing no more of the days of yore,
For the tear-drop dims the eye;
Sleep on, old book, in thy dusty nook,
As in years that have glided by;
No guile we trace in thy honest face,
But a mine of gold within
Enriched the youth, as they sought for truth,
In the old house on the green.

How the Leaves Fall.

BY EDWARD M. COLIE.

Although we have many times watched the leaves, from the time they were first tinged with crimson and gold until they finally withered and fell, we may never have asked ourselves the cause of the change. We have enjoyed the beauty of the autumnal forest, and have been content to attribute it to the workmanship of the frost, while the truth is, the frost has nothing to do with it whatever; but that which causes the dew to freeze into frost, or the change in temperature, occasions also the glorious coloring of the foliage.

With the approach of autumn the vital action of the tree diminishes, and is shown in the more sluggish circulation of the sap and the contraction of the tissues of the tree. This contraction, like every other, according to the teachings of science, evolves a small quantity of heat, so that by the wise economy of nature the colder the season the greater the contraction, and the greater the amount of heat set free. Thus a garment of warmth is provided for the forest during the cold winter, just as nature furnishes animal life with a warmer covering of hair.

The earliest noticeable result in spring-time of the renewed vital action of plants is the putting forth of leaves, which are an essential part of its organism, acting as mouth, lungs and stomach. The sap ascending from the roots is exposed by the leaves to the air, and absorbs carbonic acid given off by animal life, and other gaseous principles, which by the subtle chemistry of the sun's rays are afterward transmuted into starch, gum, wood, gluten, oils and the various other plant secretions. The sap now elaborated is ready to furnish the necessary nourishment, and, descending between the inner bark, or liber, and the alburnum, or young wood, contributes to the growth of both. Thus the leaves of a plant enrich the sap just as the lungs furnish the impoverished blood a fresh cargo of life-giving oxygen.

The green color of the leaves in health is owing to a coloring matter known as chlorophyl, which is secreted in minute globules in the pores of the leaf. The elaboration of this pigment depends upon the vitality of a tree, and where a tree has suffered injury it is manifested by a change in the color of its foliage, which reproduces on a smaller scale the gorgeous tints of autumn. In a similar way the diminished temperature on the approach of cold weather affects the vital energies of the tree; the sap is no longer properly elaborated, the chlorophyl is no longer secreted, and its general aspect is that of disease.

The intensity of the green color of the leaves seems to be owing to the amount of carbonic acid absorbed from the atmosphere, and the green gives place to the more brilliant hues of red and yellow, and finally to the dull brown, indicative of death through lack of vitality and want of energy to absorb the requisite amount of acid.

The change begins at the extremities of the branches, for the sap nourishes the intermediate portions, but becomes exhausted of vitality before reaching the extremities. Thus the crimson and gold just tip summits of the trees when first noticed, but gradually spread over the entire tree, until the many-tinted leaves of the forest toss and flash in the wind like the flames of some vast conflagration.

This change in color is but a preparation for the final fall of the leaves. Long before they begin to don their variegated garb we may see, if we take the trouble to examine a branch, that the foot of the leaf-stalk has already begun to separate from the limb, and this separation continues until the leaf is so slightly attached that the least wind causes it to fall. In the early spring both leaf and branch grow at the same rate; but soon the leaf matures, while the branch still continues its growth, so that in time the leaf cannot adjust itself to the growing branch, and little by little it loses its hold.

The arrangement of the limbs of a tree is, in general, that of its leaves. Where they are arranged in opposite pairs, the branches are similarly distributed; where they alternate, there is also an alternation in the branches.

Sheltered by each leaf is a bud, which is to undergo development, and the fall of the leaf is essential to its further growth. Having been carefully nursed until it is capable of taking care of itself, it is left, as it were, to rely upon its inherent energies. But not all the tiny buds are of equal vitality, and when left to brave the cold storms of winter, shorn of their leafy vesture, some perish, and the stronger, as is the universal law, deprive the weaker of their proper nourishment, and on the return of spring the arrangement of the branches varies slightly from that of the leaves. Moreover, the fall of the leaves has an æsthetic aspect. Were it not for this our forests would be such unsightly objects as is a field of corn when the leaves, dry and withered, rustle and flutter in the cold winds of winter, and remain clinging to the parent stock, spectral appendages, until both decay.

We thus see that the beautiful tints of autumn and the final fall of the leaves are only steps in nature's process of development, and necessary to the growth of the tree. The lesson—for we have here, as elsewhere, a higher lesson taught by inanimate nature—is the sacrifice of present joy for that the future may unfold—the subordination of a lesser to a greater good. We must relinquish the autumnal garb for the blossoms and fruits of the coming summer.—Christian at Work.

The Romish Weathercock.

Mr. Gladstone's controversy with the Vatican and its defenders has revealed, among other things, that Roman Catholics are capable of a enmity of subserviency which is almost incredible, and which is certainly incompatible with either manliness or ingenuousness. In the appendix to Mr. Gladstone's second pamphlet he quotes some information respecting a Roman Catholic book, known as Keenan's Catechism, which has been extensively used in Great Britain and America, and two copies of which, professedly of the same edition, were lying before his informant. In the preface to the third edition of this "Catechism" the author states that it has "the high approbation of Archbishop Hughes, the Right Rev. Drs. Kyle, Carruthers, Gillis and Murdoch." The four last named were vicars apostolic in Scotland, and their separate episcopal approbations are prefixed to the "Catechism."

"In one of the copies of this "Catechism," certified to as above stated, it being a "new edition, corrected by the author, twenty-fourth thousand," appear the following question and answer:

"Q.—Must not Catholics believe the Pope in himself to be infallible?

"A.—This is a Protestant invention; it is no article of the Catholic faith; no decision of his can oblige, under pain of heresy, unless it be received and enforced by the teaching body—that is, by the bishops of the church."

It now transpires, as Mr. Gladstone's informant shows, that "on the passing of the Vatican decree, apparently while this very edition was passing through the press, the above crucial question and answer were quietly dropped out, though no intimation whatever was given that this vital alteration was made in the remainder of the edition. Had a note been appended, intimating that this change had become needful, no objection, of course, could have been made. But no word has been inserted to announce or explain this omission of so material a passage; while the utmost pains have been taken, and I must add, with great success, to pass off this gravely-altered book as being identical with the rest of the edition."

Such duplicity as this argues both a defective cause and want of moral honesty, as well as great stupidity. It does not appear to have entered into the mind of those who were accessory to the mutilation of the Catechism that their act could not escape discovery and exposure, or that it partook of the nature of fraud. Neither do they seem to have perceived that the mutilation, if discovered and exposed, would have the inevitable effect of concentrating attention upon the doctrine which was taught as truth at one time, and which was afterward sought to be surreptitiously hidden out of sight. Hereafter, and in view of such imbecility, duplicity and versatility combined, let us hear no more of the unchangeableness of the Romish Church. Truly it more resembles "a reed shaken with the wind," than the "rock" to which it so fondly likens itself.—Christian Intelligencer.

WE ARE accustomed, says the Interior, to regard the present deferential and rational style of infidelity as a new phase of unbelief, and to contrast it with the rough and coarse vituperation of Volney, Paine and others of the last century. And yet Paley, writing contemporaneously with that school of authors, says:

"Infidelity is served up in every shape that is likely to allure, surprise or beguile the imagination; in a fable, a tale, a novel, a poem; in books of travels, of philosophy, of natural history; in a word, in any form rather than the right one—that of professed and regular disquisition. And this because the coarse buffoonery and broad laugh of the old and rude adversaries of the Christian faith would offend the taste of this cultivated age."—Moral Philosophy, book v, sec. 9.

Thus wrote Paley nearly one hundred years ago—he published in 1785. Thirty years before that date Bolingbroke's works were published; and his lead was followed by an innumerable throng of writers till 1790, when Volney published his "Ruins." Five years later Paine published his "Age of Reason;" so that Paley wrote in the middle of the reign of the vulgar and vituperative school of infidelity, and yet his picture exactly describes the rationalistic literature of our own day. What was the degree of that coarseness and rudeness which was offensive to tastes which accepted Bolingbroke and Volney we can only imagine, as it has all long since perished. It is evident enough, therefore, from these facts, that rationalism, now so deferential and Frenchy, is only four or five generations descended from literary cannibalism. Less than two hundred years ago the "primitive" rationalist must have been a gorilla.

TO BECOME a believer is not the result of a fit of enthusiasm, as if the wind were to blow upon a person and he straightway become perfect; but we must hear, learn, pray, read, inquire, until we are transformed from one degree of conviction to another.

JAMES LICK'S BEQUESTS.—Mr. Jas. Lick, of whom the world has heard so much since his magnificent bequests in California, has at last completed the deed of trust by which he disposes of his vast wealth. The Protestant Orphan Asylum of San Francisco will still receive the sum of $25,000; the city of San Jose $25,000 for an orphan asylum; the Ladies' Protective and Relief Society $25,000; the Mechanics' Institute $10,000; the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals $10,000; the Old Ladies' Home $100,000, and the trustees for the free baths of San Francisco $150,000. The appropriation of $150,000 for the bronze monument to Francis Scott Key is reduced to $60,000. The appropriation of $250,000 for bronze statuary to be set up at Sacramento, and the statuary to be erected in front of the city hall, San Francisco, is reduced to $100,000. The $300,000 appropriated to endow a school, to be called "The California School of Mechanical Arts," is increased to $540,000. The appropriations to relatives and friends are to be paid immediately. To his son, John H. Lick, the sum of $150,000 is to be paid. After the telescope is finished it is to be given to the regents of the university to form a part of the Lick astronomical department of the university. If it should cost less, the balance of the appropriation of $700,000 to go toward forming an endowment fund. The vacancies in the board of trustees are to be filled by James Lick so long as he lives. The trustees are to receive $1,000 per annum each in lieu of the statutory fees. For himself, Mr. Lick is to receive from the estate all his expenses and support, and such sums as may be necessary for the improvement of his San Jose property. To the new indenture, thus far, seven of the parties interested in the old one have signed, and the benefits of it will be experienced at once.

PRISON DISCIPLINE IN SWITZERLAND.—It is not generally known—however much it may be criticised—that the prison discipline in Switzerland is of a highly tolerant character. It is no unusual thing when a prisoner is sentenced to a long term of imprisonment, and who begins to chafe or languish under the prolonged durance, to ameliorate in some shape or other the irksomeness of the enforced restraint. A singular instance in support of this detail arrives to us from Zurich: A young Frenchman is now under confinement in that canton, for a series of years, upon a charge of murder. The convict has lately addressed his counsel to submit a petition to court begging to be released on bail for a few months in order to avail himself of a course of bathing, or to seek the balmy mountain breezes at some sanitary resort, to recruit his enfeebled health. He further offers a substantial bail and submit to police surveillance during the conge. The benevolence, however, of the Zurich authorities, it seems, has already been exercised in this strange direction, and the indulgence has, of course, been much appreciated, and never abused by the condemned proteges and their friends. In fact, in many cases, the excuse for the temporary freedom has been received in order to afford the prisoner all facilities for increasing either the dwindling pecuniary resources of himself or those dependent upon his labor. In the matter under notice the medical men have reported upon the bona fides of the reasons advanced by the imprisoned petitioner, and that the proposed trip cannot fail to be beneficial to the health of the culprit. After a few necessary formalities of a legal kind, there seems to be no reason to doubt but that the prayer of the petitioner will be granted, to the immense delight, we conceive, of the tourist and others, if they become acquainted with the character of this distinguished visitor at the resort selected for the good of his health.—Swiss Chronicle.

PRECOCITY OF SOME ANCIENT WRITERS.—Milton had written a considerable amount of verse prior to his eighteenth year; Abraham Cowley's "Pyramus and Thisbe" was written at ten, his "Constantia and Philetus" at twelve; and these and other "poetical blossoms" were published when he was fifteen. Pope composed "The Ode to Solitude" and part of an epic poem "about twelve." All the writings of Thomas Chatterton were finished, and his own self-extinguished life was closed, when he had reached the age of seventeen years and three months. Collins' "Persian Eclogues" were composed at seventeen; Henry Kirke White's works were all produced while he was yet in his twenty-second year; and we can scarcely forget Connop Thirlwall's "Primitiæ," written between eight and eleven; Leigh Hunt's "Juvenilia," or poems written between the age of twelve and sixteen; Shelley's "Queen Mab" at sixteen; Byron's "English Bards and Scottish Reviewers" at twenty; Walter Savage Landor's "Poems" published in his twentieth year; and the "Lyrical Poems" of Alfred Tennyson, issued at the same age. Henry Taylor's "Isaac Commenus" was composed before he had attained his majority. Douglas Jerrold's first play, though not performed till his eighteenth, was written in his fifteenth year; and James Sheridan Knowles wrote his first drama at twelve years of age, for a company of stage-struck boys, among whom he was the "star."—British Quarterly.

THE demand for the rationale in matters of religious faith—where, if the rationale could be given, it would cease to be faith, but philosophy, and poor stock at that—is a fruitful source of mischief wherever found. It is death of spirituality in the church, and a source of demoralization out of it. The old Jewish habit of recognizing the hand of God in everything—in the sunshine and in the storm, in prosperity and in adversity—is the only true basis of a religious life.

CHEERFULNESS makes the mind clearer, gives tone to thought, and adds grace and beauty to the countenance.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Italian government appears to be following closely in the footsteps of the Germans. A bill is soon to be brought into Parliament for the suppression of Roman Catholic clubs and co-fraternities of laymen.

—The receipts of the American Board for the year 1874 were: From donations, $352,041.28; from legacies, $83,007.76; for work in nominally Christian lands, $34,331.22; making a total of $469,470.26. This year the receipts stand: From donations, $349,084.86; from legacies, $89,702 38; for nominally Christian lands, $29,833.58; making a total of $468,620.82.

A NEW WING.—A new branch of Methodism has been organized in northern New Jersey, under the title of "The United Methodist Church." The members hold the doctrine of immersion, and discard a discipline and all creeds save the New Testament. The new organization at present numbers about eighty members, who are scattered over a large field.

—At the late session of the English New Connection Methodist Conference it was ordered that homes be assigned to preachers in the order of their marriage and ministerial standing. Assistant leaders were to represent classes at leaders' meetings. Students receiving aid to study for the ministry are to refund the cost of their education if they leave the Conference within twenty years.

BRAZIL.—The only missionaries in the vast empire of Brazil are Presbyterians. They number twelve ordained ministers, one teacher, nine married ladies and four unmarried ladies. Two new churches were organized last year. On June 28 five persons united with the Presbyterian Church at Rio Claro, Brazil, South America. Cheering news is also heard from St. Carlos. Protestantism is gaining favor all the time.

—Since Yemen ceased to be an independent State the Turkish government has kept it and other portions of Southern Arabia in a much quieter condition, and religious fanaticism is considerably repressed. The Jews of Yemen number half a million, and have twenty-five synagogues in Sanaa. The Jews absorb nearly all the handicraft and trade of the district, although to the west of Yemen there are many Jews who are engaged in hunting.

—In both the Syrian and Church Missionary congregations of Travancore, India, there has been a time of spiritual awakening. The churches enjoy the assistance of two Brahmin converts—Messrs. Jacob and Mathai—who labor as lay evangelists. The former is the chief preacher, and the latter "sings the gospel." Both the preaching and the singing have a great effect, so that the pair are singularly like the two American evangelists in Great Britain.

COLPORTAGE IN JERUSALEM.—Jacob Hishmek is succeeding wonderfully in selling tracts and portions of Scripture in Jerusalem. During sixty days he sold 5,036 copies of Russian, Bulgarian, Greek, Armenian and Arabic tracts. The details of his conversations with pilgrims are very interesting. The Coptic pilgrims, who would not take one last year, have this year bought freely Arabic copies of the Sermon on the Mount, the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew, etc.

—The Bible is still the book of the Madagascar Christians, as it was in the days of persecution. For some time the stock of Bibles at the mission was exhausted, and it was painful to be obliged to turn eager inquirers for the volume away. At last the London Bible Society sent five thousand Bibles. These were all sold in a few days, and hundreds of people who came too late had to be sent away. One man sold his principal garment (a kind of shirt) in order to make up the required shilling.

—Bishop Bedell, of Ohio, visited the United Presbyterian schools at Osiut, in Egypt, and in a published letter expresses a very favorable opinion with regard to them. He cordially commends the new college for which Dr. D. R. Johnston is now collecting the funds, and which will give all Egypt facilities for a thorough Christian education, such as it has not possessed since the primitive ages of Christianity. He regards the United Presbyterian work as especially important in its bearings upon a reformation of the Coptic Church.

—It is very difficult for missionaries to get a foothold in the interior of China. A recent experience of several missionaries of the American Board illustrates this fact. They had ascended the River Min to a place called Shun-nre, about 260 miles northwest of Foochow. Here a favorable opening for the gospel preaching presents itself and a native helper is already at work. They endeavored to purchase a piece of land, and on three occasions had all but the signature to the deed, when the owners became intimidated by their neighbors. In two cases these owners were beaten, and for a brief period confined in prison. So the attempt was given up.

THE LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—This is one of the oldest missionary societies, and its missions have been attended with extraordinary success. The following statistics will give us a view of its present condition: The total number of missionaries now in the service of the society is 156, and of missionary students, distributed in 7 colleges, 38—a number not greater than ten years ago; but this is to be explained from the fact that many of the mission churches had become self-supporting, and from other like causes. No fewer than 27 English missionaries had been added, 25 new stations had been occupied, and the range of the society's work greatly extended. The finances were flourishing. Including the balance of £1,857 11s. 2d. from last year, the receipts were £105,401 5s. 10d. The disbursements had been £101,071 11s. 3d., leaving a balance in favor of the society amounting to £3,329 14s. 7d., together with a debenture of £1,000 retained in stock.

Our Young People.

HYMN FOR A LITTLE CHILD.

God, make my life a little light,
Within the world to glow;
A little flame that burneth bright
Wherever I may go.

God, make my life a little flower,
That giveth joy to all,
Content to bloom in native bower,
Although its place be small.

God, make my life a little song,
That comforteth the sad;
That helpeth others to be strong,
And makes the singer glad.

God, make my life a little hymn
Of tenderness and praise;
Of faith—that never waxeth dim
In all his wondrous ways.

Good Words.

MOUNTAIN HOME,
Clarke Co., Ala., October 17, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: My grandma, mamma and aunt live together, and my aunt takes your paper. I read it every week. I like it so much. I am sure our home would be quite lonely without the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE; and the Child's Corner is so very interesting to all the children, and I think to all the grown folks too. I live in sight of my uncle's. I help him make molasses. I drive the ox-cart, and the oxen are quite unruly sometimes. I am only ten years old. I leave home early in the morning and don't see it again until night. I have quite a merry time eating sugar cane. Tell Tom I am learning how to do all kinds of useful work (Uncle Bob says,) but can't use quite so many big words. Mr. Editor, if Tom don't quit using so many big words before winter comes, while trying to pronounce his words my mouth will freeze before I can finish pronouncing them. Give my love to grandpa, and tell him to finish telling all his stories. Good-by.

Your true friend,

EVANDA TODD.

The Two Violets.

It was such a pleasant, cheery place they had to grow in, under a great spreading elm-tree, on the bank of a chattering, sparkling brook. It was always cool and shady there, even on the warmest days, and, since the little violets had slowly opened their eyes and ears on that warm day in April, it had been a bright view of life that was spread out before them. The leaves of the great tree overhead had been slowly unfolding; so quietly that had not the little flowers now and then turned up their purple faces they would never have guessed what was going on up there, or how much was being accomplished. But now they cast a broad shade down over this part of the brook, and tossed and whispered as the breeze kissed them, enjoying each moment of this bright spring weather. Nor had the grass meantime been idle; softly, softly, each little blade grew up, and by this time would quite have hidden our little friends, the violets, had they not chanced to grow out of a little mound of moss. On this the grass did not dare to intrude, nor the bright yellow dandelions, though one of this latter family did persist in showing its broad laughing face close at hand; but on the mound itself the violets and their deep green leaves reigned supreme, and had an excellent opportunity of observing all that was passing about them.

Meantime the brook babbled by, telling many a story as it passed over the stones, of the mountain spring it had come from, of its adventures by the way, and what a hurry it was in to accomplish the journey, and find the broad ocean and big ships. Poor little brook! How utterly will it be lost then; not nearly of so much importance here under the elm-tree. But it never came back to tell about it; but was always going there—going there. The two little flowers were almost exactly alike, and very fond of each other, as can be imagined, for since they had been able to remember anything, there they had been, side by side, with only a leaf between them, convenient for tucking their little heads under at night.

Now one might think that with such surroundings they might have been perfectly happy, and so, indeed, was one, the deeper colored of the two (perhaps a trifle or two the sweeter,) happy in the sunshine, happy in the brook, in the breezes, and the little birds who occasionally flew down for a morning bath in the cool water. Its little heart was full of one desire: to be just as sweet a violet as the dear Creator had wished when he caused her to grow. Surely it was for some wise purpose that he had placed her here; and although she was sometimes puzzled to know just what it was, determined to wait, and meantime do her very best to smell as sweetly and look as delicately purple and as cheerful as she knew how. So she nodded to the dandelion and nodded to the brook, thought how sweet the air was, fell asleep on her little stem, and woke up smiling.

But the companion flower, the sister violet, could not help thinking how very nice it must be to go rushing merrily along like the brook, or gaily up in the air with a sweet song as their friend, the lark, always did after his fresh dip in the water of an early morning. Then one could be doing something for one's Maker, could sing him sweet praises, and be busy about his work; but to sit always so very still on this little mossy mound, and never be anything but a quiet little flower! Oh, it was hard, and she was sure, very sure, it could not please the eye of the great Father. In fact she began to doubt if that eye ever looked down into this wee corner, and decided that he had forgotten quite the moment when he caused the two little purple things to grow. Do you think he had, dear children? We shall see.

One day, when the unhappy violet had been more than usually discontented, she determined to bend over her little head as far as possible, and let the breeze perhaps blow some few drops of the rustling brook right on to her leaves, just to feel how it was to be in communication with anything so delightfully busy.

Chatter, chatter, went the little stream: "I'm in a hurry, I'm in a hurry;" lower and lower the wind bent the graceful little head, when a big trout swimming by mistook it for a fly, and, darting at it, had snapped it in a second's time from the delicate stem!

Her little companion happened at the time to be looking the other way, but, on an exclamation from the dandelion, hastily looked round, and oh, what sorrow! a little mutilated stem; her sister's sweet face gone!

No one could tell how it happened. The brook was not to blame; it "had not been there," for in fact this was water just from the mountain spring passing now. The dandelion didn't know—he had heard a slight cry, and, looking round, had just seen the swaying of a stem, and all was over. The big frog on the stone in the middle of the stream only winked and blinked, and, when they pressed him for an answer, jumped down with a croak into the very deepest hole! So no one could tell, and the solitary violet could only feel, oh! so sorry, and so sad in her heart! All day long she softly mourned her sister, but just at evening-time came a little brown sparrow, and, perching on a twig close by, said he had come from the Master. The dear Lord had watched the flowers; had looked down at them in the cool grass every morning, and had only waited for them to be fully grown, when they were to glorify him, beautify his temple and be symbols of his resurrection. But here was only one, sang on the little bird; where was the other? Alas! her sister was gone; but oh! joy! then she had at last found his will, his plan for her. This was enough; for this she had waited, and it was, after all, for this beautiful end she had been putting forth all the power of growth. She beat her little purple head to the sparrow, and in the church, although among the humble flowers, there was scarcely a sweeter one there than the faithful little violet.

The Walls of Jericho.

My Hurry thinks that the walls of Jericho must have been very much like some crooked stone walls that he has seen in the country, to tumble down so easily at a blast of rams' horns. But he is mistaken, as boys and men so often are when talking of matters on which they are not well informed. Eastern cities are still, many of them, surrounded by wide, massively built walls. Houses are often built into them, so that the inhabitants, when they go upon their roofs, find themselves by the parapet which overlooks the fields. Sometimes the masonry is pierced for windows, which give a chance for such escapes as that of the spies whom Rahab hid on the roof of her house by the town wall, or as that of Paul from Damascus. The walls of Babylon, built by Nebuchadnezzar, were ninety feet thick, and over one hundred feet high. The same king built an immense "hanging garden," high enough to be seen over the city walls. It was a huge, stone-terraced platform, supported by piers, and covered with earth for the growth of trees and shrubs. The king built it to please his wife, who did not like the flat country about the Euphrates, and longed to see something to remind her of her mountain home in Media.

"If they did not have steam engines nor other labor-saving machines, it must have taken a great many men a great many years to build such walls," says Susan. A million of slaves at work on one structure was not an uncommon sight in the days when Babylon and the pyramids were built. In our age there is no despot so powerful as to compel millions of men to work, their lives through, to make him a costly toy.

Jericho was a city of palms, but they are all dead now. There is nothing left but a small heap of ruins and a few miserable huts. One large palm-tree survived until 1835. The kind deed of Rahab has outlived the solid masonry of kings, and the natural glories of the ancient landscape.—Work and Play.

THE MOST NORTHERN TOWN IN THE WORLD.—If you will take your maps and look in the northern part of Norway you may see the name Hammerfest there, in small letters, but if not, the town itself is situated in latitude seventy degrees and forty minutes, so that you will know very nearly where it is. Well, this little town of two thousand and fifty-seven inhabitants is said to be the most northerly one in the world. There are probably scattered families and individuals that live farther north, but no more northerly organized city or village.

The principal business of the people is fishing and the manufacture of cod liver oil, and the odor of the oil makes it a very disagreeable place to stay in, except for those who are used to it.

The sun sets there November 18, and rises January 28, so that the children have to go to school with lanterns, whenever the moon doesn't shine, for about six weeks. But then, again, to make up for it, in the summer the same sun rises June 1, and does not set until July 22. We should think the poor little things would get bewildered and forget when to go to bed and when to get up. The long day must be about as unpleasant as the long night. Still they manage to be as healthy and as happy as if they went to bed and arose with the sun every day, as you do, and would be as unwilling to change places with you as you would with them.

As for their food, a gentleman writing from there says they have fish and reindeer for breakfast, reindeer and fish for dinner, and for supper some more fish and reindeer. Goats and reindeer abound, but there are only six horses in the town. Wouldn't you like to live there?—Advance.

The Indian Summer of Life.

After the abatement of the burning summer heats, and after the storms of the equinox, comes this sequel of calm, of mellow sunshine and of cloudless skies. The fruits of the field are no longer growing, but ripening and waiting to be gathered. The nuts and leaves of the forest are dropping, the grasses and flowers are slowly withering, and there is in all the elements a hush and stillness which are the prelude of nature's sleep.

The season is the type of that period in human lives when men have grown their growth, when they have wrought their work, and when they glide into the golden years of a serene old age. The spring with its wealth of promise, the summer with its exuberant forces and manifold activities, the conflict of battling elements, the enterprise and ambition, and the final struggle for success, are over. As in nature, after the most violent disturbances and after the most fearful perturbations, come the restored equilibrium and the perfect peace; so it is in the well-spent life. Before the sun goes down there is a tranquil evening. Before the curtain is drawn around the last sleep there is an hour of quiet reflection, and time to review the past and to collect its lessons.

The aged Christian is in complete sympathy with the soft air, the subdued tints, the quiet music, and the rustle of falling leaves. The active mission of plants, trees and fields is now accomplished, and the silent toilers rest from their labors. The seasons cannot be recalled, and the fruits of the year must be accepted as they are.

From sixty to seventy-five, and beyond, people who come to these years have passed the period of appetite and passion—the plans and enterprises of life are behind them. Whether they have succeeded or failed in their temporal undertakings, it is now impossible to begin anew or to live life over again. The results may be enjoyed or regretted. The Christian has a healing balm for life's disappointments—a prospect beyond the horizon of time, and a serenity now which nothing can disturb. He is still in the world, but the atmosphere is mellow, and the soul basks in the tranquilizing light. Early and later days were as a tempestuous sea, but the strained and laboring vessel has passed the outer bar and is in still waters.

There is an Indian summer of grace—that time of long and well-improved experience, of deep and solid peace, and of such knowledge in divine things as comes from years of study and prayer. The glory which frost and sun spread upon the autumn foliage is such as that which crowns the aged saint. It is the brief golden age of our religious pilgrimage, the sweet idleness of enforced inactivity—a quiet which gets its zest from past toil, and its submission from the near prospect of the heavenly home. The beauty of old age is this sheen of light and warmth which God gives to his faithful servants. It is a state of the heart, a condition and experience which should follow upon years of devoted service to Christ. It is the ordinary allotment of those who come to the verge in the order of time, and who would seem to have passed the period of earthly enjoyment. It is the compensation and reward, in part, of long fidelity; it is also the opportunity of husbanding the rich stores that have been won from suffering and sacrifice.

It is a privilege and a blessing to be realized. Far from peevish discontent and morose repining, and far from chafing impatience, the venerable saint will rejoice in this second summer of God's consolations. In spite of infirmities and poverty, he will open his heart to the abundant benedictions which whisper around him, and his spirit will be filled with a sweeter and profounder rest than when he was in the midst of his youthful and manly activities and triumphs.

Drawing.

Full churches are the exception. Spurgeon, Talmage, Moody and a few others have crowded audiences. Under powerful revival stimulants congregations are swelled temporarily. The normal condition of the average church is far from fullness. The hearers are the members and their families, with only a scattering representation of the outside world. Those that come are there from purely religious motives, from educational bias, or from sectarian preferences. Good music, a certain social tone and an elegant house have their influence, but these alone do not inspire enthusiasm. The finest churches are not crowded, as a rule.

The elements of drawing are manifold. The house, the singing, the character of the membership, the theology, and perhaps chiefly the preacher, all combine, and have each their share in the result. The gospel in itself does not attract the multitude. The manner of its dispensation, the mere incidents of worship, evidently have more attractive power than the merits of the cause presented. This is in reference to packed and crowded houses. What power there is in truth itself is manifested in the average congregation. The gospel is preached with fair ability, the external surroundings are at least generally agreeable, and there is a considerable degree of spirituality, but the great multitude is not interested and brought into contact with the message of life. The average preacher usually secures such hearers as the church economy which he represents may gather, and such as the religion of Christ may affect. If he were to set up for himself, and to depend upon his personal influence, he would be without a hearer. Those who draw as preachers, apart from the organization of which they are the chief officers, by their superior eloquence, learning and genius, are passing few.

The celebrities that attract by their gifted pulpit utterances are certainly not more spiritual and earnest than thousands of devoted men who are nearly their equals also in mental vigor and culture. Mr. Moody is said to be unlearned, no preacher, and without polish. But still his style is popular, he has wonderful fertility of illustration and eminent tact. It would be easier to imitate Chalmers or Bascom. He would be a hard man to copy, just because he is, in his way, most rarely endowed. He may have more faith than most preachers, but his faith alone, without management, anecdote and a strong ad hominem way, would accomplish just what it does in other men. The singing is an accessory of importance, and one which has largely contributed to the success of his efforts. Our preachers have more to learn from his methods than from his theology, and his measures may be studied with profit. But, after all, they cannot be Moodys, and it may be well that they cannot. If miracles were common they would cease to be miracles, and if there were many Moodys there would be no Moodys at all. The novelty and the rarity of such qualifications are the secret of their wonderful effects to a considerable extent. God calls men of ordinary gifts, and occasionally men of extraordinary gifts. One Whitefield and one Wesley in a hundred years would seem to be enough. The brunt of the work, through the generations, falls upon men of moderate qualifications, and men who have not the power to magnetize and thrill.

How are they to draw, and how are the churches, with only moderately-gifted preachers, to excite and awaken the people? The old-time question was: "How shall they hear without a preacher?" but, having the preacher, the problem which now presses upon is: How can we get them to hear the preacher? Thousands in every city and in every section of the country do not come to church, and three-fourths of our churches have room enough, and to spare. If the people will not come to the preacher, the preacher ought to go to the people. If he cannot draw by mere pulpit utterance, he must set his members to work, and he must spend much of his own time and strength in going from house to house. In cities this course is imperative. Christian men and women must work with the pastor—they must go among the people "and compel them to come in." Every denomination in a large city ought, besides, to employ one or more active missionaries to work among the neglected classes, and to direct them to the churches and Sunday schools. And it would be well to have a movable tent in which to have preaching at different points from time to time. These and other expedients will cost money, but in no other way can we reach and save the multitudes that are as sheep without a shepherd. Go to the people, arrest their attention, instruct and arouse them, and they will flock to the churches. Christ, lifted up, draws all men, but the power of the cross can be felt only as Christ is preached to the world. The great question is how to preach Christ and how to adapt measures to this end. There is much in deep spirituality, in simple faith, in loving zeal, but the means of drawing men to the gospel and to the ordinances of the house of God are of scarcely secondary importance.

Southwest Missouri Conference.

The Southwest Missouri Conference held its session at Neosho, October 13–19. We are obliged to Bishop Keener, who presided, and to Bro. Prottsman, secretary, for the minutes. Five were admitted on trial; two discontinued at their own request; three readmitted; H. A. Bourland received by transfer; four local preachers elected and ordained deacons; J. L. Hagler elected and ordained elder; W. E. Woodard, T. P. Hill, located at their own request; five superannuated; J. N. Reid and S. S. Colburn died. Collected for claimants, $1,983.05; for missions, $1,649.26. The next session is to be at Miami. The Bishop kindly forwards us the following interesting and encouraging communication. He writes, St. Louis, October 20:

"I arrived here this morning from the Southwest Missouri Conference, which adjourned yesterday at twelve M., after an edifying session. The Conference met at Neosho, a town in a beautiful valley in the southwestern part of Missouri. It was most hospitably entertained. The territory of the Conference has been severely scourged by insects and drouth for the full width of two counties, ranging north and south through the State. Of course the collections indicate the fact; but, on the whole, they held up pretty well. The preachers themselves have stood up manfully during the stress; one brother had received but $12 in cash, though he had "preached this whole year on giving." The secret of living on so little money, however, was to be found in other forms of supplies generously sent to the "parson." The past winter was one of the hardest ever encountered in the West, and the spring floods were most devastating all through the valley of the Neosho.

Boonville, Lexington, Springfield, Kansas City, Independence, Jefferson City, Sedalia and Warrensburg are admirable points for the development of a Conference, besides many circuits even more desirable than the stations to those who have seen service, and take healthy views of the itinerancy. Quite a number of preachers have been transferred to other Conferences, and there is now a demand for men who are willing to share fairly in the toil of cultivating this hopeful and beautiful field. The Conference, by a hearty vote, invites transfers, and will, I doubt not, treat generously any who may come through episcopal appointment.

I should not omit to say that the corn planted since the failure of the wheat has produced one of the largest crops ever known in Missouri. The eye rests everywhere upon rich fields of maize that promise all the farmer may need, both of bread and meat, for the coming winter. The missionary anniversary was greatly enlivened and aided in the presence of Dr. Kelley, who gave us a capital address. The collection amounted, in "cash down," to $175—fully as much as the Conference expected, taking all things into account.

The Missouri Conference met at Glasgow, one of the most substantial appointments in the State. The houses and grounds remind one of the palmy days of the South—large and airy, surrounded by flower-plats and lawns. Abundance and taste, and warmth of entertainment, characterized the citizens, so far as I had opportunity to observe. The Conference itself is one of the strongest, most united and successful in the connection. It is, I suppose, the banner Conference in the missionary contributions this year. The anniversary was graced with the presence of Sister Lambuth, who spoke very effectively—the principal charm of the occasion. Bro. Alvin P. Parker also gave a new thrill to the Conference as their own missionary, taking leave and just about to accompany Mrs. Lambuth back to China. He has the moderation and the enthusiasm which should meet in those who start forth upon a life-enterprise. The prayers and love of his brethren, and of all who know him personally, will be with him every day of his missionary voyage. The amount collected in cash at the meeting was $800, which, with the year's report, sums up $7,466.40.

The Conference adjourned on Monday night, at a late hour, after a busy session. Central College, at Fayette, was represented by President Wills and two of its professors. No Conference has a better educational outlook. The female college at Lexington, under Dr. Sullivan, and that at Fayette, under Bro. Pittman, are doing a good work. A year ago I first became acquainted with the Missouri Conference. Since then a steady advance has been made in all the healthy agencies of Southern Methodism. At no point is this fact more evident than in the churches of St. Louis. Prayer meetings are well attended, congregations are large, churches are in full harmony, debts are paid or arranged for, and the time is not distant when the whole State will feel the spring of this strength at its center.

Yours truly, J. C. KEENER.

Indian Mission Conference.

We are obliged to Bishop Pierce, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, for the minutes of the session of the Indian Mission Conference, held at Atoka, Choctaw nation, October 6–10. H. P. Clay was discontinued. N. E. Parsons admitted into full connection. J. E. Daily readmitted. R. A. Francis was received in elder's orders from the Christian Union. James Mullen, a Choctaw, and Alex. B. Collett, both local, were elected and ordained deacons. T. B. Ruble, D. B. Cumming, J. C. Robinson, were superannuated. Contributed for missions, $187. The next session is to be at Vinita, Cherokee nation.

LETTER FROM BISHOP PIERCE.

MR. EDITOR: I have not time for a long letter. But I redeem my promise to you in substance if not in form.

I reached my appointment at the "Asbury Manual Labor School," spent a pleasant Sabbath with the superintendent, teachers, scholars and neighbors. Several preachers were present on their way to Conference. We had three services on the holy day. I preached again in the chapel, which serves also as a school-room, on Monday night. We had a good time. Tuesday I spent in writing letters—some to my family, some on Conference matters, and one for the old Southern.

The Asbury Manual Labor School is sustained by the council of the Creek (or, as they prefer to be called, the Muscogee) nation and the Missionary Board. There is a large three-story brick house, one superintendent, two teachers and eighty scholars. All agreed that there is no trouble in the matter of discipline. Order reigns, obedience is the rule. There is a fine farm connected with the institution. Corn, wheat, oats, sorghum and potatoes abound; a good stock of hogs and cattle; chickens are scarce—cause: cholera, and a lawless appetite among some.

Honor to whom honor. The Rev. Young Ewing has displayed great administrative ability. The school owes no man anything, and has money and supplies. The fare is abundant and wholesome. I found it a good place to spend a few days on this long journey of mine. On Tuesday evening came over to Eufaula, took supper with Sister Crabtree (ah, the venison steaks were delightful) and waited till near nine P. M. for the train to Atoka, where we arrived at midnight, and were assigned to Dr. Bond for the Conference session. The doctor was absent at the Choctaw council, but his wife and family gave me a hospitable reception.

The Missouri, Kansas and Texas railway traverses the Indian Territory, and has greatly changed the appearance of things. New towns are springing up all along, trade is revived, industry stimulated, and intercourse with the outside world is opened. The effect is going to be marked in many particulars. It is a forward movement on the path of these tribes in social progress and Christian civilization. The Bishops are done with long, hard rides in ambulances and wagons—camping out of nights, and all the adventure and romance of other years.

Conference opened at the canonical hour, nine A. M. on Wednesday morning. But few are present; some detained by sickness, which abounds in this country just now; some by the sessions of the Cherokee and Muscogee councils, to which they belonged. We went through the business in order, adjourning on Saturday night.

At the right time I shall have several things to say to the board about the Indian Mission Conference. We must have more men and more money to occupy this country. Changes are going on for which we must provide. The policy of the Conference itself, I think, should be amended by bringing more natives into membership in the body. More anon.

The statistics show a decrease, but they are defective. Preachers were absent, and reports were very imperfect. Such as we have we give unto you. Yours in love and labor,

G. F. PIERCE.

ATOKA, CHOCTAW NATION, Oct. 9, 1875.

ON SUNDAY, the twenty-fourth of October, Mr. Moody began his services in Brooklyn. The week-day meetings are reported to be thronged by thousands. Of the first Sunday the Tribune says:

The morning services were begun at half-past eight o'clock. Before six in the morning the crowd began to gather at the doors; at eight o'clock over five thousand persons were seated in the building, and three thousand or more had been turned away for lack of standing-room. In the afternoon twelve—possibly twenty—thousand were unable to gain admittance; meetings had to be organized in neighboring churches (Mr. Sankey going from place to place singing his songs,) while the sidewalks and house-stoops for blocks around were black with the constantly increasing crowd. Additional car-tracks had been laid by the street railroad companies to the doors of the building, and, though cars were run at intervals of only one minute, many thousands had to wend their ways homeward on foot. The prayer, with which the services were begun, though delivered by a minister whose manner is never impassioned and whose style is purely argumentative, was interrupted by frequent and fervent ejaculations from the audience, indicating the intense sympathy with the movement which existed. The songs of Mr. Sankey renewed and heightened these demonstrations, and the utterances of Mr. Moody raised the excitement, enthusiasm, religious fervor, as one may choose to call it, to the highest pitch.

That Chorus Again.

MR. EDITOR: It seems from your paper of last week that both you and Dr. Marshall found your thoughts running in poetical channels, so that your editorial page presented quite a poetical appearance. The poetry was beautiful, but if any preferred prose, you gave them a choice specimen from the masterly pen of Dr. B. M. Palmer.

Dr. Marshall gave us a timely warning against the dangers of singing false or doubtful theology. The sentiments that are sung into our souls find lasting lodgment there. He suggests improvements in some of the popular choruses of the day. The emendations which he proposed of the chorus beginning,

Jesus paid it all.

coincide almost exactly with the words as I find them published in the "Revivalist." For the benefit of all interested I here copy the two forms of that chorus as I find them on page 467 of the "Revivalist:"

"Jesus paid it all:
All to him I owe;
Sin had left a crimson stain;
He washed it white as snow."

Also thus:

"Jesus paid it all;
All to him I owe;
In that fountain filled with blood
He washes white as snow."

These choruses seem to be a sort of medley composed of lines or phrases extracted from the hymns in our hymn-book, but have lost much of their dignity, power and truth by their new settings. Hear Charles Wesley:

'Tis finished! All the debt is paid—
Justice divine is satisfied;
The grand and full atonement made—
God for a guilty world hath died.

How well the stately measure suits the solemn thought. H.

THE DISRUPTION OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, 1844-6. Comprising a thirty years' history of the relations of the two Methodisms. By Edward H. Myers, D. D. With an Introduction by T. O. Summers, D. D. Nashville, Tenn.: A. H. Redford, agent: Macon, Ga.: J. W. Burke & Co., 1875.

The publishers, in the following statement, give a tolerably full and altogether just estimate of the character of this work:

This book opens thus: "To all the members of the two Methodisms of the United States of America who wish to know and to follow the truth, this appeal to the future against the past—to 1876 against 1848—is respectfully dedicated by the author." It is pre-eminently a book for the times, when everybody is seeking to solve the problem of the future relations of the two Methodisms. The later generation of Methodists have here, in compact form, so complete a history of the "disruption" that they may be thoroughly "posted" as to all the facts and consequences of that transaction. Those who may find it necessary to discuss these facts, publicly or privately, will need to know what is here developed. Those who may ever be called on to vote respecting these relations, in either Annual or General Conferences, must know these facts before they can vote intelligently. Those who oppose fraternization should read it, to learn how thoroughly grounded upon principle is their opposition; while those who favor it need all the more to read this book, that they may learn how not only Christian principle, but common worldly integrity, may make a permanent fraternization possible and easy. In short, the book commends itself to all who may wish thoroughly accurate information respecting one of the leading questions of the day in the Christian world; particularly as it is written in the interests of the real fraternization of the two Methodisms.

The subjects discussed are the relations in 1844 of the Methodist Episcopal Church to slavery; the constitutional powers of the General Conference, and the relation of the Bishops to that body; the action of the General Conference of 1844, whereby an inevitable separation of General Conference jurisdiction was provided for; the subsequent action of the Southern Conferences; the legitimacy of the separation; this the third division of Episcopal Methodism; and the present relations of the two Methodisms. It will be seen that this is an exhaustive discussion of the entire subject; and, we may add, there is involved in these questions much of interesting Methodist history bearing on other subjects.

Dr. Summers, in his introduction, while commending the "irenic spirit" of the book, says: "Perhaps no man living is better acquainted with the matters discussed in this volume than its author. He was for several years editor of one of the leading journals of the church, he has been an efficient member of several General Conferences, and has been chosen by the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church South as a member of the commission 'to adjust all existing difficulties' between the Northern and Southern branches of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His relation to the subject, his great abilities and peculiar turn of mind, eminently qualify him for this work."

And again Dr. Summers says: "We are authorized to say that some of the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church South—we doubt not all of them will concur with their colleagues—agree with us in our estimate of this work and the expediency of its publication."

The book can be had of those who sell Methodist publications in the South, as well as of the publishers; and it is hoped that Northern Methodist houses will be generous enough to give it circulation among those of their patrons who wish to know what Southern Methodism says in its own defense.

Price—Single copy, by mail, $1.25; from five to fifty copies, at one time, cash, per copy, $1; fifty or more copies, at one time, with cash, per copy, eighty cents.

N. B.—Editors and others to whom the book is sent are respectfully solicited to furnish such comments as they make on it—especially if their criticisms be adverse—to Dr. E. H. Myers, Savannah, Ga., who desires to ascertain how far they may add to his knowledge or correct his opinions on this much-mooted question.

We need to add only that we have read the work, and that we could wish for nothing fairer or more conclusive on the subject. It is admirable for its temperate spirit, candor, cogent argument, condensation, and for the exclusion of all irrelevant matter. The causes leading to the disruption are clearly exhibited, the constitutional principles involved in the suspension of Bishop Andrew are discussed with legal acumen, and the Plan of Separation, in reference to its character, provisions, and conditions and binding force, is lucidly analyzed. The author gives to "the plan" the importance which justly belongs to it, shows the bearings of it upon the status and property of Southern Methodism, and insists upon its recognition, in substance, 'by the Northern Church as the basis of a true fraternity.' Dr. Myers' book is eminently "a book for the times," and it should be in the hands of all our people.

LECTURES TO MY STUDENTS. A selection from addresses delivered to the students of the Pastors' College, Metropolitan Tabernacle. By C. H. Spurgeon, president. First series. New York: Sheldon & Co., 1875.

Mr. Spurgeon grows better with age. His later works are fresh, entertaining, and pruned of some of the wild luxuriance which belonged to his first published sermons. He is a great preacher, and can give more valuable advice and instruction to young preachers than almost any other man. This work is in the author's best style, and its topics are handled with masterly skill. We recommend it to our young preachers as about the most useful book they can get on many of the subjects discussed. The lectures on Self-Watch and Private Prayer are alone worth more than the price of the volume. There are twelve lectures in all, on such themes as: The Call to the Ministry, Our Public Prayer, Sermons—their matter, On the Choice of a Text, On the Voice, The Faculty of Impromptu Speech. Every lecture is lively, and packed with strong common sense and practical information. For sale by George Ellis & Bro., Camp street, New Orleans.

HESTER HOWARD'S TEMPTATION. A soul's story. By Mrs. C. A. Warfield, author of the Household of Bouverie. Philadelphia: T. B. Peterson & Bros.

Mrs. Warfield, by her first work, the Household of Bouverie, has won a high place in the esteem and admiration of many of the best literary critics. The present work is represented to us as not inferior. The moral tone of it is said to be excellent. We are indebted to the publishers for a copy.

SEVEN OAKS—A STORY OF TO-DAY. By J. G. Holland. New York: Scribner & Armstrong, 1875.

This story has been published as a serial in Scribner's Magazine. We have read it, and like it. It is in Dr. Holland's best vein. For sale by Eyrich, New Orleans.

LEAH—A WOMAN OF FASHION. By Mrs. Annie Edwardes. New York: Sheldon & Co.

This, we believe, is a tale of English life and society. The writer is said to be one of the brightest and freshest. For sale by Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

WIDE AWAKE for November is a very fine number. It is splendidly illustrated. This is a very interesting magazine for children.

THE SANITARIAN for November has a good table of contents. McDivett, Campbell & Co., publishers, New York.

THE second Protestant Episcopal Church Congress will meet in Musical Fund Hall, Philadelphia, November 9, and continue in session four days. The first congress was held last October, at the opening of the general convention. The congress is a voluntary, unofficial assemblage, meeting simply for the discussion of questions affecting the interests of the church.

—THE Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and Episcopalian Churches are holding a series of union meetings in the city of Mexico. Great interest has been manifested in the services. Dr. Butler has received eighteen converts into membership in the Methodist Church.

AT THE recent session of the Holston Conference Rev. W. E. Munsey, D. D., was readmitted and transferred to the Louisiana Conference.

REV. J. W. MATHIS, a superannuated member of the Memphis Conference, died October 25.

National Local Preachers' Association.

The eighteenth annual session of the National Local Preachers' Association convened, as per announcement, in the Raper chapel, Dayton, O., on Saturday, October 16, 1875.

It was ordered that a committee of five be appointed to consider the matter of deficiency due on the Embury monument, and apportion the same among the Conferences. At half-past two the business committee reported in part, recommending the appointment of a Committee on the Centennial, to consist of five, to be appointed by the chair.

The following officers were elected, namely: For president, J. W. Loane, Baltimore Conference. Vice presidents, J. Mosser, Southern Illinois Conference; T. Rogers North, Indiana Conference; and B. W. Gehman, Cincinnati Conference. Secretary, W. H. Kincaid, Pittsburg Conference. Assistant secretary, T. D. McFarland, New York Conference. Corresponding secretary, W. J. P. Ingraham, Philadelphia Conference. Treasurer, N. U. Walker, Pittsburg Conference.

Philadelphia was selected as the place, and the last Saturday in September as the time, for the meeting next year. The business committee reported the following resolutions, which were adopted:

Resolved, That we memorialize the General Conference to make such changes in the Discipline as will make the District Conferences obligatory, and not optional, as at present.

Resolved, That we recommend such disciplinary measures as will make our local preachers more effective in their spheres of labor, and in cases where local ministers are ineffective from any cause, save mental or physical disability, their parchments be taken from them, and they be silenced.

The following is the Committee on the Centennial: G. W. Evans, chairman (having been chosen by the meeting,) W. H. Kincaid, T. T. Tasker and T. D. McFarland. W. H. Kincaid, J. Cottier and G. W. Evans were appointed to attend the meeting of the Bishops in November next, and represent the views of the association in regard to District Conferences. G. W. Evans, T. T. Tasker and W. J. P. Ingraham, with power to add to their number, were appointed a local committee of arrangements for next year.

A large deputation was appointed to visit the next General Conference, of which T. T. Tasker was made chairman. W. J. P. Ingraham was made treasurer of the Embury monument fund.

A resolution, recognizing the Woman's Temperance work, encouraging them in it, and urging co-operation with them, was also warmly passed.

I Must Have a Religious Newspaper.

1. Because such a paper, rightly conducted, is a public institution of great value, exerting a happy influence upon all the varied important interests of society; and I am bound to do my part in sustaining such an institution.

2. Because my religious growth as a Christian is materially promoted by such a paper. My religion waxes or wanes into life and power in proportion to the clear or dim views I have of the great things of the kingdom of God. Next to my Bible, my paper increases the clearness and extent of my spiritual vision, giving light and expelling darkness by its never-ceasing supply of facts and appeals, which are sunshine and shower to the spiritual verdure of my soul.

3. Because I want a good commentary on the Bible. My religious paper furnishes it, often by direct expositions, by items of religious biography, strikingly illustrative of Bible truth, by constantly recurring events of Divine Providence equally illustrative, by narratives of revivals, conversions, progress of missions at home and abroad, all showing the power of the gospel, and explanatory of God's word.

4. Because I want to be a strong man armed for defending truth and destroying error. Political partisans about me are familiar with all the facts and arguments which sustain their distinctive views, and are ready and able to assault or defend. I want a similar kind of ability and facility in sustaining the truth and in advancing the cause of my Master. My religious paper furnishes me with a power of offense which is invaluable. It is as if a new arsenal of spiritual weapons was opened and offered to me every week.

5. My family needs to have just such a fountain of religious instruction and influence as is opened in it every week by such a periodical. The variety I find there meets the cases and wants of old and young, male and female, ministering to the welfare of the entire circle.

6. My neighbor needs my paper. He will not take one for himself as he ought to. But he shall not escape. He shall have a look at mine. For when it has walked into my dwelling and stayed long enough to scatter blessings on all sides, it walks up street or down street, or over the way, to scatter them further, or takes wings, by the mail, and does good a thousand miles away.

Therefore, Mr. Editor, if you find a paper of mine returning with the word "stop" upon it you may infer that I have gone to the poor-house or the mad-house or the narrow house appointed for all the living.—Southern Christian Advocate.

OUR BILLS.

We are sending our bills to subscribers. Many of them have assured us that they would remit as soon as crops were harvested. We have waited till now, hoping that by this time they could pay the small amounts they owe. Each subscriber may think his two dollars and fifty cents too small an amount to affect us; but if every subscriber should reason the same way, and withhold it, the sum total would be over twenty thousand dollars. We need every dollar due us—we need it badly. Will you send at once through your pastor, if convenient? If not, please remit directly to this office and greatly oblige the publisher.

GREAT VARIETY OF PLAIDS AND OTHER FABRICS AT LOW PRICES.—The extensive establishment of Messrs. Braselman & Adams presents a fine display of goods adapted to the season. This firm deserves to be rewarded for their enterprise and energy in building up such an extensive and prosperous business in the Garden District. The property-holders in the vicinity of their store are not a little indebted to their enterprise for the enhanced value of real estate, compared with other places where such enterprise is wanting.

BUILDING PAPER.—Elsewhere will be found the advertisement of our excellent neighbor, Edward Thompson, Esq., whose enterprise has brought into use a number of useful and economical articles for building and other domestic purposes, some of them his own invention. The advertisement referred to is that of his building paper, samples of which we have seen at his establishment, and have not been more pleased with their beauty of finish than surprised with their cheapness.

PEWS, PULPITS, READING DESKS, and every description of interior church work is manufactured at the Chestnut Street Steam Mills, corner of Twenty-Third and Chestnut streets, Philadelphia. There is great economy in buying these articles when made by machinery perfectly adapted to their manufacture. Address R. N. Buckley, proprietor.

PRINTING OFFICE FOR SALE.—Mr. Wilson, who has conducted one of the most successful job offices in the country, is compelled to dispose of the valuable materials of his office owing to the loss of sight, and offers in another column his presses and type for sale at a great sacrifice. See his advertisement headed "To Country Printers."

CLOTHING, BOOTS, SHOES, HATS AND FURNISHING GOODS.—The establishment of D. Mercier, Esq., corner Dauphine and Bienville streets, is worthy the attention of customers. We advise our readers to call and examine his stock for themselves. He guarantees satisfaction. See his advertisement on the fifth page.

COAL.—Messrs. H. & C. Tyler, No. 9 Carondelet street, have large capital invested in their business, and have such advantages as enable them to compete with any in the trade. They are honorable and obliging gentlemen, and we commend their advertisement with pleasure to the attention of our readers.

WOOD, COAL AND ICE.—William Velden, Esq., at the corner of Philip and Prytania streets, is well known at this office as a faithful, prompt and reliable dealer in wood, coal and ice. Good measure and good quality may be relied on when orders are sent to him; at least this is our experience.

DRY GOODS AND NOTIONS.—Mr. P. W. Mohr, 619 Magazine street, has the right motto in trade: "Quick sales and small profits." Through his advertisement in this issue of our paper he proposes to keep constantly on hand an assorted stock of dry goods and notions. Give him a call.

OPIUM-EATERS are interested in the advertisement of Dr. F. H. Hubbard, manager of the St. Louis Inebriate Hospital, to be found in the columns of the ADVOCATE.

FACTORS' AND TRADERS' INSURANCE CAMPANY.—The above named company is second to none in the country. With a capital largely over $1,000,000, and an unquestioned credit, the officers have combined a liberal and judicious administration of its affairs, and secured a large, remunerative and safe patronage. The board of trustees is composed of a class of merchants whose well-known business capacities entitle their combined wisdom, in the management of the trusts committed to them by the stockholders, to universal confidence. In selecting their officers the trustees have acted wisely, as results have shown. Col. Ed. A Palfrey is well known not only in the city, but throughout the State, for his energy, enterprise and business capacity, as well as for that high sense of honor for which his family have ever been distinguished in Louisiana. The courteous, prompt, efficient and obliging secretary, Thomas F. Walker, Esq., is a worthy co-laborer with the president, and is highly esteemed by those brought into contact with him in the intercourse of business.

We are much gratified to learn that at a late meeting of the board this company voted a subscription of fifteen thousand dollars to the New Orleans Pacific railroad. The importance of this enterprise is too well known to our readers to need further statement in this connection; but it should be a fixed principle, in bestowing our patronage upon moneyed corporations, to direct it, as far as possible into those channels through which the surplus will flow back to us in aid to enterprises for the public good. See advertisement elsewhere.

A NEW CITY DIRECTORY.—A well-compiled directory, such as the one last published by Soards for 1875, is of almost universal necessity in the stores and offices of New Orleans. We have never had a better directory than his for this city, but the publisher himself promises to surpass it in his New Orleans Directory for 1876. He will soon call upon our merchants for advertisements and subscriptions, and commence the canvass. The publication will involve much labor and expense, and the publisher relies upon the liberality of many subscribers to reimburse his investment. The advantages of advertising in this work are known to our business men, and they will only help themselves when they help make a good City Directory.

MESSRS. BONQUOIS & PAUL, under the St. Charles Hotel, are turning out some beautiful specimens of their own manufacture in the boot and shoe line. Take a look at the samples of their work as you pass, and judge for yourselves.

GLASS STAINER.—We direct the special attention of those interested in the construction of halls, churches and other public buildings to the advertisement of Mr. Adolph Sutter, 242 North Seventh street, St. Louis, Mo.

IMPROVED SHOULDER BRACES, bandages, abdominal supporters and other appliances for the relief of suffering. See the advertisement of Mrs. E. J. Harding, St. Louis, Mo., headed "To Physicians and Ladies."

The SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a Bitter or Bad Taste in the Mouth, Pain in the Back, Sides or Joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism, Sour Stomach, Loss of Appetite, Bowels Alternately Costive and Lax, Headache, Loss of Memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done, Debility, Low Spirits, a Thick, Yellow Appearance of the Skin and Eyes, a Dry Cough, often mistaken for Consumption. FOR FIFTY YEARS

HAS attracted the notice of the most eminent and leading members of the medical profession, in this country and Europe, by its great power and excellence in curing what were considered incurable cases of disease, where the patients have been almost destroyed by SCHOFULA, chronic and Prof. VALENTINE MOTT, of the New York University, Profs. DUNGLISON, DEWEES and PANCOAST, of Philadelphia, and many other physicians of celebrity and eminence, gave, over their own signatures, letters recommending it, and certifying to its great merits. It has been occasionally advertised during this long period, and thousands of families throughout the United States recommend and use it. The Laboratory is under the direction of Dr. FRANKLIN STEWART, who has devoted his attention and skill to its careful preparation during the past twenty-five years, and not a bottle put up that is not worth ten times its cost to the patient. It is perfectly safe for the most diseased and debilitated, and will always relieve where it will not cure. In all Cases where the Blood is not Pure it should be Used Freely.

Black Rot Among Grapes.

Black rot in grapes is one of the diseases of which we know little beyond the fact of its appearance and disastrous results. Like the pear blight, apple-tree blight and black rot in apples, it is one of those microscopic fungoid diseases which appear and disappear, leaving us no wiser in regard to causes or cure. We have known the black rot in grapes to be very destructive in dry seasons, especially during cool, then again in hot, moist weather, as in the present summer, when few varieties have escaped.

The vines during the prevalence of this disease do not appear to be affected in the least. The growth may be vigorous, and the leaves large and healthy, while every grape on the bunches becomes black and falls off. The fruit on young vines is as likely to be affected as those on old; in fact our oldest Concords, planted some thirteen years ago, are well loaded with healthy fruit, while that on younger vines has nearly all disappeared. Rogers' Hybrids are a total failure this season, the black rot making a clean sweep of the different varieties. The Martha is not affected, neither is the Clinton nor Delaware, although all stand in close proximity to others which have rotted badly.

Sulphur is frequently recommended as a preventive against this disease, and we have seen it tried with apparently good effect. But the price at which the best varieties of grapes have sold during the past few years is rather a strong argument against spending much time in attempting to ward off disease. The vineyardist, however, runs no greater risk in raising grapes than the orchardist with his pears, apples and other larger kinds of fruits, for all are liable to fail occasionally, and when everybody has an abundant crop prices are certain to run low.—Rural New Yorker.

COLOR OF HORSES.—How much or little climate has to do with the color of horses it is very difficult to predicate at this age of the world; for though we may be told that white or gray or chestnut predominate in Arabia, that black is most common in Russia, and that in England, France and Germany bay is found to greatly outnumber any other, there is no telling how far fashion and consequent high prices may have spurred on enterprising breeders to the accomplishment of a triumph over the primordial tendencies of climate. We should be inclined to confine the color of horses in this country to black, bay, brown and chestnut. It is true that there are plenty of grays, but gray really belongs to the composite colors; and it is stated by an authority that "all gray horses come into the world chestnut, or more generally black." Grays, notwithstanding Gray Momus, are comparatively seldom seen, and more seldom still to advantage, on the race course, to which all questions relating to the excellence of horses must ultimately be referred. As for the white horses, which are such "pretty creatures" in the eyes of the nursery governess and her young charges, it may be interesting to their admirers to learn that they are said to be, for the most part, gray horses whose hair is white with age. A white horse, born white, with the pink nose and pinky eyes, is said to be as great a rarity in Europe as an Albino; and there seems to be no good reason why art should be employed to make it increase and multiply. Of black horses, it will be remembered, the old Arab chief had not a very high opinion; and though it might not be impossible to give a list of black horses which have distinguished themselves in England, and won undying fame in the racing calendar, that color is mostly associated in one's mind with the heavy household cavalry and the undertaker.—Pall Mall Gazette.

ARTIFICIAL BUTTER.—The following article is from the Pall Mall Gazette: Butter, it is stated, is prepared now by a butter manufactory in New York according to the following process: Agents are employed to visit slaughter-houses and buy up all the beef suet. This is carted to the factory and cleansed. Then it is put into meat-choppers and minced fine. It is afterward placed in a boiler with as much water in bulk as itself. A steam pipe is introduced among the particles of suet and they are melted. The refuse of the membrane goes to the bottom of the water, the oily substance floats and is removed. This consists of butter matter and stearine. A temperature of eighty degrees melts the former and leaves the stearine at the bottom. The butter matter or cream is drawn off; about thirteen per cent. of fresh milk is added, and the necessary salt, and the whole is churned for ten or fifteen minutes. The result is Orange county butter at half the usual cost. The stearine is sold at twelve cents a pound to the candle-maker, and the refuse at one cent a pound to the manufacturer of food for cattle. A company with a capital of $500,000 has been organized for the manufacture of butter by this method, and it is expected that the dividends will amount to one hundred per cent. Meanwhile a chemist in France is reported to have made milk of grass; but, as the milk thus made is much more costly than the old-fashioned milk, his discovery is not likely to be so profitable as that of the butter manufacturer.

CARE OF SHEEP.—Suitable inclosures should be provided as near the homestead as possible, and it should be made the business of some one on the farm to pen them every night. Until a few years back the writer, in common with others, was a constant sufferer from depredations from dogs and rogues. But about three years ago he determined to try this remedy of fencing, and the result has been that he has not lost a sheep in this way since. And for the benefit of others I will give my plan of management. For this purpose I have two small lots, of two to three acres each, inclosed, very near my dwelling-house. On one of them is a large, comfortable shelter, closed up on the north and west sides, and open to the east and south. During the winter months the sheep are penned regularly, and fed when necessary. In the spring they are taken off this lot, which, having been manured and enriched by the droppings of the sheep during the winter, is plowed up and cultivated in vegetables. The sheep are then penned in the other lot, and continued there until the fall, when they are returned to the winter lot. The second lot has been put down in grass, and furnishes the sheep with grazing during the night. This lot is also enriched by the droppings of the sheep, and my plan is to put it in turnips every third year. This plan might be improved upon by having three lots instead of two, so that the summer lots might be alternated by grass and turnips.—Southside, in the Planter and Farmer.

KINDNESS TO MUCH COWS.—One of the greatest errors in overcoming cows that are unquiet while being milked is to whip, beat, and kick and bawl at them. This is generally done, and the cow becomes afraid and angry, and, instead of becoming better, grows worse. They dislike to be milked, for they know that loud words and blows always attend the operation. They dread to see the milker as the little urchin dreads to see the birchen rod in the hand of an angry pedagogue when he expects to have it applied to his back. A cow kindly and properly treated is pleased to see the milker, gladly awaits his or her approach, and submits with pleasure to the operation of being milked.

Every one having experience with cows knows this to be true. But the cow is opposed to a change of milkers. She soon becomes attached to one person who performs the operation, and does not willingly and freely give down her milk to another person; therefore have one milker to certain cows, and, bear in mind, if you change milkers it is at the expense of a loss of milk and of injury to the cow.

All animals appreciate kind treatment, and resent abuse. See that those who milk them control themselves, govern their passions, speak low and kindly under almost any provocation; and soon the cows will learn that they are not going to be abused, and will submit to the operation.—Ohio Farmer.

CHEESE FRITTERS.—Slice thin one-half dozen large tart apples, and prepare half as many thin slices of nice cheese. Beat up one or two eggs, according to the quantity required, and season high with salt, mustard and a little pepper. Lay the slices of cheese to soak for a few moments in the mixture, then put each slice between two slices of apples, sandwich stylo, and dip the whole into the beaten egg, then fry in hot butter like oysters, and serve very hot. These fritters are an addition to any breakfast table.

REMEDY FOR CABBAGE WORMS.—A correspondent states that buckwheat flour, sifted through a sieve in the evening, or in the morning when the dew is on, will effectually eradicate cabbage worms. Two applications (and often one) will do the work. He has succeeded in raising splendid cabbage, while his neighbors who did not use the remedy have invariably failed. It is far preferable to hellebore, or any other article for the purpose, and has the advantage of being harmless.

A FRENCH horticulturist has perceived that, wherever a fruit—a pear, for instance—rested upon some branch or other support beneath it, that fruit always grew to a large size. The support given to the fruit permits the sap vessels of the stem to remain open, and the fruit has received abundant nourishment. Mr. Thomas Meehan made substantially the same observation some years ago.

Scientific.

—A very ingenious application of electro-metallurgy has recently been brought before the notice of the Society of Arts in London. It consists in the application of a coat of silver, by means of electro-deposition, on natural leaves and flowers. By this means very delicate ornaments are produced, since the precise form and texture of the natural leaf is preserved under the thin silver film. The special process by which these results are attained is the invention of a Mr. Denton.

—A curious instance of the lifting power exerted by plants is related by the London Daily News: "A tradesman residing in High street, the busiest street in Worcester, observed, the other morning, that a square stone on the pavement adjoining his cellar grating had been lifted out of place, and as a neighbor had, not long before, been robbed by thieves entering his premises by raising a stone of the pavement, he became somewhat alarmed, and sent for the police. After an examination the stone, which weighed over eighty pounds, was raised, and it was then discovered that it was not a thief but three mushrooms that had caused the displacement. The mushrooms were fine specimens, six inches in diameter and with unusually thick stems."

—M. Paul Gervais (Journal de Zoologie, 1875) contributes to our knowledge of the osteology of the remarkable sea otter (Enhydris marina,) an animal of unusual interest to the naturalist, as well as one of high commercial value. Some indications of its osseous structure had already been given us by Everard, Home, Martin, Lichtenstein, Lucas and DeBlainville; but the species was not described in the great Osteographie of the last named. Gervais' article is in the main simply descriptive, although some general conclusions respecting the systematic position of the genus are drawn. Both G. R. Gray and T. Gill have proposed to make the genus the type of a special group of Mustelidæ, apart from Lutrinæ, which contains the land otters. Peculiarities of the dentition and of the structure of the fore and hind limbs seem to bear out the distinction claimed; from which, nevertheless, M. Gervais dissents. Certain peculiarities of anchylosis of the sacral vertebræ are specially noted. The character of the teeth indicates a regimen of fish and crustacea, rather than the purely carnivorous one of other otters. The modification of the hind feet, which strongly resemble those of seals, is one of the most notable features. The fore feet are strikingly small in comparison, like the paws of a cat. The species is thoroughly aquatic, living in the open sea, with so much of the manners and general appearance of a seal that at least one author of repute has classed it among the pinnipeds.

CONUNDRUM BY AN IRISHMAN.—Why were the monks of old seldom warm? Because they were nearly always "cowled."

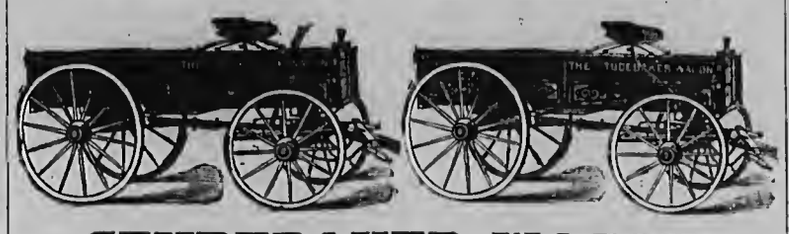
I HAVE RECENTLY ACCEPTED THE AGENCY OF THE CELEBRATED



STUDEBAKER WAGON.

FROM ONE TO SIX HORSE.

THE MOST SUBSTANTIAL WAGONS MADE!

There are several reasons why all should buy the above Wagon: First. They are made of the BEST SELECTED TIMBER, the same being cut at the proper season of the year, piled under sheds, properly dated, and allowed to remain there from three to five years. Second. The wood-work is shaped by the latest improved machinery, put together by the BEST WAGON MECHANICS IN THE WORLD, and are the best ironed and painted Wagons in the market. Third. Their thimble skeins, made of select iron, are set by patent skein setters, and weigh from four to twenty-five pounds per set more than any other, thereby making a perfect running Wagon, which will not break. Fourth. They are the only Wagon in which the SLOPE-SHOULDER SPOKE is used; hence they have the best wheel, which is actually the foundation of the Wagon, and should be carefully examined by persons purchasing. Fifth. They are sold only by responsible parties, and every Wagon is warranted; while the Studebaker Bros. are practical workmen, and attend to their business personally; hence the superiority of their work over all others.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The river is 14 feet 6 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals for the three days ending November 2:

Mississippi river and bayous	bales... 15,539
Red river	2,218
Railroads	6,111
Lake	76
Mobile	1,948
Texas	1,503
Total	27,395

On Saturday the market opened with a good inquiry, but operations were restricted by light offerings, and the business during the morning did not exceed 1 200 bales, after which the movement showed rather more animation, but without showing much activity. The sales were confined to 3,500 bales. On Monday the dispatches reporting a decline of 1-32@1-16c. in futures, and ⅛c. in spots, led buyers to claim concessions which factors were unwilling to grant, the latter being in many cases more stringent in their pretensions, and the sales during the morning hardly exceeded 1,500 bales; but later in the day, in the face of a further decline in that market of ⅛c. in spots, parties came together more freely on the basis of Saturday's figures, and took 4,200 bales, making a total of 5,700 bales. On Tuesday the market was steady at previous rates. The sales during the morning were of moderate extent, but later in the day parties came together more freely, and the movement became quite active, resulting in swelling the entire business to 6 600 bales, mostly at a falling off of ⅛c. A style of middling which commanded on Monday 12⅛c. sold at 12¼c., and 13c. was accepted for strict middling which had sold at 13⅛c.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 15,800 bales, against 18,300 for the corresponding time last week and 12,800 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 182,015 bales, against 151,086 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 81,721 bales. The increase by the reports per telegraph is 111,321—830,790 against 719,469. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 31,458 bales to France, of 60,249 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 41,770 to Great Britain. We quote:

Strict ordinary	11 @ 11⅛
Good ordinary	11¼ @ 11⅜
Strict good ordinary	11⅝ @ 11⅞
Low middling	12⅛ @ 12⅜
Strict low middling	12½ @ 12¾
Middling	12⅞ @ 13
Strict middling	12⅞ @ 13⅛
Good middling	13¼ @ 13⅜
Middling fair	14¼ @ 14¾

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

The Christian Advocate.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. J. HARP, FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

VOL. 21. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1875. NO. 46.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

GALVESTON, Nov. 2.—The fire at Sherman, Texas, was first discovered in the St. Cloud Hotel. A strong southwesterly wind swept the fire across the street, burning the row of frame buildings used as offices, and then raged on both sides of the street, destroying everything as far north and including the new postoffice building on Houston street and south side of the square. The flames spread so rapidly that but few goods were saved. The postoffice and contents, and every printing office burned. Sixty-five places of business were burned, and some thirty families are homeless. The losses are estimated at $340,000. Nearly all the frame structures were only partially covered by insurance.

MACON, GA., Nov. 2.—A very susceptible shock of an earthquake was felt here last night. It lasted at least thirty seconds, and shook the windows, floors and walls. The motion was felt about ten o'clock.

JACKSON, Nov. 3.—The Democrats have swept the State, electing their entire ticket in nearly every county. They have about thirty majority in the House and six or eight in the Senate. The Democrats elect the entire congressional delegation, with the possible exception of the sixth district, and returns indicate a success in it. All is peace, and no disturbance is reported anywhere.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 3.—Returns received up to this hour (midnight) from this State indicate that Hartranft, Republican, for Governor, has a majority of about 17,000.

MILWAUKEE, Nov. 3.—The returns received to-day make it certain the Republicans elect their State ticket by a majority ranging from 2,000 to 5,000. The Republicans carry the Legislature and have thirty majority on joint ballot.

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—The Times concedes 2,000 to 3,000 Democratic majority. The World claims 10,000. The Tribune says the Democrats elect the entire State ticket by 7,000. The Herald gives the Democratic majority at 5,000.

The Republicans, to fill a congressional vacancy, elect their candidate in the Chautauqua district.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 4.—A special from Virginia City says the mining situation is encouraging. The water is falling and building progressing briskly.

ALBANY, N. Y., Nov. 5.—The returns received by the Argus give a majority for Bigelow of 16,795, with the prospect of a further increase.

MILWAUKEE, Nov. 5.—Returns from remote towns are unfavorable to the Republicans. It will require the official count to determine the result.

Ludington is probably elected by 1,000 majority; the rest of the Republicans are defeated.

ST. PAUL, MINN., Nov. 5.—Legislative returns are as yet meager, but the Democrats appear to have gained so far four or five members. This, if not offset by Republican gains, will make the Legislature very close.

KANSAS CITY, Nov. 5.—The Times has returns from 76 of the 103 legislative districts in Kansas, which show the election of 39 straight Republicans, and 37 opposition, classed under the head of Democrats, Independent and Reformers.

Last year only 26 members went into the opposition caucus, showing that the contest this year had been considerably closer than then. The Democrats also elect a senator in the district where there was a vacancy, and also elect a district judge in the Fort Scott district, being one of three vacancies.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—One hundred guns were fired by the Republicans this evening in honor of their victories of last Tuesday. A procession was formed and proceeded to the executive mansion, where they serenaded the President, who from the front of the portico acknowledged the compliment as follows:

"Gentlemen, I am very glad to meet you on this occasion, and to congratulate you on so good a cause for rejoicing to the entire country over the elections of last Tuesday. While the Republican majorities were not great, they were sufficient to accomplish the purpose.

"The rag baby has been entirely suppressed, and the people now know what kind of money they are to have in the future, and I think we have an assurance that the Republicans will control this government for at least four years longer."

Three cheers were then given for the President, three cheers for hard money, and three cheers for the President's school policy.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—There was a large attendance at the revival meeting at the Brooklyn Tabernacle this morning, and an unusually earnest religious sentiment was manifested throughout the congregation. So anxious were many to testify to the blessed work of the Lord that several were on their feet at the same time. There were about two hundred requests for prayer.

FOREIGN.

MADRID, Nov. 5.—The Diaro Espagnol says the Vatican has sent a note to Madrid which expresses its approval of Cardinal Simeoni's conduct regarding the circular note; it insists upon the execution of the concordat; refuses to recognize the royal placit; attributes civil war to religious tolerance, and demands that the Bishop of Urgel be tried by ecclesiastical judges, and not by an ordinary tribunal.

One thousand more soldiers will embark at Santander on the eighth for Cuba. The government has transferred two brigades from Catalonia to the north. The Cronista reasserts that the meeting of the Cortes will not be postponed.

VERSAILLES, Nov. 5.—Duke de Audiffret Pasquier was elected president of the Assembly by the combination of the Left with a portion of the Right. This is regarded as a demonstration against the Bonapartists.

BOMBAY, Nov. 7.—The Serapis, with the Prince of Wales on board, arrived here yesterday.

BOMBAY, Nov. 8.—Gen. Lord Napier, of Magdala, Sir Phillip E. Woodhouse, Governor of Bombay, Hon. Sir M. R. Westropp, the chief justice, and many others, including the civil, military and municipal authorities, accompanied by seventy native princes and chiefs, met and welcomed the Prince of Wales on his landing from the Serapis. On reaching land the municipality of Bombay presented the royal visitor with an appropriate address of welcome.

From the Work.

ASBURY CAMP MEETING.—Mr. Editor: No doubt an abler pen has already given you the locality, with various other items connected with the above-named meeting. But inasmuch as the wielder of that pen was, by force of the inexorable law of circumstances, precluded the privilege of remaining until the close, we thought it would not be altogether out of place to furnish this brief sketch.

The meeting commenced, as stated by Dr. Andrews, on the first day of this month (Friday,) at night.

On Monday morning, to all human appearances, we were doomed to be broken up by the rain; but a gracious Providence so tempered this as to allow us to be but little disturbed, and the glorious work went on with rapidly increasing interest. At night (Monday) such a time of rejoicing I never saw. Forty souls were happily converted, and I am sure that I never witnessed such a dispensation of the power of God as was there observed. The meeting was a glorious success. Quite a number were added to the church, and fifty souls converted. The popular estimate of the number present was twenty-five hundred to three thousand. Land was secured and liberal measures projected for a permanent establishment of the encampment. The editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is cordially invited to the next.

J. L. SKIPPER.

BELL'S LANDING, October, 1875.

BEAUREGARD, MISS.—Mr. Editor: The Lord has been gracious unto us at this place and vicinity. On every side the good One has given of his Spirit. First our Baptist brethren had a protracted meeting about four miles from Beauregard (east,) and added about fifty to their communion. Then Bro. E. F. Mullens, of the Zion mission, which lies northwest of us, held two protracted meetings, and forty-one were added to his membership. Then the Providence camp meeting, on the Providence circuit, of which you and your readers have been informed, added twenty-five members to that circuit.

At Beauregard we held a protracted meeting of five days' continuance, which resulted in nineteen accessions to the church at this place. On the second Sunday night in October we commenced a protracted meeting at Wesson, which resulted in the accession of fifty-seven members to the church at that place. We continued it eighteen days, and were assisted by Bros. E. F. Mullens, H. R. Singleton and J. M. Weems, who rendered valuable ministerial aid.

W. E. BALLARD.

WE LEARN from the African Repository, says the Christian Intelligencer, that the regular fall expedition to Liberia by the American Colonization Society is expected to be dispatched in November. Among the emigrants preparing to go at that time are Rev. Andrew Cartwright, of Elizabeth City, N. C., and Rev. Charles W. Bryant, of New Orleans, and their families, and some of their church members. The Repository states that since the close of the war over three thousand people have been afforded passage and established in Liberia, and thousands of others are earnestly pressing their demands upon the society for the facilities to enable them to remove and obtain a home in the land from whence their ancestors were forcibly brought to this country. The applicants are mostly in families and neighborhoods, many of them being the most intelligent, enterprising and well-to-do in their respective districts, and are moved to emigrate by letters from relatives and acquaintances residing in the republic. The project of removal to Liberia is more popular with the negro race at present than it has been at any former period.

A WEATHER REPORTER—A clap of thunder.

Railroad Connections with Texas.

Our readers are aware that a company has been organized and duly chartered, under the style of the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company, for the purpose of building a road to connect New Orleans with Texas, and with the Texas and Pacific railroad. Louisiana and the entire Southwest are interested in this enterprise, and to New Orleans it is most vital. The wonder is that any man who has a foot of real estate or a dollar invested in business, anywhere in this region, should hesitate to invest in this road. It starts from Alexandria, on Red river, and runs direct to Mansfield, with Marshall as the western terminus, where it connects with the Texas and Pacific. There are two or three roads already partly constructed by which the Alexandria terminus may be speedily connected with New Orleans. The people of New Orleans and of the entire State should be awake to the necessity of speedily completing this undertaking. Several hundred men are at work on the grading between Alexandria and Natchitoches, and if the people most interested come forward promptly and liberally with their subscriptions we shall have a road to Texas within the next year. Mr. B. H. Green, civil engineer, in a communication in the New Orleans Times of August last, gives a full and instructive statement concerning the value of the road and the most feasible routes. The relations of New Orleans to the Texas and Pacific road are thus exhibited:

It needs no argument to prove that the Texas and Pacific railroad must be the means of developing the great mineral wealth of the Southwestern States of the Union and Mexico, and dull is the mind that does not comprehend that it must be the channel through which the trade of the broad Pacific ocean is to be distributed over the United States. It being an admitted fact that "railroad transportation for bulky freight, over great distances, cannot be made as cheap as transportation by water, it follows that the real value of an inter-oceanic railway to the commerce of the world is in inverse proportion to its length."

Estimated by this test alone, it is clear that of all the projected or completed railways across the continent, the Texas and Pacific is by far the most valuable and important, as bringing the ports of the two oceans practically nearer together, by nearly one-half, than by any other route, as will be seen from the following:

From New York to Puget Sound via Northern Pacific, 3,546 miles.

From New York to San Francisco via the Union Central Pacific, 3,383 miles.

From New York to San Diego via Texas and Pacific, 3,091 miles.

From New Orleans to San Diego via Texas and Pacific, 1,800 miles.

But important as is this saving of distance, the great advantage of the Southern line is that it is free from the impediments incident to the cold and inhospitable climate in which the other lines are located.

Now, as New Orleans by way of Marshall and the Texas and Pacific railroad to San Diego is only 1,800 miles, it follows that the natural course of trade will be from San Diego to New Orleans unless diverted by artificial means, for it is the shortest route that in all probability will ever be built to unite the two great oceans that belt the earth.

Assuming, then, as a fact too patent to be questioned, that the Texas and Pacific railroad is to be the main artery of trade between the two oceans, and that it will be tapped and tapped and tapped by that extensive network of railroads that interline north and west Texas, the Indian Territory, and that must eventually penetrate New Mexico and Arizona, it becomes a question of vital importance for New Orleans to wisely determine which route and what point is the best for her to join hands with this great inter-oceanic highway.

In making this selection there are two controlling ideas which must become important factors in determining the question: The one, to adopt such a connection with the Texas Pacific road as will make New Orleans a prominent competitor for the traffic over that road, and will secure to her the trade of northwestern Texas. The other, that in making this junction such a line should be adopted as will bring back the trade from western Arkansas, and open a communication with the Indian Territory; and no lines of improvement, however splendid in their conceptions or energetic in their construction, will restore to New Orleans prosperity and wealth unless controlled by these considerations.

An examination of the country through which the Texas Pacific railroad is located and constructed will develop the fact that there are but two points at which this junction can be made to meet the above requirements: One at Marshall, the eastern terminus of the Texas and Pacific railroad, whence the transcontinental branch is constructed to the Arkansas line, and where it is joined by the Fulton, Little Rock and Cairo railroad, which stretches diagonally through the State of Arkansas.

The other at Dallas (147 miles west of Marshall,) where the Houston and Texas Central railroad crosses, and is prolonged by the Missouri, Kansas and Texas railroad across the Indian Territory.

To reach each of these points three routes are claiming public attention. Assuming Dallas as the objective point, two of the lines pass through the southern part of Louisiana and Texas, and, uniting at the Sabine river, proceed to Houston, and from there along the Houston and Texas Central railroad to Dallas. The other passes to the west of Baton Rouge, and, sweeping over the rich alluvial lands of Interior Louisiana, runs up Red river to or near Natchitoches, and thence via Mansfield direct to Marshall, thence along the Texas and Pacific road to Dallas.

The most southern of these lines passes from New Orleans to Brashear City, thence to New Iberia and Orange on to Houston.

From New Orleans by this route to Houston it is in round numbers 350 miles, from Houston to Dallas 265 more, making the distance from New Orleans to Dallas by these combined lines 615 miles.

The location of this road as far as New Iberia is in part through the fine alluvial lands of Louisiana, but beyond and to Houston the character of the country gives small promise of any great future development, and hence a road would have in the main to look to the business from its terminal points for maintenance.

The next line, leaving New Orleans, passes up the Red river to Bayou Goula, where it deflects west through Vermilionville and unites with the first line at Orange.

To Houston by this route it is 330 miles in round numbers, which, added to 265 miles over the Houston and Texas Central road to reach Dallas, makes 595 miles from New Orleans, being 20 miles shorter than the more southern line. This second line covers much the same ground as the first, and differs in no material feature from it.

The third line would, from the present terminus of the second at Bayou Goula, be produced on its general northwesterly course through Rosedale, Alexandria, Natchitoches, Mansfield, and thence on the same general course direct to Marshall, the eastern terminus of the Texas and Pacific railroad, and proceed along that road to Dallas. From New Orleans to Marshall by this line it is 338 miles, and from Marshall to Dallas 147 more, making the distance from New Orleans to Dallas 485, being 130 less than the shorter of the other two lines.

This road would run through the very finest part of Louisiana for its entire length, opening up some of the richest lands in the world to cultivation, and developing the finest portion of the State, and in addition would put New Orleans in direct connection with the Texas and Pacific road and its endless network of roads.

Thus it will be seen that of the three routes sketched, the last described, and which may be designated as the New Orleans branch of the Texas Pacific railroad, or, if acceptable, the New Orleans Pacific railroad, is 110 miles shorter than either of the other two, and, besides, passes over a country presenting fewer obstacles to overcome, and which is as rich in its future development as any country in the world, while the other two lines pointing to Houston penetrate a country limited in its future development, and has a commerce fixed and stable, and not likely to be diverted from its present course. Hence New Orleans cannot hope, from the completion of either of these roads, to gain much beyond what she now possesses.

On the other hand, the construction of the last-described line would not only call into life the finest section of the State, but it would link New Orleans with a country of boundless resources, just bursting into life, the trade of which would be disposed to seek the natural channels of commerce, and hence be poured into the lap of this city; for New Orleans must be the entrepot of this whole country.

And when the means, energy and intelligence that are now being applied to the mouth of the river shall have removed all impediments to its free and deep navigation to the gulf, then must New Orleans become, by inevitable laws of trade, the great distributing point for the commerce of the Southwest.

It is true that for a time or partially a part of this trade may be diverted along the lines of the Northwestern railroads. But no road or roads can long carry heavy freights over 1,768 miles of railroad (distance from Dallas via St. Louis to New York) to reach the ocean in successful competition with a route that has a railroad transportation of one-fourth of that distance to reach the line of water communication.

The writer goes on to discuss the comparative merits of roads to connect with the Alexandria terminus:

The most southern line, or, as it is more generally known, Morgan's road, has a road complete and in running order to Brashear City, a distance of eighty miles, and a road-bed graded to New Iberia, where it is proposed that it shall leave the direct line to Houston and deflect to the northwest to Vermillionville, thence through Opelousas and Washington to Lecompte (the common point,) 210 miles from New Orleans.

The second line, or the New Orleans Texas road, is in running order to Bayou Goula, 73 miles from New Orleans, and has a road-bed only partially prepared to Vermillionville, 50 miles from Bayou Goula, whence it would adopt the same line as the first to Lecompte, 190 miles from New Orleans.

The route of the third previously sketched, via Bayou Goula, Rosedale and the graded tracks of the Baton Rouge and Grosse Tete, and the Louisiana Central roads, reaches Lecompte at 170 miles from New Orleans.

It will be seen that the second line is 20 miles shorter than the first, and that the third is 20 and 40 miles shorter than the second and first respectively.

A road that has to come in competition with other roads, governed and controlled by Northern energy, must be careful not to lose any of the advantages which a short line would give. In railroad competition time is everything, and no road can harmlessly throw away an hour's time. The third line is one hour shorter than the New Orleans and Texas road, and two hours shorter than the Morgan road.

When viewed from a railroad standpoint, the advantages of the third and most direct route are so apparent as at once to claim precedence, and I may be excused for entering more minutely into its approximate line of location by sections.

From the present terminus of the New Orleans and Texas railroad at Bayou Goula, 73 miles from New Orleans, the line would strike out for the Bayou Grosse Tete, adhering to the banks of that stream, as near as practicable, to Rosedale, a station on the Baton Rouge and Grosse Tete road. This section of 21 miles has never in the past received much attention as a link in our railroad system, but enough is known of the country to assure an easy and cheap roadway. From Rosedale, 16 miles west of Baton Rouge by the line of the Baton Rouge and Grosse Tete railroad, that road would be adopted to the Atchafalaya river. This road is constructed through the rich lands of the Grosse Tete, Maringouin and Fordoche Bayous, and connects with the graded road-bed of the Louisiana Central road at the Atchafalaya river, 24 miles from Rosedale. Twelve miles of iron are laid and the rest graded. The Atchafalaya river, 800 feet wide, will demand a first-class bridge, and is the only stream requiring that class on the whole route. The crossing has been carefully determined by soundings.

For 31 miles from the Atchafalaya crossing, the original Louisiana Central Railroad Company have had the roadway cleared, and 22 miles were graded. Although this was done as far back as the first year of the late war, the work is now in fair condition. This section presented the heaviest embankment through the alluvial district, and was judiciously placed above the flood line, owing to the precarious condition of the levees at that time.

Emerging from the rich Atchafalaya bottoms, the line is located seriatim upon the beautiful valley lands of the Bayous Rouge, Huffpower, Boeuf, Robert and Rapides, to Bayou Cotile, near Red river, 82 miles from the Atchafalaya bridge point. The line is tangent to Cheneyville, Lecompte and Alexandria, and was actually located the first year of the war, and for the great part through the superb cotton and sugar plantations bordering upon the above-named bayous—the most desirable and richest agricultural district in the State—and so admirably adapted for railroad purposes that for long stretches the road-bed would be coincident with the surface of the ground. Between Lecompte and Alexandria—16 miles—an old road-bed still exists, and is upon exactly the right ground.

In order to preserve the integrity of the valley grades, the line from Cotile should swing around the protruding points of the spur ridges, and thus enter the valley of Cane river, rather than, as has been suggested, cross the spurs. Upon the principle of equating for grades, the difference in distance would be inappreciable.

The valleys of Cane and Red rivers are as inviting and favorable to a railroad track as the bayou valleys we have just passed over.

The town of Natchitoches, 40 miles approximately from Bayou Cotile, becomes the next objective point. From here to Marshall the character of the country, and with it the character of the grades, undergo a decided change; and since no exact information is had, but only what a reconnoissance could furnish, we will pass over this section by simply remarking that the line would traverse a fine upland country, abounding in oak and pine timber, and would pass through or near Mansfield, thence as direct as practicable on to Marshall. The probable distance from Natchitoches to Mansfield is about 40 miles, thence to Marshall 55 miles. Total distance from New Orleans to Marshall, 338 miles.

From some intermediate point between Mansfield and the State line a branch for our Shreveport friends should radiate, and would approximate 25 miles in length.

While these lines lying on the west side of the Mississippi river are claiming so much attention, there is a route on the east side of the river that has many claims to popular favor. From Pontchatoula, 47 miles from New Orleans, and the first station in the pine woods on the New Orleans, St. Louis and Chicago railroad, it is but 41 miles to Baton Rouge, by a located line, and through a country remarkably level, and a portion of it highly productive. Crossing the Mississippi river at Baton Rouge, the Grosse Tete railroad would be adopted, and our third line joined at Rosedale, 16 miles from the river crossing, making the distance by this route from New Orleans to Rosedale 107 miles, being next to the shortest route from New Orleans to Marshall, and only 10 miles longer than that route.

All that the company now operating between Alexandria and Mansfield have definitely determined upon is to go forward with the work between these points, and to fix upon the western terminus and the connection with New Orleans hereafter. These matters can be easily settled when the road is completed to a point so near the Texas and Pacific. Give us this road, and the future of New Orleans and of Louisiana will be assured. If it were to cost one-half of our entire capital and real estate it would be the most profitable investment our people can make.

Holston Conference.

The Holston Conference held its session at Knoxville, October 20-26, Bishop McTyeire presiding. Sixteen were admitted on trial, and eight into full connection. Readmitted—W. E. Munsey, S. S. Grant. Received by transfers—H. W. Leslie, D. S. Hearn, E. E. Hoss, W. B. Lyda. Elected and ordained deacons—J. K. Wolfe, E. D. Barnett, J. H. Lensabaugh, I. S. Ross, J. J. Cash, A. Kincaid, J. W. Robertson. Local elected deacons—J. N. Lotspeich, G. M. F. Hampton, W. J. Gibbs. Ordained—J. A. Lyons, J. N. Lotspeich. Elected and ordained elders—D. W. Carter, W. D. Montcastle, J. C. Runyan, R. J. Only, J. P. Dickey, H. W. Bays. Local elected and ordained elders—J. D. Hickson, T. P. Summers. We are obliged to Bro. Payne, assistant secretary, for the minutes, from which we condense the foregoing. He says he will send the memoirs and statistics; he states that there are 296 local preachers; 38,109 white, 177 Indian and 139 colored members. Collected for claimants, $1,604.55; for missions, $1,587.88. Other interesting items, together with the appointments, have been kindly furnished us by the Bishop. The Holston Methodist of October 30 says: "It is not proper to eulogize living men, except in a very modest way, and in case of necessity; but it is due Bishop McTyeire to say that in his recent presidency of the Holston Conference he gave entire satisfaction. His thorough acquaintance with law, his coolness and impartiality, and his devotion to the church, all conspire to render him a safe and efficient presiding officer. His health seems to be excellent, and he is evidently in the prime of life. His sermon on Sunday last, on 'One Lord, one faith and one baptism,' was one hour and twenty-five minutes long—but not too long by any means. He insisted on the spiritual unity of the church, but allowed differences in form. He tolerated all religious denominations that hold to Christ, the Head; indeed he believed that the division of the church into a reasonable number of sects was a positive blessing to the church. On the whole, the sermon was not only a treat, but it was calculated to do much good."—Nashville Christian Advocate.

EPIZOOTIC IN HORSES.—This disease, that swept over this entire country and proved so serious in the fall of 1872, is appearing again this fall, though in a milder form. Nearly all the horses of this and other cities are affected with it already, and it is certain to spread to the country very soon. Horses that are in good condition will suffer the least from its attack. Its first symptom is a slight cough, which gradually becomes more frequent and severe, accompanied with running at the nose and swelling of the throat between the jaw bones. Horses that are in good heart, and are properly taken care of, will probably only be slightly affected.

We advise the simplest treatment possible. Keep the horses in a warm, comfortable, clean and well-ventilated stable, blanketed in wet, cold weather; feed well with oats and sweet hay (corn is too heating,) with a good bran mash once a day. The only medicine needed is to thoroughly rub the throat with some good liniment if it should become much swollen, and be very careful not to let them take cold. A little exercise every day at light work, or careful driving, we deem beneficial, but any violent exercise, or anything approaching over-exertion, will be almost certain to produce serious results. The aim should be to keep the horse in as strong heart as possible, and nature will soon work out the disease. Its usual term is from twelve to twenty days.—Ohio Farmer.

GREAT BRITAIN.—Cattle Disease. The epizootic is raging. During the quarter ending October 16, in England and Wales, there were over five hundred and forty thousand cases. The money damage is estimated at $1,000,000.

THE Khedive of Egypt has decreed that hereafter the calendar used by Christian nations will be used in that country, instead of the Mohammedan.

THE number of pilgrims who visited the tomb of Mohammed at Mecca this year is said to have been one hundred and sixty thousand.

SABBATH REST.

The Sabbath is a type of heaven's own sweetness,
A hallowed foretaste of its life and light,
A day of rest, foreshadowing the completeness
Of days which know no night.

Six days of weariness and toil, succeeded
By the calm quietude of Sabbath rest,
Train us to welcome what we so much needed,
And make it doubly blest.

Here our best joys and fairest flowers are mortal:
We can but rest in peace one day in seven;
But yonder, soon as we pass Death's dread portal,
Eternal rest is given!

The Sabbath here, in high communion blending
With Christ, and all the heaven-bound pilgrim train,
Is more than blessed; but soon it has its ending,
And earth is earth again.

But yonder, in the land of milk and honey,
Where Jordan flows, the rest is evermore—
One everlasting Sabbath, bright and sunny,
Shines on that blissful shore!

All is immortal there; joys never wither,
And days no longer shadow into night;
With steady pace our feet are travelling thither,
To gain that land of light.

O happy Sabbath! when the church shall gather,
Escaped forever from earth's wearying strife,
Like children round the table of their Father,
To live the deathless life;

And join the rapturous song of adoration
With all who fought the sinless crown to win.
O endless Sabbath! chorus of salvation!
When will thy joys begin?

Crowing.

MR. EDITOR: It is the habit of those who make efforts to proselyte members of other churches to their church to crow over the fact of their success, as if they had done what was of the greatest moment to themselves and the persons thus proselyted; as if they had done a work that was most acceptable to God. They seem to glory more of making one proselyte than of getting half a score of sinners awakened and converted; as if Methodism were a heresy ten times more offensive to God than all the sins that the men of any community might be guilty of. Baptists are given to crowing very loudly over a proselyte, and to magnifying beyond the real truth in many instances.

A meeting was held near Martinsville this year. The arts of proselyting were applied, and one Methodist woman proselyted, and in the report published in their organ she is magnified into three. Her husband, who was not previously a member of any church, and attended service but seldom anywhere, and one other member of the family who was not a member of any church previously, joined the Baptists at that time. Hence the crowing over getting three Methodists.

The Baptist Convention for Mississippi was held in the town of Hazlehurst last summer. I am informed that some of their delegates declared that fifty-three Methodist preachers in Mississippi had joined the Baptist Church (as understood by those who heard them) in the preceding year. Now we would like to know where those fifty-three Methodist preachers lived in the State of Mississippi. I have not heard the name of one of them, nor known one of them. Has any one else? I wait for a report.

Now suppose the Mississippi Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South kept a standing heading, "Still They Come," in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and published with a great flourish of trumpets the number and names of all the preachers and members that come to us from other denominations, and exaggerated the numbers very greatly every time, and then would crow from pulpit, rostrum, chairs and papers: "All the world will soon be Methodists! Don't you see how they come? Why we can scarcely make room for them, they come so fast." I came to the Mississippi Conference in December, 1846, and at that session one Baptist preacher was received. And year after year we have received preachers from Baptist and other denominations—from one to fifteen at a session. But was that anything to crow over? They had their reasons for changing their relations and localities. If they were satisfied and content, and willing to labor in the gospel with us, we were willing to have their co-operation and bid them godspeed. Yet not one of them was proselyted by any effort made for that purpose.

They (the Baptists) manage to get reports afloat, while holding a meeting in a town or neighborhood, that prominent and leading members of other churches have joined them, or will do so before the meeting closes. They held a meeting in Brookhaven last August, and started the report that Rev. H. R. Singleton, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church South there, had joined them. Perhaps that was done to counteract his very earnest efforts to save his members from the proselyting efforts of the Baptist preachers. Also that Rev. J. J. Clark, a local preacher there, and for several years a member of the Mississippi Conference, had joined them. Also that one-half of Rev. H. F. Johnson's family had joined them; and that one-half or more of the Methodists in the place were convinced that the Baptist's idea of immersion was right, and would join them. All such stuff and reports are intended to excite and confuse those who may not have been read up and posted on the mode of baptism.

Now suppose every Methodist preacher were to keep the public informed of the number who came to our church from the Baptist and other denominations. The number would astonish some people very much, who think "all the world and the rest of mankind" are going into the Baptist Church. At most of the meetings held in the Brookhaven district, this year, persons have joined the Methodist Church who were members of the Baptist Church or Baptist families. They had their reasons for joining us. They were not set on to be proselyted. No, no. But would it have done any particular good to have crowed and filled up the ADVOCATE with the notices?

Now, again, suppose all the Methodist preachers and members were, for the next five years, to set themselves to work to get Baptist members and families into the Methodist Church, and work to that point wherever they might be, as the Baptists have been working to proselyte to their church for years past. O would there not be a howl! And what a host would come when the scales fell from their eyes, so that they could see the truth, and understand that their hope of religion was not evangelical and spiritual; and that they must be born from above or not see the King of heaven.

H. H. MONTGOMERY.

P. S.—My attention was directed to this train of thought by a sentence in Bro. Angus Dowling's report of the work on his circuit, in the Alabama Conference. The number who had joined the church was given—"six of whom came from the Baptist Church." May be if others were to refer to this matter in that way, and our people would read the notices, they could meet the proselyters as they were not expecting.

Ought not every Methodist preacher to prepare him a sermon on the Identity and Unity of the Church, one on the Rights of Infants to Church Membership and Baptism, and one on the Mode of Baptism, and preach them to each congregation in his charge once a year? I think he ought. Were this done, many of our members and children would be prepared to defend our doctrines and usages who are a prey to others. I believe, too, a sermon on the Lord's Supper, presenting that subject in its scriptural light, and who may partake, would be of great benefit to many sincere persons. Show, too, that baptism, in any mode, is not an essential prerequisite. How could it be when the supper was instituted forty-three days before baptism was commanded by the Savior? H. H. M.

Do All Men

HAVE A SUFFICIENT MEASURE OF GRACE AFFORDED TO INSURE THEIR FINAL SALVATION?

MR. EDITOR: Dr. Bledsoe answers the above interrogatory in the negative, as will appear from the following extracts from the October number of the Review: "We have only said that God does not give his preventing grace—the grace essential to conversion—in all cases in which he foresees it will be rejected, and, instead of doing any good, only enhance the guilt and condemnation of the sinner." Again, on the same page he asks: "Why, then, may not God, in some cases, withhold even the glorious gift of his Spirit in mercy, as well as bestow it in others?" On the next page he says: "We cannot believe, however, that it is given in those cases in which God sees it will do no good, but only increase the guilt and condemnation of the sinner." We think the foregoing extracts present Dr. Bledsoe's position on this question fairly. However, to place the subject in a still clearer light, we give one other extract: "Although God does not give his preventing grace—the grace essential to conversion—in all such cases, yet we believe he does give it in many such cases, because such is the teaching of his word. If any one asks why he gives his preventing grace—the grace essential to conversion—when he sees it will not convert the sinner, we are not entirely at a loss for an answer, or at least for a plausible conjecture. He may give it, for aught we know—and we believe he does, though he sees it will be despised and rejected—in order to demonstrate the maligunity of sin, and cause the universe to stand in awe of its deadening, destroying and soul-damning influences."

We gather from these extracts that Dr. Bledsoe believes that to some of those who finally perish a measure of grace sufficient to salvation is afforded, while to others of the same unfortunate class it is withholden. The reason he assigns for such a strange procedure on the part of God is put forth only as a "plausible conjecture." But really it would be better, we think, to make sure of the fact before giving even a "plausible conjecture" to account for it. Now the fact this "plausible conjecture" is intended to account for is the very question in dispute. Dr. Bledsoe assumes, on the authority of Scripture (though he failed to cite the passages that support his assumption,) that God bestows on some of the non-elect "sufficient grace," and denies it to others. This is an assumption involving, as we think, the honor and glory of the ever-blessed God, and we require for its establishment something more than a "plausible conjecture." It is but fair to state that the precise fact which Dr. Bledsoe's conjecture was intended to account for is embraced in the question which he anticipated in the extract already given, viz., "Why he (God) gives his preventing grace—the grace essential to conversion—when he sees it will not convert the sinner," and hence only serve to enhance his guilt and condemnation. Why, it may be asked, does he give his grace in any case when he sees it will prove ineffectual? Why do any of the non-elect have bestowed on them grace only that it might enhance guilt and augment misery in the future state? These are the questions which Dr. Bledsoe's "plausible conjecture" was intended to answer.

This very "plausible conjecture" is given by Dr. Bledsoe in such terms as do not impress his readers with the idea that it entered into his profound convictions. Hear him: "He may give it, for aught we know—and we believe he does, though he sees it will be despised and rejected—in order to demonstrate the maligunity of sin." "To demonstrate the maligunity of sin," then, is the "plausible conjecture" which Dr. Bledsoe supposes sufficiently accounts for the fact that he bestows his grace upon some of the non-elect, although this demonstration for the good of the intelligent universe is at the expense of the unfortunate class that receives his grace in vain.

We cannot see how the bestowal of grace for such a purpose can be called grace or favor at all. If the final effect of the grace bestowed augments the miseries of the lost, and this augmentation perpetuates itself eternally, is it to be regarded in the light of favor to the sufferer, even though the intelligent universe may profit by it? The augmentation of misery in any degree throughout endless duration is only evil, and the cause of this augmentation is misnamed when it is called grace. But I object to Dr. Bledsoe's theory, because it seems to leave that portion of the non-elect to whom insufficient grace, or no grace at all, was given, to suffer eternally, without any ground for their condemnation except the prescience of Deity. God foresees their obstinate rejection of light and the truth, and their abuse of gracious privileges, and at the judgment he condemns them, not because they had misimproved sufficient grace, but simply because he knew they would have done it if he had bestowed it.

The Scriptures do not teach this novel idea. We have given us, in the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew, a description of the judgment day, in which the ground of the sinner's condemnation is said to be: "Because ye have not done certain things mentioned, which things they could have done; therefore depart ye into everlasting fire," etc. Grace received, despised and abused is the only reason of the sinner's condemnation. These non-elect sinners, condemned to the fires of perdition for not improving grace that was never bestowed, although they may have assigned them a more tolerable place than the other class of the non-elect, who unfortunately had bestowed upon them sufficient grace, may claim to suffer unjustly, because that measure of grace essential to salvation was never afforded them. "Because I have called, and ye have refused; therefore I will laugh at your calamity, and mock when your fear cometh," etc. The threat in the preceding passage proceeds upon the presumption that grace, sufficient grace, is afforded. How can we interpret such a text as this in consistency with Dr. Bledsoe's theory: "The grace of God, that bringeth salvation, hath appeared unto all men; teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously," etc. 1. This grace, whatever it be, and in whatever measure granted, is said to be given unto all men. 2. It is said to be grace that bringeth salvation—that is, sufficient to lead all men unto salvation. But Dr. Bledsoe's position represents some, as embraced in the "all men" of the text, as not receiving the grace of God that bringeth salvation, as not having it afforded them. D. G. W. ELLIS.

Summit District Camp Meeting.

HELD AT MAGNOLIA, OCT. 7-12, 1875.

MR. EDITOR: Our District Conference, held at Amite City, located our district camp meeting at Magnolia. Bro. C. C. Gibson, chairman of the building committee, built a large shed on the beautiful grounds purchased for camp meetings. On the twelfth of October the meeting closed with good results. But few were added to the church or converted, but a permanent location was made for future generations to hold camp meetings near where the first camp meeting was held by a few pilgrim Methodists as early as 1811. Near this location Peter James, Thomas Owen, Thomas Griffin, Miles Harper, Wiley Ledbetter and other ministers of blessed memory preached at the first camp meeting ever held, as far as we can learn, in this section of our Southern country. Peter Felder, Daniel Sandle and a few other emigrants from South Carolina, Georgia, and probably some from North Carolina, formed the first six Methodist hive of 1810. About twenty-four more were added to the six at the first camp meeting in 1811, and twenty more at the camp meeting of 1812. "But where is the fruit," as required in the gospel?—Matthew vii, 16-20. The world inquires after camp meeting fruit. Well, sir, that first Magnolia hive has been swarming for sixty-three years, and the fruit is much and good. Take one instance out of many: One of the converts of the first camp meeting is still living, with more than one hundred of his relatives now living around him. There is not a lazy one, or a profane one, or a drunken one, or a sorry one among them. There is fruit of the best sort. Why, sir, there is camp meeting animation in our noble sister churches in all our land. Holy living, happy deaths, education, Bible holiness, industry, economy and all the Christian graces have been rolling out from this first camp meeting for sixty-three years.

And now the roads are built, the churches erected, the forests vanquished, locomotives thundering and bellowing with their long trains of cotton and other freight, electric wires webbing and filling the world with news from all sides and the middle, Bibles and good books without number, self-illuminated Christian Advocates on all sides of us, scrolling out, like the heavenly bodies, their waves of light in every direction, with a strong young educated ministry, and a strong reserve force in New Orleans and other circuits and cities to help us—what will Summit district camp meeting at Magnolia do next year?

Let us work and pray, and hope and prepare, and glory in the Lord.

OBITUARIES.

MARTHA M., wife of O. D. Carstarphine, and daughter of Solomon W. and Julia E. Portice, was born near Lower Peachtree, Wilcox county, Ala., March 17, 1839, and died at her home in Black's Bend, in the above-named county and State, September 16, 1875. Sister Carstarphine was converted in early life, and became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South at the age of eighteen years; and to say that she lived an honored member of the same till the day of her death is but a poor tribute to such a woman. Notwithstanding her head, hands and heart were always employed in measures promotive of the good of the church and the Master's cause, there was in all this an exhibition of a calm, quiet, easy, unostentatious spirit. We rarely see a more illustrious embodiment of all the essential elements of true Christian greatness than was found in the life and character of this elect lady; for as a daughter, a sister, a wife, a stepmother, a friend, a neighbor, a church member, a Christian and a Patron of Husbandry she was all that these several relations could require. For five days she attended a meeting at this place (Bell's Landing,) commencing August 28, in which meeting she professed to have experienced a more overwhelming manifestation of the divine presence than ever before. From this meeting she went home almost a perfect picture of health, and in twelve days (the very day on which she had so fondly hoped to join the immediate circle of her relatives and lifelong friends in a meeting at Lower Peachtree) we carried her remains there to deposit them by the sleeping dust of a sainted father and mother. Precious woman! Almost the last act of her life was to prepare a large box of cooked provisions and send it to the family of her pastor.

When the Master called, and to her conscious view the flaming realities of the coming life were presented, she called her affectionate husband, stepchildren and a large group of sorrowing friends, one by one, and gave them a parting blessing, but could not die without remembering those who were absent—sending a message to every one of them—and died with songs of rejoicing on her lips. J. L. SKIPPER.

ANOTHER spirit has returned to God. Mrs. MARTHA G., wife of Rev. William D. Dominick, was born in Christian county, Ky., August 15, 1839, and died at the residence of her mother, Mrs. Jane M. Moore, in Brandon, Miss., March 20, 1875. She was educated, in part, at the school of Dr. Goodrich, St. Louis, Mo., but graduated at the Elliott School, Nashville, Tenn.

Soon after leaving school—her father having died, leaving a helpless family—she undertook the duties of a teacher, and but few ladies have succeeded more to the general satisfaction than did she. She seemed peculiarly adapted to her chosen profession; and, whether in the private family, the common neighborhood school or the higher academy, her even disposition and kind words soon won the hearts of her pupils, making her a favorite wherever she taught.

She professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South about eight years ago, and her subsequent life proved the genuineness of the work of grace in her soul. She honored God with the tribute of a blameless life. Her religion was not demonstrative, but such was her manner of life that the world took knowledge of her, that she had been with Jesus. Her life was one of self-sacrificing devotion to the interests of her family and friends.

She was married to Rev. W. D. Dominick on the thirty-first of December, 1873. Her married life was short, but full of happiness. She was blessed with the affection of a devoted husband.

Her last illness was protracted, but was borne with great patience. I saw her frequently, and always found her resting upon the precious promises of Jesus, and ready to suffer for his name. Her end was peaceful. She fell on sleep, and was gathered to her fathers. She died of chronic nephritis. All the skill of her skillful physicians could not longer retain her to her friends. She is not, for God has taken her. Earth is poorer for having lost such a treasure, but heaven is richer for having gained such a spirit. May God comfort the bereaved. WILL. H. LEITH.

DEPARTED this life, at Franklinton, Washington parish, La., on Saturday, October 9, 1875, after an illness of seven weeks, MARY OPHELIA JONES, daughter of Wiley H. and Emily Jones, aged eighteen years. She professed faith in Christ, and exhorted friends and relations to meet her in heaven. "Mother," said she, "I love you, and am loth to leave you; but I am going to Jesus." A FRIEND.

I have known the departed for several years—was at one time her teacher—and her death and the attendant circumstances is one of the clearest, fullest answers (aside from the Bible) to infidelity and atheism I have ever seen, heard or read of. With but ordinary intelligence, information or religious instruction, she was stricken down with continued fever amidst the common round of fashionable frivolities of the period and locality. She was scorched with fever for something more than fifty days. During the beginning of her illness she told her attendants that she was going to die, and would be perfectly resigned if she could see any place in heaven for her; but she could not. This was on the Thursday before she expired. On Saturday she said: "Mother, God is here. He is in this room. Oh, mother, I wish you could realize how happy I am! I am now resigned and ready to go."

I am an old man, and have been accustomed to weigh well the causes and influences brought to bear, and the motives which lead persons of my acquaintance to any act or declaration, and was personally present at this death-bed and cognizant of all the circumstances surrounding it, and I can attribute her dying professions to nothing else but the power of the omnipotent God, and the religion of Jesus Christ made manifest to her by the operation of his Spirit.

A METHODIST.

MRS. MARY JANE SCOTT.

This estimable Christian lady is no more. How sad the thought! But we mean she is no more on earth in the flesh. We have good reasons to believe that she was prepared to die, and that she is now in heaven. So, while we mourn, we do not mourn as those who have no hope. Her maiden name was Hullen. She was born in Jefferson county, Miss., August 10, 1851. Her parents had her dedicated to God in holy baptism in infancy, and raised in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. In 1868 she graduated at Whitworth College, Brookhaven, Miss., under the presidency of Rev. H. F. Johnson. She was publicly recognized as a member of the Methodist Church in 1871, coming forward at that time to "ratify and confirm the promise and vow of repentance, faith and obedience contained in the baptismal covenant." This step was taken with due deliberation, and she never receded from the position then taken as a Christian. It was beautiful to see her come to the altar of God in the bloom of youth, and offer herself as a living sacrifice to him. The religious training she had received from her parents resulted in an excellent specimen of early piety.

On the twenty-fourth of January, 1872, she was married to Mr. Alex. B. Scott. God blessed them with two children. When sickness invaded that happy family circle it was sad to think of even the probability of one so young, so accomplished and so much needed being taken away. But God had sent for her, and the call could not be revoked. On the thirteenth of September, 1875, she fell asleep in Jesus.

W. H. LEWIS.

MRS. M. J. MATHEWS was born in Milledgeville, Ga., in 1816, and died at the residence of her only surviving son, George S. Hallmark, in Warrington, Fla., October 17, 1875. She was married, in 1839, to Bro. A. G. Hallmark, of Alabama, whose upright life reflected honor upon our church and his family; he died in Pensacola, Fla., in 1861. In 1865 she was married to Capt. A. J. Mathews, who died in a few months afterward.

Sister Mathews was a conscientious Christian for over thirty-five years. She loved the church, and in turn was loved with a church's depth of feeling. We mourn her loss to our little community here, but bless God that in her death we have an abiding testimony to the truth of the way we follow. Her end was a quiet sleep in Jesus. She held his hand in all her pilgrimage, and clung to it with a firmer grasp when she crossed the boundary line for home. She needs no eulogy. Her life is written on the record of fifty-nine years in patient service, words of love, and deeds of kindness and charity. She needs no prophecy of ours to declare her future blessedness, as all was Jesus here—all will be Jesus hereafter. Another light is dimmed in the firmament of the militant church, but to shine with newer glory in the sky of the church triumphant above.

P. N.

SISTER NAOMI PHILBERT, relict of the late Celestine Philbert, was born in Wilmington, N. C., in 1811, and died at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Narcissa Gibson, in Warrington, Fla., October 4, 1875.

For twenty-five years she has been a member of the church, and died another witness to the power of its truths to lead souls to God. Her last illness was marked by most intense suffering, but never once by complaint or want of patience. She considered life and its concomitants as gifts from God; and, as she rejoiced in the sunshine of his love, she refused not to bow to the shadow of his will. I shall not soon forget the joy with which she welcomed her pastor to her bedside, or the tears which gave evidence to her depth of feeling when he prayed. She was ready when the Master called, and gave witness to all of another victory over the grave. Thank God for the sustaining testimony to his grace which is shown in the Christian's death! P. N.

ELLA ETHEL, daughter of Dr. W. H. and M. E. Germany, was born September 17, 1872, and died September 13, 1875. The marks of more than ordinary intellect had appeared, and the blessing of the Lord seemed to be growing with the child. She had a superior talent for singing, which she had improved, so that she could sing many of the Sunday school songs. Her infantile voice was trained in singing of Jesus, angels, heaven and immortality. Painfully pleasing is the recollection of her short, sweet employ here. The tender branch is pruned, the Good Shepherd has taken the lamb, and the little singer rests to join the happy throng in the song of the redeemed in heaven.

J. W. SANDELL.

LETTIE SENTELL was born in the year 1819. She was married, first, to George Waters, by whom she had one child (a son,) now living in Texas. Nine years after the death of her first husband she was (on the second of September, 1858) married to Anderson Orr. She had no children by her last marriage. She joined the Methodist Church when quite young, and lived a consistent Christian life till the day of her death. She was a kind, thoughtful and loving wife. To her stepdaughters she was a model stepmother. God bless the bereaved family.

BEAUTIFUL THINGS.

Beautiful faces are those that wear—
It matters little if dark or fair—
Whole souled honesty printed there.

Beautiful eyes are those that show,
Like crystal panes where hearth-fires glow,
Beautiful thoughts that burn below.

Beautiful lips are those whose words
Leap from the heart like songs of birds,
Yet whose utterances prudence girds.

Beautiful hands are those that do
Work that is earnest and brave and true,
Moment by moment, the long day through.

Beautiful feet are those that go
On kindly ministries to and fro—
Down lowliest ways, if God wills so.

Beautiful shoulders are those that bear
Uncomplaining burdens of homely care
With patient grace and daily prayer.

Beautiful lives are those that bless—
Silent rivers of happiness,
Whose hidden fountains but few may guess.

Beautiful twilight at set of sun,
Beautiful goal, with race well won,
Beautiful rest, with work well done.

Beautiful graves, where grasses creep,
Where brown leaves fall, where deep in deep
Over worn-out hands—oh, beautiful sleep!

Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

Dr. Myers on Fraternization.

In order to obtain a clear understanding of this subject our people should by all means read "The Disruption of the Methodist Episcopal Church," by Dr. Myers, and recently issued by our Publishing House at Nashville. We give below an extended extract from the last chapter on The Present Relations of the Two Methodisms:

An examination of the report adopted by the General Conference of 1874 will convince one that it really covers only the ground included in the action of the other body in 1872—namely:

1. "The past events"—and here the Church South reiterates explicitly that "basis of intercourse" it had so often stated as the only one it would consider "altogether honorable" to itself—namely, a recognition of the "solemn league and covenant" of 1844, on which, acting in good faith, it had laid the foundations of a perfectly legitimate Methodism. The Conference gave reasons why it could not, even for fraternity's sake, afford quietly to ignore this important instrument. If the Methodist Episcopal Church, in offering fraternity, might be allowed to say that it held the action of 1848 declaring it "null and void" to be "right," shall the Church South, overborne by sentimental utterances, blench now, and in accepting that offer fail to utter as explicitly what it had said over and often, that it esteemed that repudiation "wrong," and that "no adjustment can be considered by us which ignores" the plan? This deliverance is all the more important because one of the delegates treated the occasion as though he felt it to be the dawn of the day of "organic union;" and it was but honest and honorable to dispel all such expectations in advance. The daily press exhibited a forwardness in its comments on these "greetings" both misleading and damaging. Whatever effect such hopes may have produced beyond the "border," had the General Conference given ground for entertaining them the effect would have been as disastrous to Methodism throughout the entire South as the passage of the Finley resolution would have been, but for the prompt and wise recommendations of the Southern delegates in 1844, whereby all the Southern Conferences came to act as a unit. Southern Methodists, by tens of thousands, would have repudiated the action that placed them in the attitude of "secessionists from the mother church," or which allowed the truth of that postulate, even by implication.

2. The church property difficulties were more than mentioned. Recognized as a bar to permanent fraternal relations, this Conference did wisely what the other unwisely left undone. It provided for a commission to "adjust all existing difficulties." Need I argue as to which was the wiser course, if there is to be a permanent peace?

3. And we are now brought face to face with the main point involved in the action of the Conference of 1872—fraternization. It seems to have been begun auspiciously; and perhaps no Christian man, North or South, regrets what was done on this special occasion. The addresses, the intercourses, the interchange of Christian courtesies, the expressions of interest and sympathy, the prayers and the tears, were they all wasted on a tentative effort that is to bring forth no permanent good result? The attitude these churches have held toward each other for thirty years is discreditable to Christianity; but there can be nothing better than the semblance of peace betwixt them, until their relations are determined upon principles recognized by both communions. The intercourse begun ought not to end with mutual courtesies and hollow professions of amity. The Church South has grievances to urge against her sister church, as this history shows; yet she must recognize the other as of the body of Christ, doing a great and good work under his headship. If right relations can be established, she can never feel disparaged by being considered a co-equal, co-working sister church, united in labors where we can agree, cordial and loving even where we differ. Something, then, should be done to wrest from the occasion more than a hollow truce. This ultimate result now depends upon the Methodist Episcopal Church. The Church South has said that it desires fraternity—"amity and peace." It has declared what "basis" for fraternal intercourse it "esteems altogether honorable" to itself. If it seem overpersistent in insisting that the Plan of Separation be recognized, it is because its legitimacy and its rights of property depend on that plan. It deems that this persistence no more violates Christian charity, or exhibits an arrogant spirit, than did the demand of St. Paul, who, when he had been unjustly dealt with by those in authority, would not be satisfied with the bare message of the Roman magistrates to the Philippian jailer, "Let these men go," but, remembering his representative character as an apostle of Christ, and asserting his dignity and rights as a Roman citizen, he answered: "Nay, verily; they have beaten us uncondemned; let them come and fetch us out." The Church South, remembering that it, too, is one of the representative Christian bodies set for the defense of truth and justice, and that it is bound to maintain the inviolability of solemn ecclesiastical compacts, as an exemplification to the world of the morals of Christianity, which allows no laxity in respect to covenants, may with equal propriety say frankly to the body proffering fraternity that there are serious misunderstandings between the two bodies which demand adjustment; that the most serious of all is that the relative status of the Church South to the original Methodist Episcopal Church has been determined ex parte—its acts condemned without a hearing—itself placed in a false attitude before the Christian world; that on every proper occasion it has maintained this position, and it ought not now to be esteemed unchristian or arrogant still to maintain it; that it desires to make an end of all cause of denominational hostility and disagreement, always damaging to religion, especially when existing betwixt churches like ours, in natural alliance because once a unit, and only separated into two jurisdictions by mutual consent, the better to promote the interests of religion.

And while the Church South thus seeks to uphold its own legitimacy, and to maintain the honor of "the fathers" and the honorableness of its origin, and to transmit an unsullied name to those who come after, secured in all their rights, it desires no humiliating confessions or apologies from its sister church. It believes that the General Conference of 1848, overborne by the excitements of the day, hastily pronounced sentence of outlawry against it when it had no opportunity to confront its accusers. It now appeals to the calmer judgment of the present generation of Methodists against that precipitate action. This volume offers the principal facts that make up the history pertinent to the subject. It cannot but be believed that all candid and unprejudiced students of a history so authenticated by evidence will be driven, by their own sense of justice, to revolt against the sentence that assigned to the Church South, as has been done by the authorized history of the "Great Secession," a dishonorable place among schismatic communions; and if this be a result of reinvestigation of the matters in controversy, then will it be no degradation, but highly honorable—an exhibition of lofty principle, of real Christian high-mindedness—in this generation of Methodists to confess that their fathers erred, and to do what they can to bring out of the present tentative efforts for fraternization a peace at once permanent and honorable to both communions.

If the Methodists thus addressed will hear what the Church South can offer for its justification, and, reinvestigating the case, decide that the relations of the two Methodisms may be considered to have been finally and properly settled by the decision of the Supreme Court—notwithstanding anything to the contrary declared by its General Conference prior to that decision—then, the fundamental fact of the validity of the Plan of Separation being thus agreed upon, all other dependent questions become proper subjects of renewed negotiation; for such review and readjustment of the details of the plan are suggested by the General Conference when it says: "If it should be said that its provisions have been violated by both parties, we have this to say: We are ready to confer with our Northern brethren on that point. A joint commission having this feature of the compact under revision might reach a solution mutually satisfactory." Starting with the premises above indicated, and considering every part of the plan which may have been infracted as before the commissioners of both parties for revision, a new treaty of peace may be made more in accord with the present political and ecclesiastical condition of affairs. Border or no border, occupied or restored churches—whatever has made difficulty—can be easily adjusted when once it is settled that the relation between these two communions is not like that between two churches totally distinct from the beginning, but that there is between them a quasi-organic connection, transmitted from their common mother—a transfusion from their original identity in the one, undivided Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States.

Whether or not our co-religionists will concede so much, the fact remains as stated in the report of 1874: "However others may regard that instrument, the Plan of Separation is too important in its application to our status and security to be lightly esteemed" by the Methodist Episcopal Church South. To its status, because, as we have seen, those who deny the validity of the plan fix upon this church the odium of schism; to its security, because the other church having denied the legitimate transfer to it of the original trusteeship over the houses of worship, etc., that came to the South on the division of jurisdiction; and, besides, having never conceded that the decision of the Supreme Court dividing the Book Concern property is equitable—indeed, denying its equity in official documents and organs; and in church suits—that action places the Church South in the attitude (1) of holding such property without having any moral rights of trusteeship over it; (2) of holding possession of it, though legally, yet only by an unrighteous judicial decision. In such case there can be no compromise of difficulties; for there is no room for compromise when there is no shadow of rights; and coming to any terms that leave the Southern trespassers in possession would be but compounding felony. Hence it is the manifest duty of the Methodist Episcopal Church to reclaim possession of all such property whenever it can bring judicial decrees to coincide with its opinion, that its moral claim to the property is indefeasible. Thus are the members of the Church South degraded, by this persistence in repudiation of the plan, to the position of legalized robbers, whom it will be equitable to oust from their immorality acquired possessions if ever justice prevails in the land. Can it be surprising that they cannot feel a cordial fraternity toward those who, if they have studied all the facts of this history, yet persist in justifying that action—claiming it to be "right"—which thus stigmatizes their fathers and themselves?

In again stating, therefore, the conditions so often propounded as a preliminary to permanent fraternization, that church has but obeyed the spirit, at least, of the Master's injunction: "If thy brother trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault." If the Church South is not heard, its next appeal must be to the Christian world—"tell it to the church;" and, pleading before it the well-established facts here offered, it has nothing to fear—the verdict cannot go against it. But it will be said, indeed, if, after all the sentimental and sympathetic intercourse at Louisville and subsequently, impartial justice shall require that Southern Christians then obey the Lord's further injunction: "Let" the "brother"—representing that church—"which neglects to hear" "be unto thee as an heathen man and a publican." Paul's appeal for justice to the heathen magistrates will have been so much more successful that the Christian justice of the nineteenth century will be put to shame.

Preaching Christ.

Dr. South declared that the text, the theme, the language and the application of the sermon should be Christ. The following will illustrate the meaning:

A young man had been preaching in the presence of a venerable divine, and after he was done he went to the old minister and said:

"What do you think of my sermon?"

"A very poor sermon indeed."

"Poor sermon!" said the young man; "it took me a long time to study it."

"Aye, no doubt of it."

"Why, did you not think my explanation of the text a very good one?"

"O yes!" said the old preacher, "very good indeed."

"Well, then, why do you think it a poor sermon? Didn't you think the metaphors were appropriate and the argument conclusive?"

"Yes, they were very good, as far as that goes; but still it was a very poor sermon."

"Will you tell me why you think it a poor sermon?"

"Because," said he, "there was no Christ in it."

"Well," said the young man, "Christ was not the text; we are not to be preaching Christ always; we must preach what is in the text."

So the old man said: "Don't you know, young man, that from every town and village and little hamlet in England, wherever it may be, there is a road to London?"

"Yes," said the young man.

"Ah," said the old divine, "and so from every text in the Scriptures there is a road to the metropolis of the Scriptures—that is, Christ. And, my dear brother, your business is, when you get a text, to say: 'Now what is the road to Christ?' and then preach a sermon running along the road to the great metropolis—Christ. And I have not yet found a text that has not a road to Christ in it. If I should, I would make one. I would go over hedge and ditch, but I would get at my Master, for the sermon cannot do any good unless there is a savor of Christ in it."

WEALTH OF OXFORD UNIVERSITY.—The number of "members on the books" in the University of Oxford in 1873-4 was 8,532, and of undergraduates 2,392. The number of the latter in actual attendance was about 2,000. The number of matriculations in 1872—the last year reported—was 632, and of degrees of B. A. conferred 396. The report of the royal commission "to inquire into the property and income of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, and of the colleges and halls therein, etc., published in 1874, exhibits the condition of affairs as it existed in 1871, and it has not since been essentially changed. Besides its copyholds of inheritance, the University of Oxford owns 7,683 acres of land, and the colleges and halls 184,761 acres, situated in different parts of England and Wales. The total income of the university proper in 1871 was £47,589, and of the colleges and halls, £366,254; total, £413,843. The sources of this income were as follows: From lands, £183,074; from houses, £29,096; from tithe and other rent charges, £39,609; from stocks, shares, etc., £37,201; from other property, £15,070; and from members of the university, £110,893. This income was expended as follows: Payments to heads of colleges, £30,-511; to professors, £13,500; to fellows, £101,171; to scholars and exhibitioners, £26,226; all other expenditures, £212,402. Besides the revenues above mentioned, the university, colleges and halls have in their gift 444 benefices, with an income of £188,695."—Appleton's American Cyclopedia.

Religious Intelligence.

—Rhode Island has about two thousand more scholars in her Sabbath schools than she has children of a school age.

—Brahminism teaches that a woman is nothing save in her husband. Alone she is utterly untrustworthy that confidence might sooner be placed in "a swollen river, a hurricane or a tiger."

—Old Catholicism is spreading in Italy. In a meeting held at Naples it has constituted itself as a denomination, under the name of "Italian National Catholic Church." About three thousand members were represented.

—A new Methodist Episcopal church has been built in Salt Lake City. The edifice is beautiful and imposing, will seat one thousand persons without crowding, and bids fair to be filled from the day of dedication.

—The Chief Justice of Arizona recently delivered an address in Tucson, advocating the policy of dividing out the school funds, so as to give the Romanists the control of a large portion of it. A bill in the Territorial Legislature only lacked one vote of becoming a law. The lecturer is a bigoted papist.

—A Brazilian missionary writes, after making a tour in the district around Rio Claro: "It is very pleasant to see how the gospel is working everywhere. In many places which we did not visit the people are reading and inquiring about the truth; and in others still further north they are anxious for the word of God, but have no one to teach them."

CITY OF CHURCHES.—It is said that Newark, N. J., disputes with Brooklyn, N. Y., her title of City of Churches, having 100, with a population of 125,000, while Brooklyn, with a population closely approaching 500,000, has only 235. Louisville, with a population of 115,000, according to the last census, has 103 churches, and therefore may claim this distinctive title.—Christian Observer.

—The first convocation of the colored churches of the Reformed Episcopal Church in South Carolina was held at Pineopolis, August 14. Seven congregations, numbering 638 members, were represented. An assessment for the year of $4 a member was agreed upon, thus making ample provision for the support of two colored preachers. Steps were taken for securing the education of applicants for the ministry.

—The Methodists in the State of New Jersey have 68,000 communicants, 400 pastors, 400 local preachers, 509 churches, valued at $1,000,000, and 205 parsonages, valued at $338,000. There are 63,000 children in the Sunday schools. During the year $540,000 were raised for all church purposes. The Methodist schools in the State are the Pennington Seminary, at Pennington, the Centenary Collegiate Institute, at Hackettstown, and the Drew Theological Seminary, at Madison. There is also a home at Morristown for the orphans of foreign missionaries, with property valued at $50,000.

—We shall begin to think by and by that the world has indeed moved out of its old grooves. The Society of London Friends are holding a series of special religious meetings at different points, and in connection therewith make the very unusual announcement that at these meetings gospel addresses will be delivered, and that Sankey's hymn-books will be used. Just think of that! Even in this New World, where the startling and the novel confront us at every step, this would be a surprise. But the Old World! Well, it has evidently learned some new things since the advent of Moody and Sankey, and old things are passing away.—Christian at Work.

—The California Methodists (North) have established a grand State camp ground, and have already spent in building and furnishing some $20,000 on permanent improvements. They had donated a beautiful grove of one hundred acres, directly on the beach, two miles from Monterey, and are to spend $10,000 annually on improvements for the next five years. It will soon rival Round Lake camp ground in the East. The camp meeting continued during the month of August, and thousands came, both by ocean steamer and by rail. The best pulpit talent in the State was represented. No place on the California coast presents more attractions than this Pacific Grove Retreat, whether camp meeting is in session or not.

PRESBYTERIAN MISSION IN MEXICO.—Don Leandro has been laboring among the Mexicans at their villages, and he has been eminently successful. To Christ he accords all of the credit. Leandro is a remarkable young man. He is a sincere Christian. Close application in the study of the Bible under the tuition of the Rev. Mr. Graybill, with natural eloquence, gives him a wonderful influence with his countrymen. May God grant him health to prosecute the glorious work, which is extending amazingly on both sides of the Rio Grande, among the Mexican population. The mission is doing well, but Mr. Graybill is very much missed. The Mexicans have a great deal of confidence in him, and regard him as their true friend and ministering servant of our blessed Lord and Master. The success of the mission in Matamoras has been most remarkable—a Presbyterian church of native Mexicans, flourishing day schools and Sabbath school in Matamoras; a Presbyterian church and Sabbath school of native Mexicans at Brownsville, besides sending over one hundred miles, to the Mexican villages, one of his laborers to preach the gospel, distribute tracts and Bibles, exhibit an amount of labor which few if any abroad can have the least conception of. The Mexicans cherish the memory of Mrs. Graybill most lovingly. She was, indeed, a lovely character, and her "works live after her." Mr. Graybill, whose health has been greatly improved, expects to return to Matamoras this month.

HOW THE LEAVES CAME DOWN.

BY SUSAN COOLIDGE.

"I'll tell you how the leaves came down!"
The great Tree to his children said;
"You're getting sleepy, Yellow and Brown,
Yes, very sleepy, little Red;
It is quite time you went to bed."

"Ah!" begged each silly, pouting leaf,
"Let us a little longer stay;
Dear Father Tree, behold our grief;
'Tis such a very pleasant day,
We do not want to go away."

So just for one more merry day
To the great Tree the leaflets clung,
Frolicked and danced and had their way,
Upon the autumn breezes swung,
Whispering all the fairy's among;

Perhaps the great Tree will forget
And let us stay until the spring,
I've all leg and cuss and fret,
But that great Tree did no such thing;
He smiled to hear their whispering.

Come, children, all to bed!" he cried:
And ere the leaves could urge their prayer
He shook his head, and far and wide,
Fluttering and rustling everywhere,
Down sped the leaflets through the air.

I saw them—on the ground they lay,
Sudden and sad, a huddled swarm,
Waiting till one from far away,
White bed-clothes heaped upon her arm,
Should come to wrap them safe and warm.

The great bare Tree looked down and sighed:
"Good night, dear little leaves!" he said.
And from below each sleepy child
Replied, "Good night!" and murmured:
"It is so nice to go to bed.

From Our Little Friends.

DESOTOVILLE, CASTON CO., ALA.,
October 25, 1875.

MR. EDITOR: As so many little boys and girls are writing to you, I thought I would try. I am a little girl eleven years old. I have three sisters and one brother. I go to Sunday school regularly, and always know my lessons. Our superintendent is Mr. Richmond Allen. Mr. DuBose is our preacher. He has preached for us four years, and is now on his last round. He presented me with a nice little hymn-book, which I love and will keep to remember him. The Annual Conference will be at Greenville, Ala. I hope we will have another good preacher sent to us. I love the ADVOCATE dearly, for it has so many pretty stories in it. I must close.

CHARLEY A. MCCALL.

WILKINSON CO., MISS., Oct. 25, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I did not intend writing again so soon, but I must beg room for just one little corner to put in a word for Grandpa Goodale. Please don't anybody ask him, for a month to come, "How Barney Milked the Boys' Nest." Why, what with the demands made of him weekly to solve the great question, and the numerous stories he has on hand in an unfinished state, I fear the dear old man's head must be getting sadly bewildered. So, for his sake, be quiet, and let him have his own way. I think all of us little folks owe him an apology for our impatience and inquisitiveness, and I here offer mine, and hope he will accept it from his little friend.

NANNIE PRESTON WOOD.

Robert Lester, the "Trapper."

Coal, you know, is dug out of the earth. Should you like to visit a coal mine? We come to a great hole in the ground, and get into a big basket hung by stout chains to a windlass. Down, down we go. It grows blacker, and is quite dark by the time we touch the bottom. Here passage ways run off in every direction, often crossing each other like the streets of a town. On each side of these are caves, where the coal is dug out. Thick pillars are left between to hold up the roof. The men who hew out the coal are called "hewers." The coal is put into tubs running on wooden wheels, and dragged to the foot of the shaft. Those who do this are called "putters." It is hard work pulling these heavy loads through long, low, dark passages. Besides these are the "trappers," whose business is to sit cooped up in little holes to open and shut the trap doors which lead out of the passages. This is boys' work. Often little boys of nine or ten are employed. It is not hard, but very dismal and tiresome. And they have to stay all day long! How should you like it, children, you who go to school and play on the grass in the sunshine?

Then there are dangers down in the mine which do not happen to people above ground. Foul air sometimes chokes the men to death; water sometimes spouts up and drowns them; and sometimes a part of a mine "caves in." This is called a "crush."

One morning, while the pit-men were at work in a mine in the north of England, they heard a noise like thunder. In a moment every lamp was out; for the men work by lamps—there is not a spark of daylight there. "A crush! a crush!" cry the men; and all throw down their tools and run.

It is Tuesday morning. The men gather at the mouth of the pit and count their number. Five are missing, two "hewers," two "putters," and one little "trapper," Robert Lester. People above hear the noise, and rush to the pit's mouth. The workmen are taken up. O! the agony of the wives and mothers of those who are left behind! Brave men go back to their rescue. They light their candles, and reach the "crush." There is nothing but a heap of ruins. Were the poor miners instantly killed, or are they hemmed in to die of starvation? It is a dreadful thought. They called and shouted, but no answer. They began with pickaxes and shovels to clear the way. It is hard labor and great risk. The news of the accident brings help from far and near. Men flock from all quarters to offer their services. How they work! Toward night they heard something. Listen! It is not a voice, but a tapping. It can just be heard! t'link, t'link, t'link, t'link, t'link! five times and then it stopped. Five more and then a stop. What does it mean? One man guessed that, as there were five missing, the five t'inks showed all five were alive, waiting for deliverance. A shout of joy was raised in and above the pit.

Among the foremost of the workers was the father of little Robert, the "trapper." Night and day he never left the mine, and hardly quitted his work.

"You will kill yourself, Lester," said a fellow-workman; "go take a little rest and trust the work to us."

"No, no, Tom!" cried the poor father, "I promised Robert's mother we'd come up together; and so we will, if it pleases God," he said, wiping the tears from his rough cheek; and he hewed away with all his might.

How does it fare with the poor prisoners? They were frightened, like the rest, by that sudden and awful noise. Little Robert left his door and ran to the men, who well knew what it meant. Waiting till everything was quiet, they went forward to examine the passage way Robert left. It was blocked up. They tried another; that, too, was blocked up. O fearful thought! they were buried alive. The men went back to the boy.

"I want to go home; please, do let me go home," said poor Robert.

"Yes, yes, as soon as we find a way out, my little man," said a miner, called Truman, in a kind yet husky voice.

The air grew close and suffocating, and they took their oil-cans and food-bags to one of the galleries, where it was better.

The two "hewers," Truman and Logan, were pious men. "Well, James, what shall we do next?" asked Truman.

"There is but one thing we can do," said Logan. "God says: 't'all upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me.'"

They told the boy of their danger. "But we must keep up a good heart," said these believing men; "and the way to do so is to put our trust in the almighty God more than in man." He heard Jonah cry to him from the whale's belly, and he can hear us from the bottom of the coal pit. Let us pray to him."

They all knelt down, and Robert cried bitterly. But as the pious pitmen prayed—first one and then the other—their hearts grew lighter, and even the little "trapper" dried his tears.

When it was time for dinner they ate sparingly, in order to make the food they had last at least three days, for it might be full that time before they could be dug out. Meanwhile what should they do for water? A trickling noise was heard. "Water, water!" Yes, it was water dripping from the rock.

"It seems," said Logan, "as if this water was sent on purpose to put us in mind that God won't forsake us; for don't you know the good book says: 'When the poor and needy seek water, and there is none, and their tongue faileth for thirst, I the Lord will hear them, I the God of Israel will not forsake them?'"

Soon the imprisoned men took their pickaxes; but what a hopeless task it seemed to cut through the mass of earth and stones to daylight! Their hearts beat with hope and joy when they first heard the sound of their friends working on the other side. It was then they made the clink, clink, clink, with their pickaxes, which was heard, and so encouraged their deliverers.

Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and no rescue. What dark and dreadful days! Worse than all, the sounds they had heard did not appear to draw near. And yet prayer and songs of praise might have been heard in that dismal cavern. By Friday morning their food was gone, and by Friday night their oil too.

"Our food is gone, our light is gone; but our God is not gone," said Truman. "He says: 'I will never leave you nor forsake you.'" As for little Robert, he was so weak he could not sit up. His mind wandered; he talked about the sun and the grass, as if he saw them; and once he repeated what he had learned at the Sunday school:

"Sweet fields beyond the swelling flood Stood dressed in living green."

Saturday came—the fifth day—and the men at work outside knew there was not an instant to lose. They were too anxious even to speak. For hours they had heard no signals. Were their poor comrades dead? Suddenly the wall was pierced; a hole was made through it; feeble voices were heard. "Truman, are you there?"

"Yes, all here."

"All living?"

"Yes, thank God, all living."

"All living, all living!" shouted the men; and the shout went up to the top of the pit. When Robert's father heard that his little son was alive the good news was too much for him, and he fell down senseless.

One hour more, and the rescuers reached their comrades. Who can describe the meeting? I cannot; nor the joy and gratitude of wives, mothers and friends, as one and another were brought up to the surface. At last came Lester, with Robert in his arms. What a huzza rent the air as they came in sight! "Safe, safe! God be praised!"

My little reader, is there not a lesson in this story for you?—Early Days.

IT HAS been said by some one that preaching is like liniment—it needs to be well rubbed in. In other words, the public and formal proclamation of the gospel needs to be personally enforced and applied. No better method of doing this can be found than that of pastoral visitation.

Urgent.

The publisher is sending out lists to preachers and bills to subscribers. We exhort all to remit as promptly as possible. It is a time of great straitness, and every dollar due is needed at once. Those who value the paper, and wish it to be sustained, must exert themselves in securing subscribers, and in collecting and forwarding money due. We have nothing to do with the business management of the ADVOCATE, but we are in a position to know that close and prompt collections are of vital importance at this time. The canvass for new subscribers should be earnestly pressed. Not half of the Methodist families in our bounds take a religious paper. Let all in writing be careful to give postoffice and State of subscribers. Do not wait till Conference, unless absolutely necessary.

Lack of Faith.

We imagine there have been few penitents or few earnest Christians who have not felt themselves in deep sympathy with the father who answered the Savior's demand of faith with the tearful exclamation: "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief." The deliverance of his child depended upon the exercise of faith. He was conscious of believing, and yet of not believing enough. Faith and unbelief were coexistent, somehow mixed in the same heart, and both were clear to the perception. He was a believing unbeliever, thoroughly aroused to his lamentable deficiency, and agonizing for relief. Here was a blessing within his reach, if he only had the faith to grasp it. It was possible only to a strong faith. The slightest flaw of doubt kept him back from the coveted prize. The emergency revealed to him a defect in himself which perhaps he had not before suspected. There was some faith in the act of bringing his child to the disciples, and then to the Savior, but there was distrust. "If thou canst do anything." He must have more faith than this. There must not be a shadow of misgiving. "If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth."

Penitents often get to this pass in their efforts to obtain pardon and comfort. They have at last come face to face with their terrible burden of guilt and danger, and their cry is to him who came to save sinners. They discover that, while they have some believing conceptions of the gospel and of Christ, the faith that appropriates the blood of atonement is wanting. With all their assent to the claims of Jesus as the world's Redeemer, and as having tasted death for every man, there is an unbelief which touches and paralyzes the soul at this near approach to the salvation which they seek. Other hinderances there may be none. Sin has been confessed and forsaken. Restitution has been made where wrongs have been done. All has been surrendered to Christ. A simple act of trust—believing that Christ's blood avails—is the one thing that remains to be done.

At this point and in this strait comes the flash of a new and a last conviction, the lack of faith—of faith that says: "Thou canst, thou dost save." It is faith and unbelief, but so much of unbelief as prevents the realization of sins forgiven. The confession and the prayer are suited to the condition of the struggling soul: "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief." He who demands this complete faith can give it. The condition and the blessing are both his to bestow, while the brunt of the conflict and the burden of prayer relate to our unbelief.

This painful consciousness of unbelief, in connection with a measure of faith, is not restricted to penitent seekers. What Christian has not felt the very difficulty which stood in the way of the sorrowing father who brought his afflicted boy to Christ? What preacher, who stands between the living and the dead, and watches for souls, that has not uttered often this confession and cry for help? This leaven of unbelief comes between us and many a victory. We have come to the battle without the faith to strike the decisive blow, or we have left the hard-fought field without strength to gather the spoil. The gift of power—power to awaken, to lead souls to Christ, and to win them from the snares of satan! Who does not covet it, who has not wrestled for and sought it with tears? Unbelief is at the root of our failures. This is the worm in the bud, the fatal cause of weakness and defeat. Good men, in their secret hearts, in their self-examinations before God, feel this defect as no others can. They believe, they believe much, they are not without hope and consolation, and yet there is this ground of unrest and of self-reproach. They might be more perfect, more useful and more blessed if it were not for this admixture of unbelief in their hearts.

As yet all things are not possible to them. Far from it. They have not felt to the uttermost Christ's power to save. There is selfishness, jealousy, wrong tempers and fleshly lusts not altogether overcome. And their usefulness is comparatively nothing. The faith of complete self-conquest and of entire consecration is lacking. Power in prayer to prevail with God and man is not attained. In his sphere of work, responsibility and experience the Christian has reason to come to Jesus for help—for help in this capital defect of his religious experience.

It is something gained to have our greatest want revealed to us, and to see how all blessings hang upon that one thing. It is something more to have the assurance that the one condition of pardon, of holiness, of power, can be supplied. Unbelief may be a sinful thing, most offensive to God, and the quintessence of all sin, but it is that which, if felt and abhorred, Christ can cure. It is a bruise which he alone can heal. We are not to hesitate to take our doubts to him. It is the last sin that many think of asking Jesus to take away. It should be the first.

As we look out upon the world to be conquered for Christ, the mission-fields "white to harvest," and society around us waiting to be thrilled and raised by the breath of gospel life, it is for the whole church to feel that unbelief is at the bottom of her stinted endeavor. The faith we have is seen in the zeal exhibited, in the offerings presented and in the results realized. We come to Christ not with the faith that makes all things possible, but with the if of distrust. "If thou canst do anything." The victory that overcometh the world is our faith. There is a mixture of unbelief—an element of doubt—that works irreparable mischief. We have not lost faith in the gospel, we have faith in Christ, but we have not faith enough—probably not half enough. There should be no doubt in reference to the power of Christ. We must ask, "nothing wavering," and work, enterprise and give, with no misgivings about the result. Can China be taken, can Mexico be evangelized, can the Holy Spirit bring the dead about us to life? If thou canst believe, O church of God, all things are possible to him that believeth. We must, as a church, go to Christ with this evil heart of unbelief. Go we must with cries and tears and confessions. "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief." When this miserable distrust, this insidious but frightful doubt, is cured, we shall soon have the world for Christ.

Field Notes.

From the camp meeting to a protracted meeting! I will not say, in the stereotyped phrase: "Many sinners converted and the church built up;" but I will say: I heard some of the loudest shouting that I ever heard. Louisiana Methodists will understand this when I tell them this meeting was held near the Arkansas line! Twenty were added to the roll. At my next quarterly meeting the weather was so bad we had only one service. At my next the preacher in charge had made arrangements for protracted services. This meeting was quite a success, owing perhaps to the fact that the presiding elder did not have much to do with it. There were present some of the "sweet singers," and the singing was "with the understanding" at least. When it seemed that we had been driven to take the defensive, and the enemy was meditating an attack upon the very citadel, that stirring song, "Hold the Fort," inspired all with fresh courage, and victory was on the side of the gospel. At my next we almost begged the people to let us have protracted services, but sickness and business, etc., proved stronger than we. My next was just an ordinary quarterly meeting, with ordinary preaching and ordinary hearing. Through the swamp, a long, lonesome day's ride brought me to my next. There has been considerable improvement here since my last visit. The preacher in charge is a hard worker, and things have changed wonderfully for the better. At my next found the preacher in charge laid up with what at first was thought to be a broken leg. Further examination showed only a severe bruise—severe enough to keep him to his bed for more than a week.

I have seen things on this trip I never expected to see. I have seen a communion service on a quarterly meeting occasion where there were only two communicants! I have seen a preacher's family without meat! I have seen an itinerant's good wife "borrowed out of" nearly everything, from a boiled ham all the way down to her hair pins—and no return made of anything. I have heard some sharp criticisms. One brother says of you, Mr. Editor, that you need not exhort us to write short obituaries as long as you put in a column and a half over your own signature. The same brother turns both your flanks in a criticism on this sentence: "Things were going to rack while the proprietor was taking his ease and enjoying a perpetual siesta." Another brother has the temerity to criticise Dr. Marshall's article about the new songs that are so much sung. He says the doctor's criticism, in one instance, was misdirected. After changing the chorus criticised to his own views, the changed chorus was found to be like that printed in the books. Another brother wants to know what Dr. Marshall means by the phrase, "symphonious Watts." I have some questions propounded to me which, being outside of the range of the Discipline, I cannot answer, and therefore refer them to you. This is one: "Why does the Lord call a man to preach when he knows that man never did polish his shoes?" When you answer this I will send another. In regard to the living of the preachers I have simply this to say: The potato and turnip crops have been good, and the preachers are fattening for Conference.

On this trip I stood by the grave of a beloved brother who has "passed on before." The south wind blew softly over the little hillock, and I felt that his spirit was refreshed by the breezes that blow over the "bright plains." He was an earnest, devoted man. I knew him well and loved him dearly. His "record is on high." PRESIDING ELDER.

Semi-Centennial Discourse.

We have received a copy of the semi-centennial discourse preached by Rev. J. B. McFerrin, D. D., before the Tennessee Conference, at its session in Fayetteville, Tenn., October 8, 1875. Dr. McFerrin's theme is "A Witnessing Church." The text, Second Peter 1, 16, 17: "For we have not followed cunningly-devised fables." The two-fold testimony of Christianity, miracles and experience is briefly exhibited. In the next place the history and progress of Methodism is succinctly traced, and its marvelous development in the West and in Tennessee, and the causes of its success analyzed. The sermon closes with an interesting sketch of the author's life and experience, and with words of exhortation and advice to the church. We quote briefly from the eloquent conclusion:

Brethren all: This, to me, is a day of special interest. Only a few of God's servants have been spared in the active work for fifty years. I feel that my responsibility has been great, and I am conscious of the feeble manner in which I have performed my labor. God forgive my shortcomings! And if ever I have, in public or private, inflicted a pain upon any of you, or have perpetrated a wrong, I ask your forgiveness. I am at peace with God and all men; I stand before you a witness for Jesus. I witness to the doctrines of Christ, to justification, to regeneration, to the adoption of God's children, to an experience in grace, and, O may I say, to perfect love! God grant to all the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ! We know whom we have believed, and feel that he is able to keep that which we have committed unto him against that day. Yea, we are witnesses of his coming and power, of his glory and majesty.

But few of you, my brethren, will be allowed to bear the standard a half a century. Long before that you will be wearing crowns; Jesus will honor you by an early death, and be crowning you early in the conflict. O where will most of us be fifty years from this semi-centennial service? Ah! up yonder with the fathers. They are looking for our arrival. "They are waiting and watching." We will soon join them and shout the battle over. Till that time let us work on. Let us witness for Jesus. "We count not our lives dear unto us so that we may finish our course with joy, and the ministry which we have received of the Lord Jesus to testify the gospel of the grace of God." Let us work on till the Master grants us release. While we live let us maintain a high standard of morals. Let us keep our doctrines pure; let us cling to our "General Rules;" let us preserve intact our itinerant system; let us especially cleave to spiritual Christianity; let us avoid conformity to the world; in dress let us be plain, and teach our people plainness and neatness of apparel. There is too much gaudiness of dress in the church. A superfluity of apparel ill becomes Methodists; so much jewelry worn by those who come to God's table is painful to me. Especially am I grieved to see preachers' wives and preachers' daughters decked as gay as godless worldlings. How much better to heed the admonition of St. Paul, who says: "In like manner also that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety, not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array, but (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works." I tell you that the wearing of so much jewelry and gaudy dress militates against the support of the ministry. Plain Christians are not willing to contribute to those whose families waste their substance in earrings and gold chains, while their own children cannot afford anything but comfortable raiment. This may strike hard in some places, but, knowing I must shortly put off this tabernacle, I think it meet, as long as I am with you, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance. O brethren, there is too much gayety, too much frivolity, too much indulgence of fleshly appetites! Paul says if we live after the flesh we shall die; but if we, through the Spirit, mortify the deeds of the body, we shall live.

Let us maintain the discipline of the church, and when the members will not be cured, after patient and persevering effort, let them have no more place among us. I tell you that the Methodists cannot afford to keep notoriously immoral people in the church. In proportion as you increase the number of such you destroy the moral force of the church, and rob it of its power of doing good. "Do not mend our rules, but keep them for conscience' sake."

Brethren, let us "endeavor to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." The Tennessee Conference has long been celebrated for two things. First, its freedom from parties. Your older members have often differed in their views of many things, but they never made parties, they never formed cliques. The spirit that engenders such things will sooner or later shake any Conference to its foundations, and destroy the peace of any body. Be one in spirit. Love one another. Do not backbite; do not detract; do not be jealous; do not be envious; in honor prefer one another; let brotherly love continue; be kindly affectioned. I do not mean that you are not to reprove sin in your brother, but even this must be done in kindness. "Faithful are the wounds of a friend, but the kisses of an enemy are deceitful." Let all be done in love. "We exhort you, brethren, warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, be patient toward all men."

The second thing I mention is their respect for the older brethren. No Conference in my knowledge has generally shown more respect for age and gray hairs than the Tennessee Conference. This is commendable. Let the younger brethren remember that their seniors blazed the way, built the bridges, paved the roads, erected the churches and made the path smooth for them. It is mournful to see an old soldier turned off to linger out his days in solitude and neglect. "The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness." Let the church, as well as the country, provide for faithful men who in their youth bore the burden and heat of the day. Cherish your older brethren, and let none turn their back upon them after they have expended all their strength in building the walls of Zion. Beloved, cherish your elder brethren.

But I must close. I thank the Conference for this courtesy. It is only the crowning honor that they have placed upon my unworthy brow. Never did a member of any Conference more highly appreciate and love his colleagues, aged and young, than I appreciate and love the Tennessee Conference.

Trials of an Editor.

Dr. John, of the Galveston Christian Advocate, is a first-rate editor, and makes one of the best papers in the connection; but he has such trials as editors must expect. Under the head of "A Quandary" he writes as follows:

We find the following in an exchange:

"A man bought a horse. It was the first one he had ever owned. He saw in a newspaper that a side window in a stable makes a horse's eye weak on that side; a window in front hurts his eyes by the glare; a window behind makes him squint-eyed; a window on a diagonal line makes him shy when he travels; a stable without a window makes him blind. He sold his horse."

We have several times found ourselves in the same situation respecting the proper mode of editing a paper. One wants the news, and another wants sermons in their place; some people are fond of controversial articles, while others think a preacher ought to fast forty days and nights before he engages in such business; many are pleased with the young folks' corner, and another class would prefer the department displaced to make room for choice literary gems from standard authors or magazines. Many read with interest the "Outlook," presenting in brief space the movements of the Christian world each week, while others would prefer a sermon on some doctrinal text. The quantity of advice received would have enabled us to run half a dozen newspapers; but it has been so contradictory and impossible that, if followed, it would have ruined double that number. We see no other course but to follow our own judgment—or sell the horse.

Southern Methodism in Baltimore.

Rev. Dabney Ball, writing to the Nashville Christian Advocate, says:

Our church here has had a hard struggle—some fearful shocks and "up-hill" work, speaking after the manner of men—but, by the blessing of God, we are doing a good work. There have been added to our several churches, as the fruits of recent revivals, I suppose about two hundred souls. I cannot give the figures with absolute accuracy, but think this statement is near the number. Some of the meetings are still progressing with continued success. It may be of interest to your readers to know what Southern Methodism has wrought, or what God has wrought by us in Baltimore since the war. We began without property, with but a handful of members, scarcely organized at all, with but few men of means—began at the foundation; preaching in hired halls, in the open streets, etc. Now we have eight churches and chapels, worth an aggregate of at least $160,000. The aggregate indebtedness unprovided for is not over $15,000. All these congregations are able to carry the debts that do exist without serious difficulty. Upon most of them there is no debt. Some of them are preparing for the erection of new and better houses in the near future. Besides this, Trinity congregation, proverbial for liberality and enterprise, has just completed a splendid parsonage, and furnished it handsomely, at a cost of some $8,000. All these churches support married pastors comfortably, except those which have single men, and give creditably, some of them largely, to the missionary and other interests. I do not now remember exactly the aggregate membership. Our Sabbath schools are generally large and efficiently conducted, and are constant feeders to our membership. Our people generally have more stamina, and our preachers are zealous, self-sacrificing and devoted. We are gaining steadily on the confidence and sympathy of the general public, and in every essential element of strength.

THE meetings presided over by Mr. Moody in Brooklyn, says the Independent, do not differ very much from those held by him in England and Scotland, so far as the preaching services and the inquiry meetings are concerned. In these there is the same large attendance as in London and the same breathless attention. But Mr. Moody tells us that here the morning prayer meetings surpass anything that he has ever before seen. On Monday morning—the last day of which we can speak—raw and blustering though it was, there were at least four thousand present, filling the tabernacle, and crowding an overflow meeting a few doors off. In London it was difficult to get the business men to attend. Here they are in sympathy and anxious to assist. Herein is the promise of a glorious success where the timorous have foretold failure. If Christians are willing to pray God will not withhold his blessing.

Not in Brooklyn alone, but all over the country, let there now be prayer for such a reviving of God's work as the country has never seen. We are heartily pleased with the suggestion that has been made by Mr. Moody and his fellow-laborers that the Christians of that city unite on Friday of next week, November 12, in a day of special prayer. They also suggest that the same day be observed by Christian churches all over the country, and the meeting on Monday morning united most enthusiastically in this request.

THE commissioners of the Methodist Protestant and the Methodist Churches met in this city a few days ago, says the Pittsburg Christian Advocate of October 28, to arrange preliminaries for a permanent reunion of these two bodies. The entire session, we learn, was harmonious, evincing the largest Christian fraternity and mutual confidence, and a spirit of concession on both sides. The action of the joint commission has yet to be approved by the governing bodies of the two churches, but the probability is that the union will be consummated.

We were happy to meet a number of our old acquaintances who were present as members of this commission, among whom were Drs. Southerland and Bates, of Baltimore, ex-Governor Pierpoint, of West Virginia, and others.

A ST. PAUL dispatch of October 11 says: "Maj. Whittle has been joined by Bliss in St. Paul. The crowds attending the services have greatly increased. The Opera House was packed full last night, and two thousand were turned away, not able to get in the doors, though the lower floor was also opened for another meeting, Bliss dividing his time between the two. Over fifty persons, mostly young men, professed conviction, asking prayers.

ON OUR third page will be found an extended extract from Dr. Myers' "Disruption of the Methodist Episcopal Church." We publish it that our readers may have a sample from the book they should buy, and because it gives a clear statement of the fraternity question.

Whitworth Female College.

MR. EDITOR: Your readers will be glad to learn that this school continues prosperous. There are in attendance over ninety boarders, and a large number of pupils from the town. More than one hundred are in the music department. The art department will open to-morrow, under the direction of Mr. Coulon, late of New Orleans, who comes recommended as a first-class artist.

Those who know the history of this college will remember that it was deeded to the Methodist Church by Rev. Milton J. Whitworth in 1866, and that it opened under its present management in 1867. The beginning was small, but its growth has far exceeded the expectation of its most sanguine friends. New buildings have been erected; school-rooms furnished in the most approved style; apparatus bought, also fourteen pianos and two organs, and a laundry at a cost of about $2,500, including engine; and other improvements, such as repainting, replastering, sinking cisterns, etc., have been made, and all by the president, without scarcely any aid from the public. Moreover, the president of the college assumed and paid off over $2,000 indebtedness of the board of trustees and of the Mississippi Conference. He feels thankful that God has blessed him in his labors, and that many friends have sustained and encouraged him with their patronage, influence and sympathies.

He will in a few days submit to the board of trustees a plan for erecting a large brick building of the most approved style, with all the necessary modern improvements, capable of accommodating three hundred boarders—that is, if the necessary ground can be secured, and he thinks it can.

He proposes to devote his time, his energies, his influence, his credit, to the accomplishment of the enterprise. He believes that the building is necessary, and that it can be put up. He appeals to every lender of this to become interested in the enterprise.

The plan for getting the money, and some reasons why the building should be erected, will be given in another article.

H. F. JOHNSON,
President W. F. College.

DEATH OF REV. THOMAS CLINTON.—By a private note we are informed that Rev. Thomas Clinton, of the Mississippi Conference, died on Thursday, October 28. "He sweetly fell to sleep in the arms of Jesus, aged eighty-two years and nine months." Father Clinton was a man of mark, popular, and widely known and deeply loved throughout Mississippi, Louisiana and the Southwest. In the days of his strength he was a successful and laborious itinerant, a man of sweet spirit, firmness of purpose, and devoted to Christ. A suitable memoir will be furnished in due time, we trust.

REV. PATRICK LANE, a member of the Louisiana Conference, and for years in charge of the Institute for the Blind, at Baton Rouge, passed through the city last week on his way to San Antonio, Texas. Bro. Lane proposes, if circumstances favor, to remain in that section. He is a good scholar, an excellent preacher, and a man of unblemished character. Although blind, he is self-helpful, and consecrated to his work as a minister of the gospel. We most sincerely commend him to the kind offices of our brethren among whom his lot may be cast.

THE death of Percy Walker Milburn, eldest son of Rev. W. H. Milburn, is announced in the Jacksonville Journal of October 27. He was a young man of fine attainments and excellent promise. He died in San Francisco, October 25.

GREENSBORO FEMALE COLLEGE, Alabama, opened its fall term with an encouraging increase of patronage, and Prof. Philippe Henle, of Baltimore, in charge of the department of music and modern languages.

REV. DR. A. G. HAYGOOD has become assistant editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate. With Drs. McAnally and Haygood the St. Louis is well and ably manned. Both are experienced and excellent writers.

IN THE issue of November 6 Dr. Redford announces that the price of the Nashville Christian Advocate has been reduced to the old figure—$2 a year.

THE Presbytery of New Orleans has voted a protest against the committal of the Southern General Assembly to the Presbyterian Alliance, and denounces its action on the subject as un-Presbyterian and unconstitutional.

PRESIDENT GRANT has appointed Thursday, November 25, to be observed as a day of thanksgiving and prayer.

BISH. BOWMAN AND THE GREENEVILLE CHURCH CASE.—Bishop Bowman, who recently held the Northern Methodist Conference at Greeneville, Tenn., says the Holston Methodist, gives in the Central Christian Advocate a distorted and incorrect statement of the Greeneville church suit. He says that those who went over to the Methodist Episcopal Church after the war "had furnished nearly all the money with which the church was built." He further says: "But to make the thing sure they purchased the house of the gentleman who held the sheriff's deed. In 1871 the friends of the Methodist Episcopal Church South sued for the building, and recovered it by a new and unheard decision of the courts, viz: that the original trustees held only a trust deed, and the purchasers could get nothing more, and that therefore, whoever might buy, he must hold it in trust for the Methodist Episcopal Church South."

Bishop Bowman has evidently been imposed upon by misinformation. The principle alluded to by him was not the principle upon which we recovered the property. It was a case of equity, clearly in favor of the Church South, and would, no doubt, have been so decided in any court of equity.

WEST TEXAS CONFERENCE.—The West Texas Conference held its session at San Antonio, October 20-25, Bishop Pierce presided, O. A. Fisher was secretary. Tehuabod Kingsbury, Jose Maria Casanova and Clemente Abraham Vivers were admitted on trial. W. C. Kingsbury, T. R. Atkins, F. Vilourri, discontinued. W. L. Carlton, readmitted. H. P. Bowen, J. F. Denton, W. H. H. Briggs, received by transfer. J. E. Vernon, N. W. Keith, elected and ordained deacons. J. B. Denton, W. L. Ridout, elected and ordained elders. W. F. Alexander, J. W. Conley, located. Jesse Hood, T. Myers, A. B. Duval, R. M. Leaton, R. Gillett, superannuated. Alejo Hernandez died. Increase, white members, 498; decrease, colored, 12. Collected for claimants, $383.47; for missions, $1,284 82. Next session at Seguin. We are obliged to the Bishop for the minutes, from which we condense the foregoing.

IT DOES look sometimes as though the Creator of the world had a hand in its affairs. We fuss, fret and fear that everything is going to ruin, but somehow, as the years jog quietly on, problem after problem is solved, and humanity makes a gain.

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY, including its medical, law, theological and literary departments, now numbers four hundred students. So we learn from the American of October 27.

Of all the paths leading to a woman's love, pity is the straightest.—Beaumont.

MARRIED.

BRINDLEY—TATUM.—October 26, 1875, at the residence of the bride's mother, in Calhoun county, Ala., by the Rev. R. G. Ragan, Mr. R. P. Brindley, of Cherokee county, Ala., to Miss Eliza Tatum.

REDDOCH—RUTLEDGE.—November 3, 1875, at the residence of the bride's father, in Crenshaw county, Ala., by Rev. A. M. Jones, Mr. John H. Reddoch to Miss Lula M. Rutledge.

WEAVER—HOLLAND.—In Cowsuh county, Ala., by Rev. J. S. Rember, October 28, 1875, Mr. J. D. Weaver to Miss Nancy E. Holland.

DRUGS, MEDICINES AND CHEMICALS.—Our readers in the Fourth District should not overlook the advertisement of F. Jorger, Esq., at the corner of Dryades and Second streets. Not only does he keep drugs, medicines, chemicals, toilet articles, sponges, brushes and perfumery, but proposes to serve the community by compounding prescriptions at any hour of the day or night.

COTTON FACTORS AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS.—Messrs. Aiken & Watt, whose advertisement appears in our columns, are well-known and worthy citizens, experienced and attentive merchants, and may be fully relied on for prompt attention to orders and business. We take pleasure in giving the above indorsement after an acquaintance of a number of years.

DOUBTLESS the most of our readers have seen in our advertising columns, for a long time, "The Toll-Gate Prize Picture sent free." We are assured that E. C. Abbey is a prompt and reliable gentleman, and that for a stamp to his address at Buffalo, N. Y., several of these very ingenious gems are sent to each applicant. Everybody is highly pleased with them.

SCREWED AND SEWED BOOTS AND SHOES.—We take pleasure in directing attention to the advertisement of Mr. John Kenz, manufacturer of screwed and sewed boots and shoes, at No. 13 Royal street, only a few doors from Canal street, on the river side of Royal. We think those who see his manufactured goods will be favorably impressed.

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP.—Mr. A. Carroneche, No. 39 Chartres street, is the New Orleans agent for Duconge's Pectoral Balsamic Sirup, as advertised in another column. This remedy is too well-known to our readers to need any recommendation of ours. Read the advertisement.

NOUVEAUTES.—See the advertisement of Messrs. Braselman & Adams, under the above head. Those who are not acquainted with their establishment should give them an early call.

OUR BILLS.

We are sending our bills to subscribers. Many of them have assured us that they would remit as soon as crops were harvested. We have waited till now, hoping that by this time they could pay the small amounts they owe. Each subscriber may think his two dollars and fifty cents too small an amount to affect us; but if every subscriber should reason the same way, and withhold it, the sum total would be over two thousand dollars. We need every dollar due us—we need it badly. Will you send at once through your pastor, if convenient? If not, please remit directly to this office and greatly oblige the publisher.

ADJUSTABLE CHAIR.—One of the most trying experiences in long continued sickness is that weariness of the couch which changes what was meant for rest to the direst fatigue. Especially is this so when the complaint limits the invalid to a single position, making it impossible to find relief, ever tossing from side to side. For such a properly constructed invalid chair is often better than medicine—will do more to ease and comfort the suffering one than all the doctor's anodynes. The iron adjustable chair combines all the facilities desirable in such a provision for the sick-room. They are also pleasant and comfortable for either the parlor or the study. A writing case is attached to one arm of the chair, so that, as neatly as possible, one whose preference is that way may combine in his literary occupation luxury with labor. Send for circular.

CRAWFORD HOUSE, CINCINNATI, OHIO.—This house has recently undergone a thorough renovation at a very great outlay to its present proprietor, Capt. Dakes, who was also obliged to enlarge its popular hotel to meet the wants of its continually increasing patronage. This house now ranks, in point of comfort and quietness, with any of the first-class hotels in Cincinnati, and the table is all that can be desired by the most fastidious. Mr. Buskirk and Mr. Kapsch have charge of the office, and it would be difficult to meet with two gentlemen more agreeable in their manners, doing anything in their power to make their guests comfortable. The readers of this paper will make a note of this, and when they visit Cincinnati we advise them to keep in mind this house. As regards the price, it is lower than at any of the first-class hotels, and equally as good.

ENGINES.—The attention of those interested is directed to the advertisement of R. J. West, Esq., displayed with a cut representing Payne's Corning Horizontal Portable Engine, for which Mr. West is sole agent. We have conversed with several persons now using these engines, and without exception their statements have been favorable. Mr. West deserves much credit for the introduction of new and improved labor-saving machinery, and we take pleasure in commending his advertisement and his house to the favorable attention of our readers.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERY.—By reference to our advertising columns it will be seen that our enterprising neighbor, Mr. Theodore Lilienthal, has opened his new gallery on Canal street, corner of Royal. We know of no one in the business who deserves to succeed more than Mr. Lilienthal. We are indebted to him for many of the finest views ever taken of various objects in our city. We heartily wish him success in the new locality to which he has removed.

MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.—F. A. Hardon, at Nos. 27 and 29 Chartres street, has a fine assortment of goods in the above line, and we are glad to be able to say that all our dealings with the house have been entirely satisfactory, and we feel safe in recommending it to others.

MRS. FRICKE & WILLIAMS, whose advertisement appears elsewhere in our columns, are favorably spoken of by their acquaintances as faithful, skillful and accomplished fitters and dressmakers. Over Braselman & Adams', Nos. 586 and 588 Magazine street. See their offer.

DUCONGE'S

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP.

NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound. Its well-established virtue and its high reputation in affections of the Chest, Lungs, Breast and Bowels is so well known, and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage, that it would be superfluous, at this late day, to dwell at any length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Bowels, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial in all inflammatory disorders, such as Rheumatism, Diarrhœa or Dysentery and Summer Complaint, and especially in those cases of Cholerine which, for want of proper care, so often degenerate into confirmed Cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, verging on Consumption, it has been found most efficacious in preventing that most awful scourge whenever promptly resorted to.

Besides its acknowledged certainty of cure, this truly extraordinary medicine has, over most compounds of the same nature, the decided advantage that, owing to its agreeable flavor, it can be administered without the least difficulty to children, and it requires no particular diet. It is also the cheapest, not only because the bottles contain more sirup than any other, but owing to its peculiar composition this Sirup will keep for years without fermenting, and it can be used in families who never require by simply keeping the bottle well corked.

Directions for Taking the Sirup.—Grown persons can take from four to six spoonfuls in the course of the day, either pure or diluted in a little water, or a less quantity at intervals of three or four hours.

Persons much troubled during the night may take two tablespoonfuls of the Sirup on going to bed, when it will stop the cough and procure a good night's rest.

Children from three to five years old may take from four to six teaspoonfuls during the day, in suitable quantities, at intervals of three to four hours. For sale by

The SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a Bitter or Bad Taste in the Mouth, Pain in the Back, Sides or Joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism, Sour Stomach, Loss of Appetite, Bowels Alternately Costive and Lax, Headache, Loss of Memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done, Debility, Low Spirits, a Thick, Yellow Appearance of the Skin and Eyes, a Dry Cough, often mistaken for Consumption. FOR FIFTY YEARS

SWAIM'S CELEBRATED PANACEA

HAS attracted the notice of the most eminent and leading members of the medical profession, in this country and Europe, by its great power and excellence in curing what were considered incurable cases of disease, where the patients have been almost destroyed by SCROFULA, etc.; and Prof. VALENTINE MOTT of the New York University, Profs. GIBSON, DEWEES and CHAPMAN, of Philadelphia, and many other physicians of celebrity and eminence, gave, over their own signatures, letters recommending it, and certifying to its great merits. It has been occasionally advertised during this long period, and thousands of families throughout the United States recommend and use it. The Laboratory is under the direction of Dr. FRANKLIN STEWART, who has devoted his attention and skill to its careful preparation during the past twenty-five years, and not a bottle put up that is not worth ten times its cost to the patient. It is perfectly safe for the most diseased and debilitated, and will always relieve where it will not cure. In all Cases where the Blood is not Pure it should be Used Freely.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Thoughts for the Month.

WHEAT.

This is the month for wheat-sowing in the cotton States. Along their northern border some is sown in October, but the bulk of the crop is seeded down in November, many fearing the "fly" if sown before frost, and many thinking that they have no time previously to attend to it, and must wait until cotton is picked out to sow in a cotton-field. Has any one tried the plan of sowing wheat in cotton in October, in the same manner as oats are during September? Don't forget to soak seed in a solution of blue stone or salt—one pound of the former in enough water to cover five bushels of wheat. It is usual to soak about twelve hours. This is so absolute a preventive of smut that it is very surprising that any farmer ever omits its use. We heartily wish it was possible to give as effectual a remedy against rust, but none is known. There are, however, some palliatives—sowing early varieties on high, dry land, rather destitute of vegetable matter, and not retentive of moisture, and sowing in drills running north and south, to admit sunshine and air, and allow it to dry off rapidly.

SWEET POTATOES.

Dig potatoes at once, if any remain in the field. Put them up in hills containing twenty-five to thirty bushels. Large quantities put together are apt to heat, followed by rotting. This is one cause, probably, of their not keeping well in "potato-houses." They would keep better anywhere if the spaces between the tubers were filled with dry sand. Have the hills well protected from water, and be sure to put on plenty of dirt as the weather gets cold. One foot of earth is none too much in mid-winter.

TURNIPS, BEETS, ETC.,

should be taken up before hard freezes, or else well covered up (if in drills) by ridging them up with a turn-plow. Toward the gulf they will need no protection. They will not require as warm a place as sweet potatoes. If put in a cellar or banks the tops should be cut off.

CLOVER AND GRASS-FIELDS.

Take stock off of these awhile before very cold weather, and see that they are not too closely grazed. Close grazing weakens the plants and unfits them to stand the winter. Many a failure in raising clover and grass at the South is due to grazing them too early and too late, and too closely.

PLOWING.

Keep the turn-plow going, and bury the weeds and grass. Fasten a chain to the beam, just in front of the standard, and to the end of the double-tree, so that the "loop" will run just in front of the share and hold down tall growth. An old wheel box hung on the chain, so as to run in the last furrow, will improve the arrangement. If the land is stiff, be careful not to bring up too much raw clay to the surface—it will lessen its productiveness for some time—but not more than one inch a year will not harm the land, and the gradual deepening of the soil will, in the end, prove very advantageous. When running deep it is well to take narrow slices, so as not to invert the sod, but lean each slice against the preceding. This will keep the vegetable matter distributed uniformly through the soil, instead of confining it to one thin layer several inches below the surface.

Just as soon as the cotton has been gathered from those fields that have not been sown in grain, beat down the stalks and plow them under. The debris of a cotton crop is rich in fertilizing substances, but if left standing through the winter a large part of the leaves and bolls become blown and washed away and lost, and the stems and branches, if not covered now, will not rot in time for next year's crop to get the benefit of them. Besides, lying unburied and on the surface during the summer, they will rot slowly and their gaseous products pass off into the atmosphere. The same procedure may be very advantageously followed with corn-stalks. Bury them at once, that they may rot in time for the next crop to feed on them.

DITCHING.

This is an admirable time for draining wet lands. As the earth contains comparatively little water at present, the location of springs may be easily detected. Land ditched now will be much dryer next spring than if drained then, and it will produce more the first year, because time is needed after the draining for the air to penetrate and correct what is usually termed "sourness"—we should prefer saying: to convert unavailable substances into available plant food.—Southern Cultivator.

THE WILD HONEY-BEE.—Wild bees are abundant in India, the islands of the Malay Archipelago, Crete, and all the Greek islands, the west coast of Africa, and throughout America. Those in the United States are all of foreign origin. There were none west of the Mississippi before 1797, nor in California before 1850; and the Indians call the bee the white man's fly. In regions where wild bees abound, bee-hunting is a distinct and important business, pursued by professional hunters or experts. In Africa, India and the Indian islands the hunter is unerringly guided to a bee-tree by a bird of the cockoo family. Wells' "Explorations in Honduras" states that in Central America wild swarms generally establish themselves in the hollow limbs of trees; these are removed to the porches of the houses, and are there suspended by thongs; in this primitive way large quantities of honey and wax are obtained. The honey of some of these swarms is stored in wax bags two or more inches long, ranged along the hive in rows, while the brood-cells occupy the center of the hive. In Timor and other Indian islands there is a wild bee that builds huge honey-combs of semi-circular form, and often three or four feet in diameter, which are suspended in the open air, from the under side of the uppermost branches of the highest trees. These the hunter takes by climbing to them, holding a smoking torch under them to stupefy or drive away the bees, and then cutting off the comb close to the limb.—Appleton's American Cyclopedia.

EXPERIENCE TEACHETH.—I am an old man, upward of threescore years, during two scores of which I have been a tiller of the soil. I cannot say that I am rich now, but I have been rich, and do not owe a dollar; have given my children a good education, and when I am called away will leave them enough to keep the wolf away from the door. My experience has taught me that:

1. One acre of land, well prepared, manured and cultivated, will produce more than two acres which receive only the same amount of manure and labor expended on one.

2. One cow, horse, mule, sheep or hog, well fed, is more profitable than two kept on the amount of food necessary to keep one well.

3. One acre of clover or grass is worth more than two acres of cotton where no grass or clover is raised.

4. No farmer who buys oats, wheat, corn, fodder and hay, as a rule, for ten years, can keep the sheriff from the door in the end.

5. The farmer who never reads an agricultural paper, and sneers at book-farming and improvements, always has a leaky roof, poor stock, broken down fences, and complains of "bad seasons."

6. The farmer whose habitual beverage is cold water is healthier, wealthier and wiser than he who does not refuse a drink.

FOOD FOR YOUNG CHICKENS.—They want no food for many hours after they are hatched, as they are then digesting the yolk of the egg, which constitutes their first food, and acquiring strength to run about. When they begin to pick they should be fed with soft food and very small grain. Unquestionably the best soft food is an egg beaten up, with a tablespoonful of milk, and heated in an oven or by the side of a fire until it sets into a soft custard. Chickens fed or partially fed on this make wonderful progress. If they are to make large fowls, they must be fed before daylight; if, as is often the case, they are left hungry for three hours in the morning, they are always stunted in their growth. They must be fed the first thing, and, while they are young, every two or three hours during the day.—Colonial Farmer.

Scientific.

—The reason lamp chimneys so often crack is because they are not properly annealed. If, before using, the chimney is placed in a kettle of cold water, and the water gradually brought to the boiling-point, and the chimney removed after the water has cooled again, it will be far less likely to crack. Other articles of glass may be tempered in the same way.

—It was Faber du Faur, a Bavarian metallurgist, who first made practical use of the gases which formerly escaped in immense quantities from the tops of blast furnaces; and the enormous blast engines, the hoisting engines, pumps and hot-blast stoves, often even the roasting-kilns of such establishments, nowadays require no fuel except this long-neglected waste product.

—The jaws of a fossil fish recently found in Kansas are provided with three kinds of teeth—first, on the outer edge, a row of large, fine-cutting teeth, partially resembling those of a shark; next, some small, blunt teeth, placed irregularly; and finally, a third set of small, sharp teeth, needle like in shape, forming a pavement. When an antediluvian went out to angle, and got a bite from that kind of a fish, he must have known it without delay.

—When Lacondamine, in the year 1745, visited the region of the Andes, the height of the city of Quito was determined at 9,596 feet above the level of the sea. In 1803 this had decreased, according to Humboldt, to 9,570. In 1831 Boussingault found it to be 9,567, while Orton, in 1867, reduced it to 9,520; and, finally, Reiss and Stubel, in 1870, found it to be but 9,356 feet above the sea level. Assuming the correctness of these measurements, Quito must be approaching sea level at the rate of 240 feet in 125 years.

—On the question of the concentration of alcoholic liquors by freezing Prof. Guthrie, of London, has made some remarkable observations in connection with his investigations upon cryohydrates or hydrates formed below 0° C. He finds that if an alcohol of considerable strength be exposed to cold, the part that freezes is not pure water, but a definite crystalline hydrate, composed of one molecule of alcohol and four of water. If the alcohol be weak, the water freezes out first, and when the temperature reaches 8° C. the cryohydrate separates. So the popular impression is by no means an untrue one. More curious still is the cryohydrate of ether. This is formed by saturating water with ether, of which it takes up about a ninth part by volume, and then freezing it. It congeals to a solid mass without the separation of either of its constituents; and if the freezing be effected in a small cylinder, like a test-tube, the block of ice which is removed resembles a candle. If cut off flat and stood upright on a plate it may be lighted like a candle, and burns with a non-luminous flame, yielding scarcely heat enough to melt the ice.

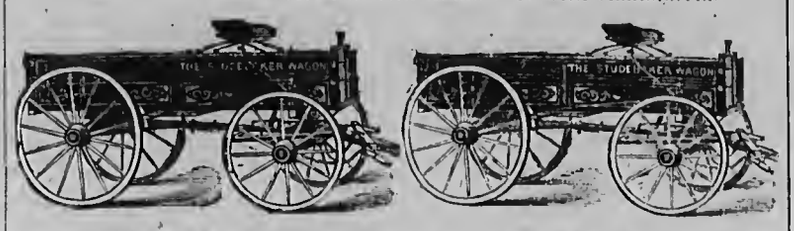
D. M. HOLLINGSWORTH'S PATENT DOUBLE SCROLL.

The greatest improvement of the age on the old Concord Buggy. Twelve Bolts, instead of four, hold the Springs and raise them up, so they can not strike the axles at the end.

I HAVE RECENTLY ACCEPTED THE AGENCY OF THE CELEBRATED



STUDEBAKER WAGON.

FROM ONE TO SIX HORSE.

THE MOST SUBSTANTIAL WAGONS MADE!

There are several reasons why all should buy the above Wagon: First. They are made of the BEST SELECTED TIMBER, the same being cut at the proper season of the year, piled under sheds, properly dated, and allowed to remain there from three to five years. Second. The wood-work is shaped by the latest improved machinery, put together by the BEST WAGON MECHANICS IN THE WORLD, and are the best Ironed and painted Wagons in the market. Third. Their tubular skeins, made of select iron, are set by patent skein setters, and weigh from four to twenty-five pounds per set more than any other, thereby making a perfect running Wagon, which will not break. Fourth. They are the only Wagon in which the SLIPE-SHOULDER SPOKE is used; hence they have the best wheel, which is actually the foundation of the Wagon, and should be carefully examined by persons purchasing. Fifth. They are sold only by responsible parties, and every Wagon is warranted; while the Studebaker Bros. are practical workmen, and attend to their business personally; hence the superiority of their work over all others.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The river is 13 feet 1 inch below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals for the three days ending November 9:

Mississippi river and bayous	bales 10,647
Red river	436
Railroads	6,991
Lake	54
Mobile	1,363
Texas	3,487
Arkansas river	2,131
Total	25,109

On Saturday the market opened with a very good demand, and up to noon nearly 2,000 bales had changed hands at prices showing considerable irregularity, some brokers reporting no change from previous rates, and others that they had obtained concessions of 1/16@1/8c, after which the movement exhibited only a moderate degree of animation, and the additional business did not exceed 3,500 bales, making a total of 5,850 bales. Middling sold as low as 12¾c., but the ruling rates were 12 5/16@12¾c.; strict middling to good middling sold at 13c., but the closing rates showed no quotable falling off. On Monday the demand was fair throughout the day, but operations were restricted during the morning by factors being more stringent in their pretensions, which imparted a firmer tone to the market, but, finding that buyers would not go on at any stiffer prices, the demand was subsequently met more freely, and the movement became quite active, resulting in a business of 6,450 bales. On Tuesday the supplies being more copious, buyers came forward with a fair degree of spirit, and took 8,350 bales for Great Britain and the Continent, hardly any being reported for the North. Good ordinary sold at 11¾c., and middling as low as 12¼c., although it ruled at 12 5/16@12 7/16c., the latter for good style. Good middling sold at 12¾c., and middling fair at 14c.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 21,000 bales, against 16,250 for the corresponding time last week and 18,350 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 228,612 bales, against 191,481 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 114,500 bales. The increase by the reports per telegraph is 117,712—906,191 against 788,479. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 35,787 bales to France, of 40,778 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 48,031 to Great Britain. We quote:

Strict ordinary	10¾ @ 11
Good ordinary	11⅜ @ 11¾
Strict good ordinary	11⅝ @ 11¾
Low middling	12 @ 12⅛
Strict low middling	12⅛ @ 12⅜
Middling	12⅝ @ 12⅞
Strict middling	12¾ @ 13
Good middling	13¼ @ 13⅜
Middling fair	14 @ 14¼

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, Nov. 9.—The steamer City of Waco, burned off Galveston, was an iron screw steamship of fifteen hundred tons burden. She was in thoroughly good condition, having been overhauled just before sailing from this port. She left New York for Galveston on Saturday, October 30, commanded by Capt. Greenman, an experienced officer, who has been employed by Mallory & Co. for the last twenty years. The City of Waco carried a valuable cargo. She had a crew of thirty men including the officers.

Her passenger list numbered twenty in the cabin and steerage. Her cabin passengers were Miss Moelling, Mr. Rogers and wife, A. Meyer, Mrs. A. Horsley and child, Fanny Heiler, B. Weidemyer. In the steerage there were twelve passengers, as follows: Robert Tarkenton, Mrs. Mary Ehrenberger, S. S. Dunne, A. Fraiser, William Mackintosh, Alex. Chisholm, M. Muesta and son, A. Steinzmeke, E. Dreisbauch, J. L. Albert and P. J. Martin.

A London dispatch says that letters received from Stanley, dated at Magalla, in Ugarda, giving an account of the continuation and conclusion of his examination of the shores of the Victoria Nyanza, confirm Spekes' view that the lake is one large body of water, and not a series of small lakes, as held by Livingstone.

NEW YORK, Nov. 12.—Smallpox prevails to an alarming extent in the Sixteenth Ward of Brooklyn, and vaccination is in active progress, though much opposition thereto is manifested by the inhabitants of the infected section, who are mostly Germans. The sanitary police arrested a German lager beer seller yesterday for secreting three persons sick with the smallpox in a room adjoining his shop, which was kept open and beer sold to customers by his barkeeper, who alternated his business of waiting on customers with that of nurse. The sanitary police in their rounds found most of the population engaged in manufacturing clothing, and were working on garments while some of the family lay sick with smallpox, sometimes in the same apartment.

Details of the burning of the British bark Senator, with coal, from Philadelphia for Panama, show that nineteen persons, including the captain's wife and two daughters, got into two boats. The wife died from the combined effects of hunger and cold. The others were saved.

The Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church continued its session, Bishop Simpson presiding. Among the appropriations made were: Erie, $1,000; Florida, $3,800; Georgia, $7,500; Louisiana, $8,000; Mississippi, $7,000; North Carolina, $7,000; Philadelphia, $4,000; Pittsburg, $1,200; South Carolina, $7,500.

A Spanish negro was picked up from the bark Toronto, of Glasgow. The negro can give no details, but it seems all abandoned the ship with him and all were lost. He was insensible when picked up.

Advices from Panama of the first report all quiet on the Isthmus. Dr. Parra has the votes of five States, and is considered elected President of Colombia.

The election in Peru was bloody. The soldiers and police were ordered not to interfere as long as the electors only killed each other.

GALVESTON, Nov. 12.—The steamship State of Texas, which has been outside to-day searching for the Waco people, has returned and brings no further news. There seems to be little hope now of finding any of her passengers or crew.

The steamship Australian, which was driven ashore at the mouth of San Bernard river, is reported to be lying in fifteen feet of water, and it is expected she will be soon towed into deep water and proceed to New Orleans for repairs.

GALVESTON, Nov. 13.—The body of Capt. Wolfe, the Galveston pilot who went out on board the City of Waco, has just been found near where the steamer went down. His remains had several marks, which appear to have been burned. As Capt. Wolfe was an experienced pilot and seaman there is now no hope that any of the others, either passengers or crew, ever escaped from the burning vessel alive. It is thought their bodies will all be recovered in a day or two.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—Telegrams from Plattsburg, Whitehall and other points in this State report a heavy snow storm. Fears are entertained of an early close of navigation.

BROWNSVILLE, Nov. 15.—The Federal grand jury, in their report, say that from Brownsville to Pecos river, a distance of six hundred miles in length and one hundred in width, to the Nueces river, all American rancheros have been ordered by Mexican raiders to leave their homes, on pain of death, and that one hundred thousand head of stolen cattle are driven to Mexico annually by Mexican marauders.

Numbers of Federal officials have been assassinated, postoffices burned, custom-houses robbed, mail carriers and inspectors of customs killed while in the discharge of their duties, and the perpetrators of these crimes have gone unpunished, and general insecurity of life and property prevails on the border. The jury found eighty indictments, and urge decisive action on the part of the State and general government to punish criminals and protect the inhabitants against Mexican banditti.

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 15.—The attendance at the State Fair, now being held in this city, is very large. The fair will close on Wednesday evening, the seventeenth instant. The distribution of awards commenced to-day, and the committees are all busily engaged in that work.

FOREIGN.

CADIZ, Nov. 12.—Eight hundred soldiers sailed for Cuba yesterday, and five thousand are preparing to follow.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—While the tide was ebbing to-day a tidal wave ten feet high swept up Parret river, in Somersetshire. At Bridgewater dock the gates were burst and vessels broke from their moorings; one was sunk and twenty damaged. The weather is still inclement, and floods and inundations are increasing.

Mr. Wade, minister to China, has been knighted.

The cholera in Mulgherry districts interferes with the movements of the Prince of Wales. His visit to Bayapoor is uncertain pending the investigation of cholera there.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—A violent storm has prevailed all day. Much damage has been caused at Dover, Boulogne and other seaports on the British and French coasts by high tides. Thousands of acres have been submerged in Somersetshire by the overflowing of the River Parret.

LONDON, Nov. 15.—The tide in the Thames this morning was the highest on record. Greenwich and the low lands along the river were partially inundated. The weather around the coasts continues very heavy. The wrecks have been numerous. Lloyds to-day publishes reports of wrecks that occurred last night off Bridlington, Carding, Clovelly, Berwick, Sunderland, Bride and elsewhere. The British ship Astrida, from this port for the United States, has been lost near Boulogne. Nine of the crew were drowned. The vessel has gone to pieces.

From the Work.

COLUMBIA, LA.—Mr. Editor: Our parish has been stirred from center to circumference on the all-important subject of the salvation of souls for the past month; indeed a spirit of revival has pervaded our vicinity for the past two years, and constant accessions have been made to our churches.

On the fourteenth instant Bro. Jackson's camp meeting, six miles west of here, commenced. The grounds selected and the preparations made were not at all inviting—only a brush arbor, and a few rude, scattered tents. There were in attendance Bros. Jackson, Wynn, Clay and Schroeder, and local brethren from the surrounding circuits, and God through them worked mightily in the midst of the people. The camp meeting lasted six days, resulting in twenty conversions—among whom three were children of Methodist ministers—and fourteen souls received the blessing of perfect love.

On the adjournment of camp meeting our pastor, Bro. Wynn, accompanied by Bro. Clay, came to this place and commenced a protracted meeting, which has just closed. The large number of persons present will bear me out in the assertion that God never revealed himself more powerfully to the people than during this meeting. Twenty-three persons were soundly converted, and our ministers say some were as bright conversions as they ever witnessed. It seemed as though the gentle, stupendous wings of mercy overshadowed the town and community. Some received the blessing of pardon coming in on wagons, some on the streets, some at home at the still hour of midnight, some at the altar, but a majority were converted at the church after closing the regular services, while lingering around the altar, singing, talking and praying.

The doctrine of holiness was the theme of all the sermons preached. Twelve members of the church entered into the rest of perfect love.

Our church, which was already alive, has been wonderfully revived. We almost count our preachers by the number of members on the church-book, as all are using every effort to do all the good they can.

Many accessions have been made to the church in these last two meetings, composed of the best material in the country; and yet the revival work is going on. The whole country was never so thoroughly aroused on the subject of religion as at present. Yours in Christ,

THOMAS J. HOUGH.

OCTOBER 27, 1875.

BUTLER CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: As I am closing my labors on the Butler circuit for the present Conference year I desire to give you a brief statement of the work, beginning with the camp meeting at Choctaw camp ground, which commenced on the fifteenth of September and closed on the twenty-first. On Friday morning it began to rain, and continued almost incessantly until Saturday evening, which we feared would prevent the tenters from moving in; but, like all good soldiers of the cross, they braved the difficulties and were on the ground in time. The Lord began to pour out his Spirit, and our souls were made happy in the love of Jesus, and for a time we lost sight of the sorrows of earth and felt that "it was good to be there."

Bro. C. B. DuBose was the only itinerant preacher we had to help us until Saturday evening, when Dr. Mitchell, the presiding elder, arrived. He went to work in good earnest, awakening and stirring the souls of men. On Monday we were re-enforced by Bro. J. M. Crews. The meeting resulted in thirty-one accessions to the church, and between thirty and forty conversions, and many backsliders reclaimed.

I held a meeting at Ebenezer, where there was much interest manifested. I received thirteen into the church, and many found peace in believing.

I have just closed a meeting of eight days at Oak Grove. I do not think I ever witnessed such a continual outpouring of the Spirit since I have been preaching. Many old persons were at the altar who were never seen there before. We had twenty-five accessions to the church and many converted.

Up to the present I have received about seventy into the church; baptized thirty adults and fourteen children.

I appreciate the ADVOCATE very much, and wish every member of the church on my circuit would take it. I could get many more to take it but for the inconvenience of mails.

Yours in Christ,

D. J. WRIGHT.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE, Nov. 4, 1875.

PEROTE CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The people of this charge have for two or three years been passing through great financial adversity, which has resulted in more or less demoralization; but now we hope a good degree of prosperity is not far off, in which the people's hearts will return unto the Lord. Already there are some good evidences of improvement.

Last year there were but four churches in the charge; but, having organized two more, we now have six. The new ones have resolved to build houses of worship at an early day. This is now a compact and very good circuit. We would have purchased or built a parsonage but for the stringency of the times. This, we hope, can be done in the near future; and, when it is accomplished, happy will the preacher be that the Bishop may appoint to serve this people, yea, thrice happy!

Some revival services have lately been held, in which I trust some good has been done. About fifteen persons have been received into the church this year, and twenty-six children have been baptized. The whole circuit is evidently improving in every respect.

The Eufaula district camp ground is located at Wilkie Springs, in the bounds of this circuit, and the annual convocation there is of vital importance to us. In September last we assembled there with a strong hope of enjoying a glorious outpouring of the Holy Ghost, and of seeing scores of sinners brought into the fold of Christ. But a gracious and all-wise Providence had another great work to accomplish there. He sent rain in abundance upon us, and, as we had a brush arbor, our meeting was comparatively a failure. Some of us thought the design of Heaven was to induce the people to build a substantial shingle-roof arbor, and we so told them. The result was that a certain number of brethren, led by Maj. Isaac F. Culver, resolved to build the arbor, and raised on the ground nearly $800 for that purpose. Last Saturday the building committee let out the contract to a reliable gentleman for $625. Thus the prospect opens brightly in this section of our beloved Methodism. The camp meeting resulted in fourteen accessions to our church. Next year we expect to begin the services under our new arbor on Saturday night before the fourth Sabbath in September. You, Mr. Editor, are invited.

W. S. TURNER.

MR. EDITOR: Our camp meeting commenced on Friday night, October 8, 1875. There were no preachers present but myself, and Bro. J. W. Williams, local preacher. At the early stage of the meeting there was a goodly number assembled under the arbor. Next day the people came from all directions, the various vehicles, from the family carriage to the slow but sure-going ox cart, mixing and mingling as each discharged their burdens, until all the tents were occupied—about twenty. At nine o'clock the services were opened at the stand by Rev. J. M. Brown. During the day Bros. W. A. Doddy, John Pipes and Presiding Elder S. S. Scott arrived. On Sunday night the Holy Spirit descended with great power. At every hour's service was heard the shout of triumph from the Christian's happy soul, mingling with the moans and sobs of the penitents who crowded the altar. The preaching was searching and pointed, unctuous of the Holy Ghost. On Monday evening the groves resounded with prayer and praise from both sides of the line—the brethren on the one side and the sisters on the other—as they retired to receive strength the more successfully to meet the foe. The preachers all left for their different fields of labor on Tuesday morning. The writer left on Wednesday morning, in consequence of sickness in his family. Bro. Williams, the only preacher who remained, did faithful labor. The meeting continued to increase in interest until it closed on Thursday night. It was a success. There were twenty-eight additions to the church and about as many conversions.

PLEASANT GROVE, NATCHITOCHES PARISH, LA.—Mr. Editor: There is a place in Natchitoches parish sacred to the memory of many living witnesses as the scene of their conversion to God, called by the Methodists Pleasant Grove, and by the Cumberland Presbyterians Bethany. Here these churches worship together, and practically declare: "We be brethren." In this church Bro. J. Jones, pastor of Bethany, and myself, supernumerary on Springville circuit, held a union meeting, embracing the second Sabbath in October, which resulted more gloriously than we had allowed ourselves to hope. The Savior was graciously present and manifested his power to save souls. There were twenty-five conversions, and the churches greatly revived. Sixteen joined our branch of the church, seven the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and others the Baptist, who also united with us in this concentrated effort and mighty struggle for victory over sin. An old Baptist brother said he had been going to church for forty years, and he had never witnessed such demonstrations of the Spirit's power. Our own spirits were greatly refreshed and comforted, for all of which we give the Master thanks. We had to regret the absence of several brethren in the ministry who promised to be with us. Especially did I regret the absence of Bro. Allen, our pastor.

Yours in the love and service of our Lord, JESSE FULTON.

BLACK HAWK, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: I am now closing my year's work on this circuit, and am glad to say it has been quite a successful one. We have held four protracted meetings, resulting in between eighty-five and one hundred conversions. I do not know the exact number, because several were at home and at prayer meetings. All the meetings were good, both in actual results and in the sowing of seed to produce fruit in after days. But the last meeting calls for special notice. It began on the third Sunday in September; bad weather; people exceedingly busy; excitement so great that some were actually staying in the woods at night for fear of massacre; all seemed against us, yet the work prospered; and though we had no ministerial help, except two sermons preached on Sundays when we were at other appointments, yet we continued one week day and night, then two weeks longer at night, resulting in forty-six conversions, and such an impetus to the church as it has never had. There were thirty-three additions—the others were already members of the church.

I have preached more than one hundred and forty times—other brethren about seventy-five times; have paid nearly four hundred visits; distributed between $35 and $40 worth of Haygood's essay on missions, Anthon's lecture on benefi cence, and tracts; sold more than $100 worth of books. Am sorry to say there are not quite half as many subscribers to the Advocates as there are families. All the collections will come up in full, and some over.

From a Reader.

MR. EDITOR: The ADVOCATE comes to us weekly, laden with many good things upon which the mind and heart can feast. It is inconceivable how so many of our church members can content themselves without this means of religious comfort and instruction. To us it is a necessity.

I was much consoled and edified by a recent editorial—"Sorrowing Not as Others." I had only three weeks before been called upon to give back to God a sweet, promising little boy of nearly five summers, and none save a parent can fully sympathize with one so bereaved. When the desire of our eyes is taken from us, even though we sorrow not without hope—though we know the "parting of death is very brief," and are assured of the felicity of those who have been called away—yet the trial is one of exceeding bitterness.

Neither philosophy nor stoicism can avail to calm the anguished soul; but a sweet submission to the divine will, and a strong and unwavering faith in him who is "the resurrection and the life," alone can do it.

After reading your article, and receiving from it both comfort and admonition, I was enabled to say more fully than before: "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

"O say it was well! ere the splendor
Of his dawning had died into gray,
While the rose-glow of childhood was tender,
He should glide through the arches of day.

"O say that his sheep is not dreary;
It only was kindest and best
That his Father, who saw he was weary,
Should wrap him the sooner to rest."

O that we could in all our bereavements lay hold upon the promises of God, and then we would indeed be enabled to say: "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him;" and out of the darkness would arise light, lighting up even the narrow confines of the tomb. MARY J. PARKER.

CANTON, MISS., November 8, 1875.

THE Conference of the Wesleyan Methodists closed a six days' session at Sycamore, Ill., on the twenty-seventh ultimo. The absorbing question that occupied the attention of the assemblage was that of secret societies. The following rule on the subject was adopted: "We will on no account tolerate our ministers or members in joining or holding fellowship with secret societies, as, in the judgment of the Wesleyan Methodist connection, it is inconsistent with our duties to God to hold such connections."

A FARMER, fearing an earthquake in the region of his home, sent his two boys to a friend's until the peril should be over. A few weeks after the father received this letter from his friend: "Please take your boys home, and send down the earthquake."

HE that speaks the truth will find himself in sufficiently dramatic situation.—Christopher North.

CONFESSIONS OF A CONVERTED INFIDEL. By Rev. John Hayley, of the Virginia Annual Conference. Published by T. L. D. Walford, Richmond, Va.

This is the fourth edition of an interesting work. It is, to a considerable extent, an autobiography of the author, and relates how he became an infidel, the circumstances of his conversion, entrance upon the work of the ministry, his visit to England, afflictions. There is a chapter on the great conflict between Christianity and infidelity, and a concluding appeal. Also an appendix relating to Abner Keeland, Snakes in the Grass, Slavery in the United States, Testimonies to the Truth of Christianity from Infidels, The Last of Earth. Mr. Bayley's narrative is a plain one, and calculated to do good. It is an excellent work to put into the hands of young men who may be tinctured with infidelity. DOING AND BEARING.

BY R. CAMPBELL.

Brightly before the youthful vision gleam
The heights which in the future Glory rears:
Ambition's dazzling lures gild ev'ry dream,
And cast their radiant hues o'er coming years:
And fiery Youth its proudest glory seeks
In deeds that win unperishing renown,
And rests not till upon Fame's loftiest peaks
Its brow is decked with Honor's laurel crown.

But, though the fadeless wreath is sweet to wear,
There is a glory more enduring still,
Won from the patience that can bravely bear
The fate we cannot change, though fraught with ill—
Won 'mid life's weary cares and conflicts long,
'Neath burdens borne by Duty's stern decree;
Oft by endurance of a grievous wrong,
And oft by only waiting patiently.

Such glory wears some trace of heavenly birth,
And leads humanity so near the skies
That, though uncrowned, neglected oft, on earth,
'Tis noted and approved by angel eyes.
And though our names in Fame's proud lists ne'er live,
Sufficient all, when through the pearly gate,
To hear th' Eternal's voice the judgment give:
"They also serve who only stand and wait."

JACKSON, LA., October 29, 1875.

Rev. J. O. A. Clark on Fraternity.

MR. EDITOR: In the Nashville Christian Advocate of October 23 a four-column article appeared from the pen of this worthy brother upon the question above named. In it are things new and strange. They struck us with the greater force because of the high appreciation we have of the cultured intellect and clear perceptive powers of Bro. Clark. Had certain affirmations therein found appeared over the name of one less esteemed for intellectual clearness and force they would have been passed by as the idle utterances of an hour. But emanating, as they do, from one who "had perfect understanding of all things from the very first," they impress us as either having been written in great haste (in which case they should not have been sent to the public,) or that, when a man has the misfortune to catch a certain kind of fraternity which is now prevailing as an epidemic in certain localities, he instantly loses his equilibrium, and flies off at a tangent.

The Greeks had a tradition that the fissure in the rock over which the tripod of the Pythia was placed, and from which marvelous oracular utterances were given, was found by the strange effect produced upon a flock of sheep which was driven by a shepherd into that vicinity. Whenever a sheep approached that fissure it was instantly seized by an uncontrollable influence which made it leap into the air, bleat, kick, run around and around, and perform every other antic of which an infatuated sheep is capable. The Northern General Conference of 1872 seems to have opened a similar fissure. The gravest divines and sturdiest laymen no sooner get into a certain proximity and rapport to that fraternal opening than they begin to be "strangely warmed" and powerfully moved. Instantly these ovine gyrations commence. They bound into the air, spurn all former limits, and kick and push, east, west and south. Brethren ought to draw nigh to that place with great caution!

Bro. Clark has made declarations in the communication above named which, we must frankly confess, we do not understand. We do not mean that his language is not plain, or that his style is obscure. Both are excellent. But the logic, the history, the fact—here is the mystery. Every man has the right to explain himself, and we readily accord it to our brother in this instance; and, in order to give him an opportunity so to do, we propose to take up in order the affirmations alluded to.

1. He tells us: "I voted for the minority report in our late General Conference at Louisville. I voted for it because I thought it the better way to respond to the fraternal message of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Gov. Polk, who concluded the debate, compared the two resolutions and the two sets of facts appended to them, respectively, to a double-barreled gun, one set of facts belonging to one barrel, the other to the other barrel. Hence I was afraid of the majority report; it looked too much like a gun—a double-barreled gun at that—a gun too well loaded, both barrels being loaded with powder and ball, and loaded up to their very muzzle. I was fearful—not that it was so intended—that the Methodist Episcopal Church would accept the simile and regard it as a gun—as a weapon of war, and not as the pipe of peace. And I was afraid when this gun was fired off it might shoot harder behind than before."

Now one would naturally suppose that a brother who saw in the majority report only a deadly weapon, loaded to the muzzle, double-shotted, and in the hands of "the more extreme on our side," would never ask the privilege of coming over into the ranks of these "more extreme on our side," and putting his well-instructed finger, along with theirs, upon the fatal trigger which was to blow fraternity and the Methodist Episcopal Church over the moon. In truth we would expect one who, when that more than Pandora's box—the majority report—is named, sees only an arsenal of fire-arms—cannons, muskets, carbines, fowling-pieces, and a sprinkle of torpedoes thrown in for variety—to fly from the "infernal machine" with every possible expression of alarm. Our surprise, therefore, can be more easily imagined than expressed when we saw this brother, before whose mind these unfraternal horrors floated, coming over and ranging himself with "the more extreme on our side." He thus tells it: "I asked the privilege, after having voted against the majority report, of recording my vote for it. The privilege was granted, and my vote was so recorded."

This "privilege," he says, he asked in order to insure "the unity of Southern Methodism." But, according to Bro. Clark's showing, how could he contribute to "the unity of Southern Methodism" by thus changing his vote from "the minority" to "the majority" report? He represents that the weight of the sentiment of the General Conference was with him in his support of the minority report. "In my judgment," he says, "the great majority of the Conference were not opposed to fraternity." This is said in a connection that necessarily implies that those who supported the majority report were "opposed to fraternity." It is well known that the no-ultimatum-fraternity brethren have all along represented that our report was opposed to fraternity. Bro. Clark simply reiterates this sentiment in the above sentence. He says: "I gave it as my opinion—an opinion, nothing more—that the minority report, or something like it, would have been adopted, or the majority have been modified, had it not been for certain things." The "certain things" which defeated this desirable consummation were, in Bro. Clark's opinion; "the cutting off of debate," "the skillful tactics of those who availed themselves of every advantage which the parliamentary rules afforded," the tying "up too strictly and too uncompromisingly by parliamentary law a body of Christian men seeking the truth," etc. Now how a man can promote "the unity of Southern Methodism" by abandoning the very platform on which "the great majority" stood, and taking his position on a platform which was framed by "the more extreme on our side," born of "old prejudices," and brought forth by parliamentary trickery and legerdemain, may be comprehended by those who have breathed the soul-enlarging atmosphere of Round Lake, but to those less highly favored it looks like one of those ovine gyrations above alluded to.

2. Bro. Clark says that in his interview with the Rev. Mr. Leech, of the Northern Church, "we both simply meant that such were the numbers, such the influence, such the skill, such the management, of the more extreme, that they succeeded, in opposition to the views of the more moderate, in making their opinions the action of their respective Conferences."

Strange that one who knows that a measure was carried "in a body of Christian men seeking the truth" by such unchristian means would "ask the privilege" of recording his vote for that measure! We have been impressed from the beginning that the attitude of our ne plus ultra fraternity brethren—those who can only see "old prejudices" in what we were once taught to regard as a faithful and honorable history on the part of our church—was not and is not the result of mature and deeply fixed convictions; but, on the contrary, is the result of a desire to be in opposition to their own brethren, and in sympathy with the triumphant and domineering North. This may seem to be an unkind reflection, but if, after we have given the facts, the reader does not admit the justness of it, we will blot it.

What are the facts in the case? They are that a small body of brethren are in opposition to the action of our last General Conference on the subject of fraternal relations with the Methodist Episcopal Church, without being able to agree among themselves on anything as a substitute for that action; that what one of them proposes on this subject another one repudiates, and what one offered and urged upon the floor of the General Conference as a substitute for nearly a whole day, he incontinently abandoned on the next day, and in the room thereof adopted on that next day a large part of the very measure he had opposed on the former day; that the attitude and action of our church since 1844 are denounced as "old prejudices," something to be "forgotten," etc., and a no-ultimatum policy of fraternity demanded. In a word, these brethren spend themselves in berating the action of the General Conference, characterizing that action as the result of parliamentary tricks and party cunning, at the same time they are unable to agree upon anything which should take the place thereof. We are tempted here to give a bit of history, to illustrate the point, that has not before been made public. When, on Friday morning, May 22, 1874, the writer presented and read the committee's report, Dr. Regester offered a substitute that differed in every essential phase of logic and history from the report. For that substitute the ne plus ultra brethren made a heroic fight. Dr. J. A. Duncan, in the course of the debate, proposed, as a conciliatory measure, that the report be divided, and all that part which relates to fraternity be adopted. The ne plus ultras utterly rejected this. On motion of Dr. Bennett the report was recommitted, with the substitute, and Drs. Regester, Hamilton and Duncan were added to the committee. We met that night at the Galt House, and discussed the report and the substitute until a late hour. Again and again Dr. Regester and his friends refused to take the fraternal part of the report. The committee adjourned after Wilson, Parker, Miller, Alexander, Jones, Bobo, DeYampert and Pittman had voted to return the report as it was (except only a readjustment of its parts,) while Hamilton, Regester and Ryland adhered to the substitute. On Saturday morning, when the report was again presented to the Conference, what was our surprise to see the minority coming forward, not with Dr. Regester's substitute, for which they had contended so valiantly the day and night before, but with the fraternity part of our report, which they had again and again rejected! Dr. Regester's substitute was never mentioned after Friday night. From that to the present time this opposition has been characterized by that kind of whimsicalness. The church is agitated from center to circumference by those who seem to have nothing to offer but opposition. Dr. Clark throws himself, in sackcloth and ashes, under a juniper-tree along with Bro. Leech, and laments that by influence, skill and management "the more extreme succeeded, in opposition to the views of the more moderate, in making their opinions the action of their respective Conferences;" when in fact "the more moderate," whose fate he laments, have never offered the church any connected or matured views on the subject. They have been entirely engrossed in the matter of opposition. In the name and for the sake of "the unity of Southern Methodism," let an end be put to this course.

3. Bro. Clark says: "If the question had come up before the fraternal messengers of the Methodist Episcopal Church left Louisville, I believed the action of our General Conference would have been different. Delay was fatal to those who represented the views of the minority. The first impulses, under the influence of the glorious baptism of the Spirit which attended the words of the fraternal messengers, would have decided the Conference in favor of the views of the minority. This was my honest conviction then—it remains so to this day."

And yet, strange to say, though it "was his honest conviction then, and remains so to this day," he "asked the privilege" to change his vote to the side that should have been defeated, and would have been defeated if the moderates could only have been re-enforced by "the fraternal messengers of the Methodist Episcopal Church!" Surely the untimely departure of "the fraternal messengers" was to Bro. Clark like the fatal delay of Grouchy and arrival of Blucher to Napoleon. Had Grouchy been in time, and Blucher a little behind, Napoleon would have proceeded from Waterloo to the throne of France, instead of to the lone rock of Helena. Had "the fraternal messengers" stood their ground Bro. Clark would never have —"asked the privilege to change" his vote! While we cannot sympathize with him in the miscarriage of what was his "honest conviction then and now," we may possibly be able to moderate his grief somewhat by assuring him that we believe that that General Conference had in it too much of the stuff that men are made of to have been overawed and intimidated in their action by the presence of "the fraternal messengers." In the insinuation that his brethren could have been influenced by such considerations he insults their Christian manhood as grossly as he afflicts "the unity of Southern Methodism" by his policy of opposition.

4. Bro. Clark says: "I believed, even after this delay—even after time had been given to arouse the old prejudices, which had been greatly silenced by the baptism of love which we all received on that memorable day when the fraternal messengers addressed us—that the views of the minority would have prevailed had not debate been cut off by the call for the previous question, and the hurry of many delegates to rush through the business of the Conference that they might return home the sooner. This was my opinion, and it will be such as long as I remember the convictions of that hour."

And still he "asked the privilege to change his vote!" "The cutting off of debate," the "call for the previous question," the "hurry of many delegates," etc., were facts. But that they made the action of the Conference what it would not have been without these facts is something that no man acquainted with the record can afford to affirm.

The record shows that as soon as the committee's report was read, Nelson Head, P. A. Peterson, L. M. Lee and S. Regester successively occupied the floor against it. Before a single voice was heard in favor of the report, not only had these brethren inveighed against it, but Dr. Regester introduced his substitute, and thus contributed as much as possible toward diverting the mind of the Conference from the merits of the report. The record further shows that in the discussion of the question on the Conference floor the opposition made ten speeches, while but seven were made for the report. If any rights, therefore, were interfered with by the cutting off of debate, it was those of the majority. With what propriety, then, can any one say that the previous question, or any other of the causes alleged, defeated the minority? They enjoyed every privilege that the majority had, and assuredly were not remiss in using them. That they failed to carry their cause was attributable to its badness, and not to any restraint put upon their rights.

OBITUARIES.

MRS. ELLEN H. TATUM, wife of John N. Tatum, of Macon county, Ala., and sister of W. H. Wild, of the Alabama Conference, died at Bladon Springs, Ala., August 30, 1875. She was the daughter of William and Susan Wild, now deceased; was born in Baldwin county, Ga., August 25, 1833; was converted and joined the Methodist Church South in early life, and continued a member until she passed away—a child of affliction for three years.

Painful was it to see this wife and mother breathe out her life, away from home and husband and children. This blessedness being denied her, her mother's heart clung to the last to the vain hope that "God would spare her to reach her children," calling them by name, and "praying God to bless them." She could not give them up until her poor, stammering tongue was being silenced for the grave. Although she died remote from her own hearthstone and her own heart-ties, she did not lack for kindly sympathy or affectionate tenderness. Coming to Bladon in quest of health, a child of sore affliction for three years, she had hoped to be able to be "home again" before she was summoned away from earth. Loving life, and clinging to the absorbing desire to reach her dear ones, it was afflicting indeed to see her die—to lay her poor, emaciated body away among strangers. But what matters this? It will be meet for the resurrection all the same; and the feeble frame is but the perishing shell that incases the soul, that lives on and forever. A bright-hearted girl, an affectionate wife and mother, a patient sufferer—she is gone.

JULIA WESTWOOD.

BRO. WILLIAM C. MCDOWELL was born in Muscogee county, Ga., in 1843, and died in San Antoulo, Texas, August 19, 1875, aged thirty-two years.

Being a member of the Masonic fraternity, he was kindly cared for. Through their watchful solicitude all that was needed for his comfort was amply provided. His remains were taken in charge by the fraternity and buried with Masonic honors. Away from his mother's home, and from brother and sisters, strange hands ministered to his wants, wiped the death-damp from his brow, closed his eyes in death, and deposited his body in the silent grave. Such tokens of love will ever be held in the highest regard by his aged mother and others of his own family.

Bro. McDowell joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the summer of 1872, during a protracted meeting held at Bellevue, an appointment seven miles from Opelousas, and now attached to the Opelousas station. When he professed religion I am not informed, but from the character he sustained in the community where he held his membership it must have taken place at or near the time of uniting with the church. It was not my privilege to know Bro. McDowell, as he had gone to Mexico before I took charge of Opelousas; but of his Christianity, of his love for God and faith in Christ, there can be no doubt in my mind. In his last hours he said he was perfectly willing to die. He was enabled to say: "God's will be done, and not mine." To a friend, who wrote to his mother for him, he said: "Write that I am with Christ, and am going home to be with him."

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Whereas, It has pleased the great Architect of the universe to remove from our midst another worthy craftsman and a beloved brother, MARC. C. AYRES, it is meet that his brethren, who cherish his memory, should in some permanent manner express their admiration for his Masonic and social virtues, and the sorrow which rends their hearts in being forced to part with him; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while we devotedly bow to the fiat of our Grand Master on high, and while we consign with becoming reverence our beloved brother to the silent city of the dead, we hail with joy the blessed thought that our brother has been added to the list of the valiant soldiers of the cross who have entered the grand lodge on high.

Resolved, That we tender the afflicted family and relatives of the deceased our sympathies in their sad bereavement, and assure them that his virtues live in our memories, and reflect their luster beyond the portals of the tomb.

Resolved, That the brethren of this lodge wear the usual badge of mourning for the space of thirty days, and that a copy of these resolutions be furnished the family of the deceased, also to the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and Gainesville Gazette for publication.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the records of the lodge.

REV. JESSE LEE was born in Virginia in 1793, and died in Covington, La., July 24, 1875, in the eighty-second year of his age.

The deceased—the namesake and, I believe, a relative of the old pioneer of the same State—entered the Baltimore Conference in 1818, and transferred to the Mississippi Conference about the year 1835, but, becoming dissatisfied, withdrew in about ten years after from the Methodist Episcopal Church, and joined the Protestant Episcopal Church. But, not being contented with the form of godliness after having experienced its power, he left the Episcopalians and concluded he could live out of all churches. This he did for twenty-five years, never going near a religious assembly. When about seventy-seven years of age he returned again to the church of God—to his first love—was recognized as a local elder, and died in the prospects of a blessed immortality. He was plain, earnest and faithful as a preacher, a remarkable reader of the Bible, and to the last never ceased to regret the step which led him to forsake the church of Christ. He leaves a wife and four children.

MR. EDITOR: I send you for publication the following tribute to a sweet little girl, taken from my Sabbath school. Yours,

L. W. REEVES, Supt.

Whereas, God, in his wise providence, has called from earth to heaven the gentle spirit of our dear little friend, MARY LIZZIE ABRAHAMS, a prompt and dutiful member of our Sabbath school; therefore,

Resolved, That in her death we recognize the hand of our heavenly Father; and, although we deeply mourn her loss, we willingly give the sweet blossom back to God, to bloom amid the celestial bowers of a world of love and happiness.

Resolved, That we tender to the bereaved parents our heartfelt sympathies in their distress and sorrow, with the confident hope that little Mary Lizzie, as a guardian angel, will hover around them to welcome and woo them to the skies, and to those realms of bliss prepared for the redeemed of the Lord.

Resolved, That these resolutions be published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and a copy be furnished the parents of the deceased.

MISS AMANDA EATON,
MISS CARRIE PEARL,

DAYTON, ALA., September 7, 1875.

MRS. SARAH C. DENHAM, daughter of Robert and Martha Dyer, and wife of John O. Denham, was born February 7, 1831, in East Feliciana parish, La., and died in East Baton Rouge parish, La., April 20, 1875. She was the mother of eight children, five of whom, with her husband, she leaves to mourn the loss of a faithful wife and a devoted mother. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1855. Sister Denham was a subject of suffering for several months before her death, but she endured the wearisome hours of her affliction with becoming Christian patience. Under all circumstances she was the same meek Christian lady. By her neighbors and friends she was much beloved.

The day before she died, in conversation on the subject of a preparation for death, she remarked that she had not put off that duty to a sick or dying bed, but had sought in health grace to sustain her in sickness and death. May all her family and relatives do likewise.

N. B. YOUNG.

DIED, September 14, 1875, in Brownsville, Hinds county, Miss., in her twenty-fourth year, Mrs. NANCY A. HARGRAVE, daughter of Maj. N. H. and Sarah Bradley, leaving a heart-stricken husband and two sweet little girls, with many friends and relatives, to mourn her loss. Sister Hargrave joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1866, and from that time until her death she lived a consistent and devoted Christian, and died as she had lived, repeating in death the language of heaven: "Glory! glory!" and then the sanctified soul took its flight to the realms of eternal bliss.

We deeply feel the loss of our much-esteemed and efficient sister, both in the church and in her social relations; but upon none does the stroke fall so heavily as upon the devoted husband and the dear little children. But, thank God, "earth hath no sorrow that heaven cannot heal."

F. M. WILLIAMS.

THE subject of this notice, JOSEPH W. BIRDSONG, son of Joseph M. and Cornelia Birdsong, was born in Hinds county, Miss., October 24, 1853; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South September 29, 1874, under the ministry of Rev. J. M. Weems, and died September 27, 1875. He was a model young man. His highest aim was to serve God and provide for the comfort of his aged parents. His moral character and Christian integrity challenged the admiration of all who knew him, and hence he died in peace with God, esteemed by both old and young. His last words in the chilly waters of death were:

"Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly," etc.

"Though he be dead, yet he speaketh." May Heaven sustain the hearts of the bereaved ones, and bring them all at last to the heaven of the just and the glory of the saints.

F. M. WILLIAMS.

JAMES A. MCPHEETERS, M. D., died of pneumonia, October 10, in the fifty-second year of his age.

Bro. McPheeters united with the Presbyterians at the age of twenty-one years. For many years he has resided in Catahoula parish. There being no Presbyterian church in that locality, he communed with our Methodist brethren at Tensas chapel. Only they who have had experience know the difficulties of traveling in such a country as this, where land and water seem striving for the mastery; yet our brother, although living eight miles from the sanctuary, was never absent unless providentially hindered. He was beloved by all who knew him, and honored as a faithful servant of Christ. We rejoice in the assurance that he has entered into that sweet and eternal rest that remaineth for God's people.

W. H.

DIED, in West Baton Rouge parish, La., October 6, 1875, JOHN F. LOUDON, son of A. J. and Mary E. Loudon, aged fourteen years, nine months and two days. Johnnie was a boy of fine sense, possessed artistic talent of a high order, and gave fine promise of future usefulness. He was a steady, moral and good boy, a kind brother, an obedient and loving son, and remarkable for his devotion to and his love for his mother. Owing to the circumstances by which he was surrounded he had no church privileges, and was not a member; but his life seemed to be that of a Christian, and he never forgot or neglected his prayers, and we have good reason to believe that the loss of his parents is his eternal gain.

J. D. HARPER.

MINERVA TATE, oldest daughter of Isaac H. and Augusta Tate, was born November 23, 1867, and died August 17, 1875. This little girl of not quite nine summers was blessed with pious parents, who taught her to pray and believe in Jesus. She always claimed the preacher as her brother; and while she was not a regular member of the church, we have reason to believe that she had a child's faith, and is now at home with Jesus and other members of the family that have gone before.

W. W. GRAHAM.

BEVEL TABOR died of congestive chills, at his residence in St. Helena parish, La., September 8, 1875. Cut down in the full strength of manhood, while he leaves a father, brother, sisters and friends to mourn his loss in the family circle and church, yet the remembrance of his quiet, unobtrusive but active Christian life, and his exultant shout of "Bless the Lord" in his dying hour, give us comfort. We know whither he has gone.

FADING.

The past is fading, fading,
Never to come back again;
The cypress-tree is shading
Half of the sunny plain.
Unchanged, I wot, is each well-known scene,
Not a branch shows new in the hedgerows green;
Just so the lark from the meadow sprung,
When life and I alike were young;
Just so the primrose peeped to light,
When I and April hailed the sight.
Yet nature's self pervading
Is the sense of something gone;
The past is fading, fading,
And the wheel of time rolls on.

The past is fading, fading,
And gathered in its hold,
Its mighty plains lading,
Is much we prize of old.
The grass grows rank o'er many a grave
Of the young and joyous, and gay and brave.
Many a well-loved voice is hushed,
Many a golden hope is crushed,
Many a happy dream is over,
With smile of kindred, friend and lover.
The past is fading, fading,
The blood runs cold and slow;
Harsh wisdom is degrading
The creeds of long ago.

The past is fading, fading;
We cling and pray in vain
Where the cypress-tree is shading
The tombs of all the slain.
Slain by the years and put aside,
The darlings of love, the idols of pride,
One by one the frail links part,
Hand drops from hand, and heart from heart;
One by one the sweet things given
To brighten earth go back to heaven;
To love and life pervading,
Sigh the sense of something gone,
And the past is fading, fading,
And the wheel of time rolls on.

London World.

Read the Bible—Read it All.

Dr. Parker, the well-known pastor of the City Temple, Holborn Viaduct, London, has recently returned from his annual vacation, which he spent this year on the Continent. Giving his impressions and the lessons he derived from a temporary absence from home, he stated that he was more than ever convinced of the necessity for purely biblical preaching—the exposition of God's word in all its scope and simplicity. The following Sunday morning, accordingly, his theme of discourse was the Bible. Having quoted the passages, "Search the Scriptures," "Let the word of Christ dwell in—you richly," "The sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God," and remarked on the unity, cohesion and entirety conveyed by the phraseology of these texts, he proceeded:

The Bible ought to be read right through. It is only then you can know the music, the swell, the cadence, the rapture and sorrow, the triumph and the tears, of God's word. What would you know of your boy's letter if you were to read the superscription on Monday, to look at the signature on Friday, and read a little in the middle of it three months afterward? I get tired toward the end of July and I go away to the mountains. I take the Bible with me; I read it through, and I feel as if I had never seen the book before. I have spent most of my life in reading and expounding it, yet it seems as if I had never seen it. It is so new, so rich, so varied, the truth flashing from a thousand unexpected and undiscovered points, with a light above the brightness of the sun. And that summer reading of the Bible is what I call tuning the instrument.

If anybody does not believe the Bible, he has never read it through; he may have read a little here and there, with general commentaries and criticisms between, but he has not read the whole. Once two men said: "We will disprove the conversion of Paul." They read it through—and wrote a book in proof of it. So will God deal with all destructive critics who really make themselves masters of the situation they intended to overthrow. * * * * * *

It is wonderful, if you read the whole, how it gets hold of you somewhere. I have tried it; and I appeal to you who know it best whether you will willingly let it drop out of your fingers when it has once got into the movement and necessity of your being.

Suppose you should ask a man to read this book clean through at one sitting. What would his notions be? I do not ask him the memory of particular texts, but I would say: "What are your notions?" I should not be surprised to hear him say: "It is a very solemn book. There were deep soundings in it that made me shudder with a chill, the like of which I never felt before."

What more? "The infinite reluctance with which God gives up man—that struck me in reading the book from end to end. The pain, the yearning of God, the moan of a mother, the cry of a broken heart—it was very wonderful. I felt in reading it as if God were putting out both his arms, straining his eyes after me, and crying out to me: 'Come back!' I cried at some parts of it myself; I forget just now where they were, but I think you will find the tears on the pages here and there even yet. It seemed as if God was saying: 'Image of my countenance, upright like myself, susceptive of immortality, companion of my life, wrecked and shattered, wounded and dying, yet how can I give thee up? Ye were not made for death. Why will ye die?'"

What more? "I remember it was a righteous book. There were pages in it when the wicked man had his own way; but presently God searched him out and brought him to judgment. It made me glad, and in the middle of my reading I thought: Would that the book were at the basis of all political legislation, at the heart of all commercial enterprise; would that it were the secret of all civilization, and the inspiration of all domestic and national life.

"And I remember this about it: that it seems to be all other books. I have read a great many books, and I feel now that I need not have read them; they are all here. Novels—it is all there in the prodigal son. Two men, the runaway son, the scapegrace, the far country, the riotous living, the harlot, the evil companionships, the bad treatment, and the coming home again. Joy! I never heard such silver bells ringing in my life as the chimes in this book. Sorrow? None like it. Its woes swallow up all other grief. Its cross, like the rod of Moses, swallows up all other crosses in its great tragic sorrow."

"But are there not some terrible things in that book of yours?" "Yes, there are. There are stories in the book that no minister dare read in the congregation. There are chapters that no publisher could take out separately and put in his shop window. Yes; but blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God even in that shame. These stories are in their right place in the Bible, surrounded by the lightnings and thunders of judgment in the Old Testament, and by the tears and tenderness, and touching death on the cross, in the New—all that is unfolded in the word redemption."

Do not vindicate the Bible, if you please—let it alone. It needs no vindication—it is there. It has been assailed—still it is there. It has been assailed from points from which it does not start. It does not contemplate the things which have been turned into means of assault against it. Suppose a man should say: "An alkali neutralizes an acid, therefore the New Testament is not inspired." What would you think of it? Suppose a man should say: "Two and two are four, therefore there can be no resurrection from the dead." Why, there is no link of connection—nothing to bring them together. So it is; the Bible has its own work; it starts from its own point, delivers its own message. It is not a book that comes within the region of logic, but of feeling, sorrow, want, imagination.

But does not the Apostle Paul reason? Not as if he wished to prove the existence of the thing, but in the sense that a man turns a diamond round and shows all its angles and sides and beautiful proportions—not as if he would prove that it is a diamond—so Paul turns the truth round, that every phase of it may catch the sun; he never lays it down as a thesis or proposition that there is a God. So with this book. It does not say: "I am inspired, and I will prove it." It simply says: "Read me, and read me all."

I want to remind you that it is possible to read a part as if it were the whole—to make too much of certain texts, and forget their bearing upon others, and so miss the proportion and analogy of faith. The man who takes out a solitary text and founds a denomination on it is not biblical, but only textual. He takes out a single line, exaggerates it, and does not consider its relationship to the manifold infiniteness of the remaining revelation.

I can prove by geography that the world is not round—that is to say, by taking a partial and local view of the surface of the earth, I can defy any man to prove that it is round. There are great rocky points, great crags and rocks shooting up into the air, some ten thousand feet high, others fifteen thousand and more. Then there are great valleys, sinking as deeply into the ribs and heart of the earth. Looked at in this light, no proposition can be more monstrous than that the earth is round. But you must not look at the part, but the whole. You must look at astronomy. The greater includes the less, and thus you proceed to establish the rotundity of the earth. So you must not look at one parable or text; "let the word of Christ dwell in you richly."

"I have not time to read the Bible through." I will not grant it in reality, but suppose I admit it argumentarily. Every man has time to read the Bible through, as a matter of fact. But take one book and read it through. Let me tell you what I did the other night, and let me invite you to do the same. I took the book of the Revelation of St. John the Divine, and read it through at once, right away. I never stopped from the first verse to the last. And it was a grand lesson. I used to look over the book, and pick out bits here and there, and I could make nothing of it. It is the story of to-day and to-morrow and the third day, written in great, grim, wonderful types and symbols. And every now and then there was a great green place, with fountains and trees, and I lingered there, and said: "I know that bit." When he was showing the locusts out of the smoke, "and the sound of their wings was like the sound of chariots," I said: "I cannot follow him there." But when I came to "Unto him that loved us, and washed us in his own blood," I said: "Wait there; I know that part." When he spoke of the woman "clothed with the sun," and "a time, and times, and half a time," and six, and six, and six again, and all these figures piled up before me, I could not understand it; but when he said, "I saw One, and on his vesture and on his thigh was written 'King of kings and Lord of lords,'" I said: "Wait there; that is familiar." When I read of the trumpets and the vials and the horns and the woes, I could make but little of them; but when the writer said: "I saw an angel flying through the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel," I looked with the eyes of my heart, and I hailed that messenger as a friend.

So, if you will read through this great book, I do not promise you will understand it all, and give a clear logical statement and proposition about every part of it. Nothing of the kind. You will come out dazed, bewildered, stunned, as if the thunder of heaven had struck you. And yet when you have time to recover your breath, and cleanse your vision, you will say to your friend: "Do go! Be where I have been, and go at once. There is nothing like it."

Ministers' Wives as Critics.

Our ministers' wives are generally women of good education and more than ordinary mental culture. They are supposed to be as competent to detect an ungrammatical expression, an improper pronunciation or enunciation as almost any other class of persons. In esthetics, if not in ethics, they are perhaps better authority than their husbands. We think we know some ministers' wives who excel them in the former science, albeit they are doctors of divinity.

Now we think there is a field of usefulness for some of these women of good judgment, good taste and good manners in which they might perform excellent service. Many of our (ministers) get into some little habits—some things very unpleasant in the pulpit—in our modes of expression, or in our articulation, which might be very readily corrected if our attention was called to them; but as it is a delicate matter, no one cares to speak to us about it. But if the minister's wife is a woman of intelligence and good taste, she ought certainly to be able to notice some of these little defects; and it is presumed that no minister of the gospel would object to his wife correcting his blunders, or criticising his matter or manners. She, indeed, is the only one who can feel entirely free to speak to him about these things. There are many good and able ministers whose usefulness is much hindered by some habit which they are perhaps not conscious of possessing, and which a word from an intelligent and observant wife might correct.

For example, there are ministers whom we have heard, who, in some way or other, have formed the habit of putting in the article "a," or the word "ah," between sentences, and between the members of the same sentence—thus: "All we like—a—sheep have gone astray—a—and the Lord hath laid on him—a—the iniquity of us all—a." Now this is very unpleasant to "ears polite." It is, indeed, a useless and disgusting habit. It may be that it is acquired by an effort to keep up a sound when there is not a sufficient flow of words; but silence would be preferable. We remember one of our theological professors once told the class, when criticising one of the students who had made some very long pauses in the delivery of his discourse, not having the subject well at command, that we should never stop. Better to say something, if it should be nonsense, as the silence would confound us. But never advised us to grunt to keep up the sound.

There are other faults which some public speakers have, such as using unnecessarily the pocket-handkerchief, leaning on the pulpit, or pacing furiously from one end to the other, stamping, looking at the ceiling instead of the audience, etc. Now any wife of ordinary common sense cannot fail to notice such improprieties; why not, then, ask her husband at the first opportunity to give them up?

It is very true that we cannot "see ourselves as others see us;" and the partiality and affection of our wives may blind their judgment, so that they too may not observe our defects as others do; but it would doubtless be advantageous if, good wives, instead of assuming that their husbands are almost perfect, would sometimes "view them with the critic's eye," and "stir up their pure minds by way of remembrance."

Some men there may be who, "vainly puffed up by their fleshly minds," are unwilling to be criticised or corrected by their wives. But would it not be better for us to heed their criticisms and encourage them than to have others laughing at our blunders?

If your wife is what she ought to be—a "helpmate" for you—you will do well to ask her advice in many things, and yield deference to it. You cannot elicit the views of your people or encourage their criticisms. Your wife is the only one usually who is in a position to be useful to you in this matter. No other person feels so deep an interest in your usefulness and success. Urge her to criticise you—prune you of your crudities—pluck your wings if you soar unduly—yea, even to use the prod, lest you should be exalted above measure. Excessive humility is better than excessive vanity.—Christian Secretary.

RELIGION THE GREAT BUSINESS. Unless I make religion my great and engrossing concern I shall be a stranger to all solid peace and enjoyment. I have at times caught a glimpse of the comfort which it yields to the spirit when I merge my will into God's will—when I resolve to have no will of my own separate from God. I feel quite assured that this renunciation of self, and entire devotion to God's service, would give a simplicity and grandeur to my existence; would throw an unclouded sunshine over all my ways; would raise me above the cares and provocations of this life; would enhance even my sensible gratifications, and superadd those gratifications of a higher order, which constitute the main and essential blessedness of heaven. O my God, may it be thus with me! Call me out of nature's darkness into thine own marvelous light! Give me to aspire after the graces, and to hold forth to my acquaintances, and, above all, to my children, the example of all righteousness. Conform me to the gospel economy, under which I sit, that as Christ died for sin I may die to it—that as he rose again I may rise to newness of life, and feel it my meat and drink to do thy will.—Dr. Chalmers.

A CURE FOR DRUNKENNESS.—There is a prescription in use in England for the cure of drunkenness, by which thousands are said to have been assisted in recovering themselves. The receipt came into notoriety through the efforts of John Vine Hall, commander of the Great Eastern steamship. He had fallen into such habitual drunkenness that his most earnest efforts to reclaim himself proved unavailing. At length he sought the advice of an eminent physician, who gave him a prescription—which he followed faithfully for seven months, and at the end of that time had lost all desire for liquor, although for many years he had been led captive—which he afterward published, and by which so many drunkards have been assisted to reform, as follows: "Sulphate of iron, five grains; peppermint water, eleven drachms; spirit of nutmeg, one drachm, twice a day." This preparation acts as a stimulant and tonic, and partially supplies the place of the accustomed liquor, and prevents that absolute physical and moral prostration that follows a sudden breaking from stimulating drinks.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Bible is now printed in no fewer than 210 languages. In 1854 it was printed in only 50.

—Among the contributions to Wesleyan missions acknowledged by the parent society is one of $1,200 from a son of the "Successful Merchant."

—The Protestant mission press at Beirut has recently received an order from the governor general of Allahabad, India, for a considerable invoice of Arabic books.

—A number of ladies at Simla, India, are making arrangements for the erection of a small house in the mountains for overworked or invalided Zenana teachers.

—In St. Petersburg a society of ladies has renounced the use of silk dresses, and every other kind of expensive attire, in order to employ the money so saved in the education of poor orphans.

—A Christian Chinese chapel, under Protestant Episcopal auspices, has been opened in Virginia City, Nevada. At the dedication, by Bishop Whitaker, 150 of the Chinese population were present.

—In the course of an address lately delivered by Cardinal Manning he stated his belief that nothing but the intervention of the "blessed and immaculate mother" saved France from destruction at the hands of the Germans.

—The death of Miss Seelye, niece of Prof. Seelye, of Amherst, has been a great loss to the missionary cause in India. She was connected with the Woman's Union Missionary Society, and labored with great devotedness as a physician in northern India, where she died, on June 9.

—The Methodist Recorder, London, says that during the past year £32,853 have been contributed by 2,721 trusts to the support of the circuits throughout England. Since 1855 debts to the amount of £374,152 have been paid off, while no less than £3,511,704 have been expended in the purchase, erection or enlargement of the Wesleyan Methodist Church property.

—The Spectator says: "At the dedication, in September last, of the new church erected at a missionary station in Western Africa, the collection consisted of 'bars of soap,' fathoms of cloth, bars of iron, snuff-boxes, knives, tumblers, leaves of tobacco and padlocks, the poorer people giving empty bottles, and such like." Mr. Fuller, the missionary, says: "In this way we made up about $20. As it was the first attempt at a collection, I think they did well."

—The retiring president of the General Conference of the Australian Methodist Church stated that when he first went to Sydney they numbered 6 ministers. Now their statistics showed 1,036 churches, 852 other preaching-places, 287 ministers, 5,888 catechists, 1,650 class-leaders, 26,267 church members, 2,252 on trial for church membership, 950 Sunday schools, 75,596 Sunday scholars, 179,928 hearers; and with the missions the churches would number 1,893, other preaching-places 1,153, and attendants on the ministry 328,416.

—In the half century of its existence the American Bible Society has received $13,597,589.63; and has printed 523,067,338 copies of its publications, representing 9,679 distinct publications, of which 1,732 are volumes. Of these publications 4,055, including 599 volumes, are issued by the society's aid at foreign mission stations, in 143 languages or dialects. It has appropriated $616,637.50 in cash in aid of the foreign mission press, and has granted publications to the value of $1,071,800. Its list of members and directors embraces over 31,000 names, including members of all evangelical denominations.

—The Canada Christian Advocate, in a review of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the Dominion, says: "After a careful review of the statistics of the church and the circumstances of the times, we are firmly of the opinion that there never was a period in her history when she was making that sure, permanent and rapid advancement as at the present." The editor says that there is a continual loss to the church by the absorption of its members, who remove to cities and towns, into other denominations. He urges that large places, like Toronto, Guelph, Woodstock and Chatham, should immediately be occupied by the Methodist Episcopal Church in order to prevent this great loss to the body by the secession of members to other religious organizations.

MISSIONARY.—The Rev. J. H. Chandler, writing from Bangkok, Siam, to the Christian Secretary, makes an encouraging report of the progress of Christian ideas among the Buddhists of that country. He says: "The belief that there is a creator and supporter of the world is becoming more and more prevalent, especially among the higher classes of the Siamese. The late King went so far as to acknowledge a 'supreme architect' in some of his public documents. The present King, at the commencement of his reign, used a similar expression in some of his documents. The form of expression has been gradually varying, until recent public documents conferring rank, etc., read thus: 'May that which is, or who is, supreme, and the supporter of the whole world, aid, sustain and protect, and grant him health, prosperity, happiness and long life.' The early missionaries were continually contending with the Siamese on the subject of a God, Creator and Savior. It was a subject very repugnant to them, and it was a rare thing during the first eight years of my residence here to find a Buddhist that would admit even the possibility of a God, Creator or Savior. But Christian truth, which was so freely sown, has pervaded the minds of the Siamese, both great and small, and we begin to see a little fruit. The King recently ordered several sets of all the publications made by the missionaries. They were collected, bound up, sent to his majesty, and paid for."

Our Young People.

THE FARMER'S SON.

A farmer and his little child
Walked out, one summer morn,
Through meadow land and forest land,
And fields of golden corn.

"See, child," the sturdy farmer said,
"How fair the growing grain!
I will make thy father rich and free
When winter comes again."

Then plucked he of the golden corn,
The little gentle lad,
And kissed it. "Bless the corn," he said,
"That makes my father glad."

"Nay, child," he smiled upon his boy;
"The fair grain does its best;
Yet, as it grows and ripens here,
Obeys but God's behest."

Then raised the child his little hand,
And bared his curly head:
"Bless God, he loves my father dear,
So loves us all," he said.

The sturdy farmer's eyes were wet;
"Amen," then whispered he;
"'Tis rare I pray, but bless the Lord,
Who gave my son to me."

Band of Hope Review.

From Our Little Friends.

WEST PEARL RIVER, LA., Oct. 28, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: You shall once that while we were writing you would like to know if we were trying to be Christians. I joined the Methodist Church not long since, and I hope that I will continue a member as long as I live. I will try to be a Christian also. I am fifteen years old. I have read the Bible through, excepting six chapters. We have no Sunday school here now, but we are going to try to organize one next Sunday, the thirtieth of October. We have had services at our church on the third Sunday in every month; but our pastor, Mr. Bowen, left us on the eighteenth of this month for Texas. The minister from the Pearlington circuit is to preach for us on the thirtieth instant. We were told that we were not to have a preacher next year, because we are so poor—we do not pay the preacher enough. But if we are poor we ought to have the gospel preached to us. Don't you think so, Mr. Editor? But we will see the Bishop about it. I am his namesake, and I will get my ma to write to him and ask him to send us one.

Your friend,

ELLA MCTYEIRE SADLER.

SHREVEPORT, LA., October 27, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I have been so anxious to hear "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest," and what a bays' nest can be, since Grandpa Goodale says it is connected with the Bee Hunt. I think the bays' nest must be a bee-hive. Please tell me if I am right. I live in Shreveport, and I go to school; am eight years old. Every week I look for your paper, and look for the children's corner first. I do wish Grandpa Goodale would tell us "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest."

Your little friend,

HUNTER THATCHER.

PINE RIDGE, Nov. 3, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: As I see so many little girls and boys writing to you I thought I would write you a few lines. I am a little girl eleven years old. My pa takes your paper, and we all like to read it ever so much, and I in particular. I always read the Child's Corner first.

I must tell you about our preacher. His name is Mr. Ballard, and I think he is a good preacher. As I think I have written too long a letter already, I will close.

Your friend,

RUTH BETHEL B——.

CAMPTI, LA., Oct. 30, 1875.

MR. EDITOR: We are two little cousins very near the same age—eight years old, and going on nine. We read the ADVOCATE—the part that is for the children to read, and all the poetry. We each have a scrap-book, and intend to put that story ("How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest") in them whenever we get it. We would like to see you, Mr. Editor, because we think you must love little children.

Your little friends,

ALMA AND NANIE.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I see several little boys and girls have written to you, and I have concluded to write to you also. I live in Caddo parish, La. I am going to school at Mooringsport, a flourishing little village. Our teacher is a young lady from Shreveport; we all love her very much. We have a nice church; preaching every Sabbath. Mr. Adair is our pastor.

From your little friend,

NANNIE MOORING.

The Little Mouse.

FROM THE GERMAN.

One morning little Wilhelmina went with her mother quite early to the top of a hill behind their house to see the sun rise. It was autumn, the corn had long been reaped and was gathered into the barns. The dew was on the grass, the air was cool and fresh, and Wilhelmina's cheeks grew rosier than ever as they climbed the hill. She and her mamma hastened quickly on, as they did not wish to be too late to see so beautiful a sight as the sunrise.

In spite, however, of the hurry they were in, Wilhelmina began all of a sudden to pull at her mother's dress, and to say: "Do wait a moment, mamma; if you look in there you'll see something so pretty."

The mother stood still and looked round, and in the furrow of a plowed field she saw two mice. One of them was evidently old and blind. It sat quite still, as if waiting; while the other, a nimble, pretty little creature, ran up and down along the field, picking up now a grain of wheat and now one of barley, till it had got quite a little heap, which it brought to the old mouse, who ate the corn up eagerly. While it was so doing the younger one was running about and seeking for more.

This went on for some time. Wilhelmina and her mother stood quite still, so as not to disturb or frighten the little animals. At last, when the old mouse had satisfied its hunger, the younger one gently took hold of its ear with its teeth, and led it slowly and carefully to a hole in the ground, through which they both disappeared.

"Now wasn't that a pretty sight, mamma?" cried Wilhelmina, clapping her little hands.

"Yes, that it was, indeed," replied her mamma. "The old blind mouse was, no doubt, the mother of the young, active one. Blind and feeble from her very great age, the mother mouse is no longer able to provide for herself, and would starve to death were it not that the child, recollecting all the love shown it by its mother when too young to take care of itself, repaid all that love and care by watching over the mother and getting her food. The young mouse puts to shame many a little girl who forgets all her mother has done for her when a baby, all the sleepless nights she has spent with her, all the anxiety and trouble which children must cause their mothers when young and helpless. How good and dutiful all children would be if they would only learn to imitate this little field mouse!"

Wilhelmina kissed her mother's hand, and said, almost in a whisper: "Dear mamma, I don't want you to have to complain again that I'm not a dutiful little daughter. I'll try never to forget that little mouse."

A Story for the Girls.

Sit down on the porch, children, and let me tell you about Aunt Rachel and the story she once told me. One day, when I was about twelve years old, I had planned to go after strawberries; but Aunt Rachel said to me: "A girl of your age should begin to learn how to do housework. Take off your hat, roll up your sleeves, and help me do the baking."

I pouted and sighed and shed tears, but was encouraged by the promise that I might go after the baking. Under good Aunt Rachel's directions I mixed a big loaf of bread, placed it on a tin as bright as a new dollar, and was rubbing the flour off my hands when she called out: "This will never, never do, child; you haven't scraped your bread-bowl clean."

I shall never forget the picture she made standing there, her eyes regarding me sternly, one hand resting on her hip, while in the other she held the untidy bowl.

"It will never do, child," she went on. "It is not only untidy, but it makes too much waste; to be a good housekeeper you must learn to be economical. You have heard the story of the young man who wanted an economical wife?"

"No," I answered; and I might have added that I didn't wish to hear it either.

"Well," she continued, "he was a very likely young man, and he wanted a careful wife; so he thought of a way he could find out. One morning he went to call upon the different girls of his acquaintance, and asked them each for the scrapings of their bread-bowls to feed his horses. You see they all wanted him, so they got all they could for him. Finally he found a girl who hadn't any, so he asked her to be his wife, because he thought she must be economical. Now," said Aunt Rachel triumphantly, "suppose a young man should ask you for the scrapings of your bread-bowl, what would you say?"

"What would I say?" I repeated scornfully; "why, I'd tell him if he couldn't afford to buy oats for his horses they might starve. I wouldn't rob the pig to feed them."

I suppose Aunt Rachel thought that lesson was all lost on me; but, as true as you live, I never knead the bread to this day without thinking of her lesson in economy.—Detroit Free Press.

LITTLE TRUTHFUL.—You've all read "Grimm's Fairy Tales," or, if not, you'll be pretty sure to read them before you are much older. They are very apt to be found in Christmas stockings, and, being the production of two German brothers who know well how to delight young folks, they are always very welcome. Jack heard the pretty schoolma'am one day repeat to her out-door class a pretty story that old Jacob Grimm, the brother who put these stories in a book, tells about one of his little readers.

He was told one fine morning that a little girl wished to see him in his reception-room, as she had something to say to "Herr Professor."

Stepping down to the room he found a little miss looking very grave and very wise.

"Is it thou," she said, "who hast written these fine fairy tales?"

"Yes, my dear; my brother and I have written them."

"Then the tale of the clever little tailor is thine; and it says at the end that he who will not believe it must pay a thaler (a German dollar."

"Yes, I have written that too."

"Well, sir, I do not believe it."

"Ah!"

"Here, sir, is a quarter of a thaler. It is all I have now, but I will call and leave the rest at some other time."

The kind old man laughed, and declined the quarter thaler. He offered, however, to see the honest little one home, and I have no doubt that the two became in time the best of friends.—St. Nicholas.

Saved from Sin.

To be saved is something more than pardon. It is a change of heart and, the implanting of a vigorous spiritual life in the soul. It is inward purity and a new creation. The justified man is also a new man. The judicial act of pardon on the part of God is attended in him who receives it with the regenerating work of the Holy Spirit. It is this aspect of salvation that is too frequently neglected. The power of Christ's blood to atone, to propitiate, to expiate guilt, is held, while its cleansing and sanctifying efficacy is not fully realized. There is a firm belief in deliverance from guilt, in the remission of sins, while the privilege and necessity of actual personal holiness are but feebly apprehended.

The tenor of some experiences, as we occasionally note them, indicates lax and erroneous views. Occasionally there are traces of the old Antinomian leaven, talk about imputed righteousness, that Christ has somehow obeyed the law for us, and that his righteousness is so made ours that holy living on our part is neither expected nor needful. We find professed Christians conscious of the prevalence of uncontrolled tempers and wayward affections, of unsubdued appetites and evil thoughts, who have settled down into comparative complacency and resignation, and with the conviction that this is about the best that is possible. There is Christ's imputed righteousness to make up for our derelictions, and the cleansing process is to be completed at death. Instead of fighting to overcome, and seeking to be washed from their sins in the all-cleansing blood, they have come to the conclusion that these besetting sins are inevitable and duly provided for in the plan of redemption. This notion is a most serious and fatal error, the occasion of ruinous self-deception, and the cause of the most fearful decline in spirituality. Mr. Wesley, it is true, has a sermon on sin in believers, in which he affirms "that there are in every person, even after he is justified, two contrary principles—nature and grace—termed by St. Paul the flesh and the spirit." But in all this Mr. Wesley contends that the believer does not walk after the flesh, that he does not give way to sin, and that "he has power both over outward and inward sin, even from the moment he is justified." Certainly he never encourages believers to rest in this state, wherein inward sin is felt, but urges them to repentance and to complete victory over it. Mr. Wesley held the residue theory—that inward corruption remains after justification—but his explanations show that he did not regard the yielding to sin as consistent with a state of acceptance with God. His sermon on repentance in believers is the most searching of all, in which he exhibits the manifestations of sin remaining after justification. But he urges the need and privilege of deliverance: "You have, therefore, good reason to believe he is not only able but willing to do this; to cleanse you from all your filthiness of flesh and spirit; to save you from all your uncleanness. This is the thing which you now long for; this is the faith which you now particularly need, namely: that the great Physician, the lover of my soul, is willing to make me clean. But is he willing to do this to-morrow or to-day? Let him answer for himself. 'To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts.' If you put it off till to-morrow you harden your hearts; you refuse to hear his voice. Believe, therefore, that he is willing to save you to-day. He is willing to save you now: 'Behold, now is the accepted time.' He now saith: 'Be thou clean.' Only believe, and you also will immediately find 'all things are possible to him that believeth.'" Without contending for any particular theory of Christian perfection, we must insist upon salvation from sin. Whether it be the normal state of all truly justified persons, from which many lapse without forfeiting their justified relation, or whether it be a second and distinct work, there can be no doubt about our deliverance from sin. If pride, anger, avarice, jealousy, selfishness and dominating appetites are in us, and if the conscience be defiled, these are to be overcome, and the heart must be cleansed. If we have not that love to God and to our neighbor which is the end of the commandment, it is to be sought and obtained. No matter how long we have named the name of Christ, our prayer should be: "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me." A fullness of spiritual power over sin is within the reach of every Christian. There is a perfect love that casts out fear, and a faith that completely appropriates the declaration: "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

A Grave Apprehension.

The question now pending between Northern and Southern Methodism is one of fraternal recognition and correspondence between the churches through their General Conferences. Our General Conference has taken such action as it considered right and honorable in the premises, and here the matter should rest until the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church accepts or rejects the conditions which our General Conference regarded as essential to formal reconciliation. If our Northern brethren do not see their way clear to agree upon these terms, then let us remain as we are until time and circumstances shall be more propitious for the settlement of the questions at issue. Certainly peace and fraternity among ourselves is of far more importance than the establishment of fraternal correspondence with another church. Apprehensions seem to be entertained by some that this agitation may lead to a disruption of Southern Methodism. However this may be, we believe the great body of our people, lay and clerical, stand firmly upon the action of our representatives at Louisville. If the purpose of any is to induce our church to abandon that position, we believe it will fail. Rev. C. W. Miller, writing in the Nashville Christian Advocate, expresses fears which, we hope, are not altogether well grounded. He is, however, on the border, and his views are entitled to serious consideration. He says:

This agitation has tended, all the time, to create a party in the bosom of the church, who are hostile to the peace and harmony of the church. Already the movement has assumed the distinct proportions and characteristics of a party. It has its shibboleth, it passes around its watchwords, it smiles on its adherents, and frowns on those who do not come up upon their elevated plain of fraternity. Arms are extended at right angles to embrace those upon whose lips the language of a few months ago was "disintegration and absorption;" while old friends are looked upon with suspicion, and charged with being actuated by "passion and prejudice." I cannot conceive of a greater evil threatening our Zion than that of internal, discordant parties. Let us stand shoulder to shoulder in the great campaign for the conquest of the world to Christ, and the tread of our advancing columns will shake this continent in a few years. Let us allow these parties to generate and grow up in our midst, and our strength will be frittered away in internal dissensions. This unauthorized fraternity movement is chargeable with this evil.

But this agitation, upon the part of those who set at naught the action of the General Conference on the matter of fraternity, will result in a division of the church. I have tried to shut out this fearful vision from my heart, but it rises, like the ghost of Banquo, at every point in this movement. The party is forming, the steps are being taken. The continuance of the state of things of the past few months for a little longer will bring this calamity upon us. Can it be possible that fraternity with the Methodist Episcopal Church must be secured at the price of disruption and alienation in our own? Is this the spirit of love? of fraternity? Are relations of friendly intercourse with another people so important as to justify the rending of the ties and the engulfing of the peace of our own family? Let Christian men pause and consider these things. Let the old men of the ministry, whose names have so long been precious household words in the church—who have been drawn away into these strange attitudes toward the church—reflect upon the evils that threaten us. They are too near the grave to embark in such enterprises. Let the church rally to her standards and stand by her utterances. She cannot afford, with her past experience, to commit herself to alliances which have no other guarantee than the promptings of a momentary emotion.

The Farewell Letter of Alejo Hernandez.

MR. EDITOR: I have read with much interest the excellent tribute paid to the memory of our dear Hernandez by Dr. Haygood in the Southern Christian Advocate, and the memoir of Bros. DeVilbiss and Sutherland at the Western Texas Conference, published in the last Nashville Advocate. They are admirable estimates of this noble Mexican.

I shall never forget how I was impressed on his first entrance to the Conference-room at Victoria, three years ago. His well-knit, manly frame, pleasant countenance and brilliant eye indicated his character. Ingenuous as a child, singularly spiritual, and of unusual energy, he combined in himself some of the very best elements of a missionary. He was ready for any enterprise in the Master's service—to go alone and at an hour's notice, if need be, to the ends of the earth. His conversion had satisfied every earthly desire, and it only remained for him to spend his life at the feet and in the work of his gracious Savior. He became in one instant a missionary then and forever. How full must have been the flood of holy passion in the soul of this young man to diffuse itself, as it has, throughout our church!

He and his wife and their babe started off from this port in the summer of 1873, our representatives to Mexico. As the head of the steamer turned out into the stream, what a feeble exponent it seemed to bear of our church toward the land of the Aztec! And yet it was a new departure of vast moment to our own spiritual life, as well as for that of the Mexicans. Upon his arrival he found a chapel awaiting him, and immediately entered upon his work. All who came in contact with him were profoundly impressed with the purity and strength of his Christian character. Our United States minister and consul resident at Mexico, as well as the missionaries of other churches laboring in the city, regarded him as an eloquent and holy man. He had scarcely been there a year before the disease of which he died first showed itself in a slight lameness. In the course of several months more it so increased that he became nearly helpless, and was forced to return home to Matamoras. When at last reduced to a condition of paralysis, which left him only the use of his tongue, he held prayer meetings in his chamber, and astonished all who visited him with the abounding joy which filled his heart and mouth. I published, a year ago, two letters which I had received from a chaplain of the United States army and from a Southern Presbyterian missionary who had visited him, which spoke in the highest terms of his noble and patient spirit; and of the valuable testimony which in his afflictions he still bore to experimental religion and to Protestant Christianity.

He has been taken, but not until he had the sweet privilege of seeing a number of men raised up by God from among his own people to take his place, and to carry on the good work of "spreading holiness" in Mexico.

I have written these lines as introductory to a translation of the last letter which I ever received from this noble man. It was written just before the May meeting of the Bishops at Nashville. I read it to them; and I beg that the whole church may attentively follow its touching periods, and accept the dying request and charge of our dear brother now in heaven. J. C. KEENER.

MATAMORAS, April 3, 1875.

REV. BISHOP J. C. KEENER, NEW ORLEANS—Beloved Father in our Lord Jesus Christ:

Health and Peace!—I have seen with great emotion the substance of a letter of last month, written by you to our beloved Bro. Henden, with respect to me, filled with love and compassion for my situation.

Beloved Bishop, I cannot do less for an action so philanthropic and essentially Christian than feel melted in delightful gratitude before the throne of divine grace which inspires such noble sentiments in my favor; for truly, truly I confess that I have felt daily, in a manner very lively, the sanctifying medicine of the prayers of hundreds of brethren of different churches made for me. This is, beloved Bishop, the principal point: that you do me the charity to call the attention of the ministers of our church and various others of our friends, that both these and those exhort their congregations to pray for me.

Beloved Bishop, I would wish to say much with respect to my critical circumstances and cruel torments of my sickness, but enough of that you already know. I only may say that, unless I am completely deceived, there is no relief for me; that I am daily oppressed at every step, and am not master of any of my faculties, not even able to move a finger; for my body is weary and irresolute by turns, while my pains are very acute, and at last a general paralysis has set in. In line, beloved Bishop, I am satisfied and fully convinced that I shall not travel any more this year until I go to live in the kingdom of Christ.

I would call your attention to the second point: that I have two children, a boy and girl, of a vivacity so extraordinary that all who see them are astonished. I pray, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that he may awaken the attention of our church, that she may carefully and watchfully improve the occasion that presents itself to educate and cultivate these little children; for I shall carry to the sepulcher the fear that these innocent little ones will be led away to Romanism by the family of my wife.

I have received with due punctuality every month the $35 in silver which the Missionary Society has been pleased to allow me, for which I desire you to present to the society our continual gratitude, for myself, my wife and my little children, in angelical speech; for we may assure you in sincere admission that were it not for such aid we should have been dead of hunger, for I have no other source from which any assistance may come to me.

I beg you to present my salutation to my beloved Bishop Marvin, taking leave of him, as well as of all the other Bishops of our church, until eternity, carrying with me the sweet consolation of seeing them all at the side of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

My wife, children and myself present our humble remembrance of gratitude to your lady wife, saluting her with the greatest expression of holy joy.

Farewell, beloved Bishop. I believe that very soon we shall see each other in the kingdom of our Lord, by the side of Christ Jesus; praying, in the meanwhile, that fresh and continual benedictions of the Holy Spirit may fall upon you, and that God shall not separate you from his side.

Your most affectionate brother and obedient son in Christ Jesus,

ALEJO HERNANDEZ.

A Mystery.

The genuineness of the Bishop Capers letter is still an unsettled question. Dr. Kennedy wrote to the postmaster, Clinton, Tenn., where this hard-to-find man DuPre is said to live, and received the following reply:

CLINTON, TENN., Oct. 10, 1875.

REV. F. M. KENNEDY, MACON, GA. Dear Sir: In answer to your inquiry concerning C. B. DuPre, I will say I know of no one by that name, neither can I find any one in this section who does. I have received two or three letters making the same request as yourself.

Respectfully, P. M. LILES,
Deputy Postmaster.

Dr. Deems, through whom the letter purporting to have been written by Bishop Capers was sent to the Methodist, in the following communications to the editor of the Southern Christian Advocate tells what he knows about the matter:

CHURCH OF THE STRANGERS,
1 Winthrop Place,
New York, October 26, 1875.

To REV. DR. KENNEDY—My Dear Doctor: Yours reached me yesterday. This morning Rev. Dr. Wheeler, the editor of the Methodist, whom I had never seen before, at my request promptly brought me the original "C. B. DuPre" letter, which, at your request, I gladly send you.

All I know of this matter is that the letter signed C. B. DuPre came through the mail to me with the article purporting to be Bishop Capers'. You will perceive that I was simply requested to publish it, the publication thereof not being left to my judgment. I was closely engaged at the time, and so I sent not only the Capers letter, but the DuPre letter, to Dr. Wheeler, with whom I had no acquaintance, but who had been represented to me as a scholar and a gentleman, that he might have all the facts on which to base his editorial judgment. He saw fit, as I think was natural, to publish both the letters.

As I was returning from the inauguration of the Vanderbilt University a distinguished clergyman of Dayton, O., who was sitting near me in the car, gave me a Western paper quoting some portion of your editorial. On reaching the city I found a letter signed "H. D. Capers," expressing the writer's belief in the genuineness of the Capers letter, and informing me that C. B. DuPre's address was Clinton, Tenn. Thereupon I wrote to you for your editorial, to Dr. H. D. Capers for permission to publish his letter, to the postmaster at Clinton, S. C., to forward all mail matter for Mr. DuPre to Clinton, Tenn., and to Mr. DuPre, at Clinton, Tenn., to send me by express the original Bishop Capers letter. You have sent me your editorial, for which I thank you. Dr. Capers has permitted me to publish his letter, and it is now in the hands of the editor of the Methodist. I have not heard from Mr. DuPre.

That is all. If the letter be not genuine, no fraud has been practiced upon me. I never examined it, never cared whether it was written by Bishop Capers or not; simply sent a package to the Methodist, which had been sent me for that office. If the question of publication had been left to my judgment, I think those who know me are pretty sure that I would have thoroughly satisfied myself as to the genuineness thereof before it went to the press.

Mr. DuPre should take speedy steps to let the public have proofs of the genuineness of the paper he has purported to copy. It is to be presumed that he will. No one, so far as I see, has any interest in the paper if it be not genuine, and, if it be genuine, its only interest to me is as an intellectual and literary curiosity.

It is left to your judgment to publish this letter or withhold it, but some time the very little I have to do with this affair should be known to the public. You will preserve Mr. DuPre's letter. Please send me anything you publish on the subject.

Very truly yours,
CHARLES F. DEEMS.

CHURCH OF THE STRANGERS,
1 Winthrop Place,
New York, October 28, 1875.

To REV. DR. KENNEDY, MACON, GA.—Rev. and Dear Brother: Your paper of the twenty-seventh has just reached me, with your editorial marked. Please publish in full and conspicuously my letter to you of the twentieth of October, inclosing the original C. B. DuPre letter, which I suppose is now in your possession. If this thing be a fraud, the person who perpetrated it ought to be detected by those interested. I commend your zeal. Bishop Capers' son says that he knows Mr. DuPre; that he advised him to send to me the copy of what he believed to be his father's letter, and that he, with Prof. Stone, "recognized the style and general expressions of the letter as being that of my (his) father." Of course these gentlemen will now exert themselves to find the person whom Dr. Capers advised to send a copy of the letter to me, and who directed me to send it to the Methodist.

This affair will justify me in hereafter throwing into the waste basket the packages sent me from time to time to forward to publishers in this city.

In view of all this, I request the publication of my letter of the twentieth with this note.

Yours faithfully,
CHARLES F. DEEMS.

An Outspoken Priest.

Father Hennlug delivered a lecture in St. Louis, and, as some of his more wary brethren think, spoke most too freely. He is in accord with Catholics generally, only he throws off the mask and utters without disguise what is in their minds. We give an abstract from Father Henning's lecture, as follows:

Pick out among all those who call themselves Christian that body of men that has been persistently persecuted since the first ages of Christianity, and you will have the true church of Jesus Christ. Look at the church now. Is she not persecuted on every side—in Germany, in Spain, in Italy, in South America, even here, in these free United States? Tell me what are the laws that are made every day in the different legislatures but persecutions of the Catholic Church? What is the meaning of compulsory education? The meaning of it is the persecution of the Catholic Church. What is the meaning of raising up the public schools, in violation of the laws of equity and justice, but persecution of the Catholic Church? What is the meaning of the hue and cry that is raised every day against a candidate, if he happens to be a Roman Catholic, but persecution against the church? What was the Know-Nothing movement but opposition to the Catholic Church? Did not they burn our convents, destroy our churches, tear down our schools? Is not that persecution? The Catholic Church, whether in Europe or America, in Asia or Africa, has always been persecuted. As Christ suffered throughout his career on earth, and was crowned with thorns, so the church, which is the body of Christ, has always suffered, and must suffer to the end. We must believe, too, that persecution is a benefit to the church. It is to the church what fire is to gold. It separates the good wheat from the tares sown by the evil one. How is it that the apostate that leaves the church—the lustful ex-Carmelite—is received by respectable people with joy and a certain air of triumph, and that they will crowd the public hall to listen to the immoral outpourings of an ex-nun who has left her convent and is now leading a life of immorality; that they will go on their knees and lick the spittle from the boots of every professor who apostatizes from the Catholic Church, especially if he has been professor of history and philosophy in a university under the protection of the man of blood and iron? These facts alone are magnificent proof that persecutions are a benefit to the church. Lastly, we must believe that persecution will end. As the life of Christ was a transition from suffering to glory, that of the church is a constantly repeated transition from suffering to glory and from glory to suffering, and will be until the final end, when there will be no suffering.

The persecution that is waging against the church will also end. When, I don't know. God alone knows that. I know that events are marching fast, and if the signs of the times do not deceive me the triumph of the church is not far off. If I am not mistaken, the scepter of Europe is passing fast out of the hands of the German empire into the hands of the Emperor of Russia, who will overrun Europe with barbarous hordes until, like Attila, he will stand before the gates of Rome, and then will be converted, and then the great schism which has separated Russia and the East from the church for so many years, and the East and the West will unite in a Te Deum, the echoes of which will wake from pole to pole. The time is not far off when there will come a time of peace and quiet; when Infidelity and Protestantism—Protestantism as a religion has long ceased to exist; it is running on its last legs, and I am sure it can't run far—will be swept from the face of the earth.

In conclusion the speaker admonished them that it was their first duty as Catholics to pray for the church. A second duty was to work for the church. How many of you, for instance, make it a point—whether ignorantly I don't know—to separate your politics from your religion, your social life from your religious life, as if these things had nothing at all to do with each other. They will say religion is good enough for the church on Sunday; good enough for the confessional; good enough where there's a question of hearing sermons; but when there is a question of social life, of political life, then religion must be put aside. This is their principle, and I am sorry to say a great many act on these principles. This principle is nothing but the principle of infidelity, of atheism—it is political and social atheism. There is no such thing as an absolute independency of the State from the Church. The church, as we are all bound to believe as Catholics, is infallible. She is infallible in faith; she is infallible in something more—she is infallible in everything, in morals as well as in faith, and it follows that the State can never be absolutely separate from the Church; that the declaration of independence of the State from the Church is simply political atheism. God has appointed the church as his interpreter in morals, and, as no State can exist without morality, no State can exist separate from the Church. It follows that a Catholic must be a Catholic in his social, in his political life, as well as in his religious life.

Now take, for example, the question of schools, of education. How many are there of those who leave the education of their children in the hands of school teachers, instead of doing all in their power to build up those of the church? These people don't work for the church; they work into the hands of the enemies of the church; and if the church is persecuted by the enemies of the church, she is also persecuted by these of her children. Again, how many never consider when they go to the polls that that duty has anything to do with religion? They imagine that politics and religion must have nothing to do with each other. The consequence is more and more gaining the upper hand in this country, that Catholics are being ground more and more into the dust, and it will soon go so far that Catholics will be persecuted here with more brutality and bitterness than they are now in Germany—all through the fault of those indifferent Catholics who will not work for the church.

Unification of Colored Methodists.

This might be a good thing, but the Methodist Episcopal Church is not likely to favor it. Take away its colored members, the most of whom they seduced from the Church South, and it would have little left in the South. It would scarcely have a plausible pretext for staying here. Othello's occupation would be gone. Dr. McFerrin, arguing for the unification of colored Methodists, closes his communication to the Nashville Christian Advocate on the subject in these words:

By this plan you enlist all the Methodists, North and South, in their favor. While they are divided you divide the sympathy. The Southern Methodists (whites) are now cut off from all the colored people, except those connected with Bishop Miles and his church. The preachers have no access to them, and hence the people take but little interest in them. Put them all together, and then while the brethren of the North in their missionary contributions and aid societies contribute to the support of their ministers, and in building up their schools, the Southern people in their common schools, and in their influence as teachers and preachers, may render great assistance, and thus all portions of the country aid in elevating the colored race, a thing devoutly wished by all good people, North and South.

I know that "amalgamationists," and those who contend for "social equality," will spurn these suggestions. But allow me to say that such know not the temper of either the whites or the blacks. The theory of such fanatics is simply absurd. The whites in the Northern States will not have it, and the colored people of the South do not desire such a state of things.

Prejudice, fanaticism, false theories, should not be allowed to stand in the way of good. While men are quarreling over the "color line," the enemy will come in and sweep the forces, and we shall find ourselves without any line.

DEPARTED FOR CHINA.—The Pacific Methodist of November 5 says:

On Monday last Rev. A. P. Parker, Mrs. J. W. Lambuth and "Willie" took their leave of American soil. They were passengers on the beautiful steamer City of Tokio. Bro. Parker has promised to give through the Methodist his impression of matters and things in China, and we have hope that Bro. Lambuth and he will see fit to keep their nearest neighbors well posted in the mission work.

THE Western Methodist announces the death of Rev. W. T. Noe, of the White River Conference, and pastor at Forrest City, Ark.

TO KNOW a man, observe how he wins his object, rather than how he loses it; for when we fail our pride supports us; when we succeed it betrays us.

OUR BILLS.

We are sending our bills to subscribers. Many of them have assured us that they would remit us soon as crops were harvested. We have waited till now, hoping that by this time they could pay the small amounts they owe. Each subscriber may think his two dollars and fifty cents too small an amount to affect us; but if every subscriber should reason the same way, and withhold it, the sum total would be over twenty thousand dollars. We need every dollar due us—we need it badly. Will you not send at once through your pastor, if convenient to you, please remit directly to this office and greatly oblige the publisher.

PERSONAL.—We clip the following from an exchange:

We were agreeably surprised, on the twenty-first instant, by receiving a friendly call from Mr. M. H. Bawdon, of the firm of Barbour & Co., New Orleans, produce commission merchants, and dealers in foreign and domestic fruits, nuts, etc. This firm are now consigning to Coleman & Co., of this city a large quantity of oranges, and as they are handpicked, instead of being carelessly gathered and boxed it becomes of pleasure and profit to handle them. Messrs. Barbour & Co., whose advertisement appears in another column, are especially desirous of forming the acquaintance of parties residing in Western produce to firms in New Orleans, and extend a special invitation to the friends of the grange movement in the States of Kentucky, Tennessee, Arkansas, Texas, Alabama and Mississippi to correspond with them, believing that it will result to the mutual advantage of both parties.

THE writing-desk which Charles Dickens used while in New York on his last lecturing tour is kept in the private office of the Westminster Hotel. Over it hangs a large portrait of Dickens. Near by is a large photograph of the Chinese embassy, all of whom stopped at the Westminster during their stay in the city. A Boston paper perpetrated a joke, at the expense of the hotel, on their account. Knowing the reputation of the Westminster for procuring the best of everything to suit all tastes, this newspaper man gave out that Mr. Ferris, the proprietor, had disappeared on the advent of the celestials. After tedious and prolonged search, the article gravely stated, he was found in Central Park gathering birds' nests to please the palates of his Chinese guests.

CHINA PALACE.—The establishment of Messrs. Navra & Offner is one of the attractions of Canal street. No one in passing can fail to notice the fine display of beautiful and choice goods, tastefully arranged in such a manner as to afford purchasers a good opportunity of examining them. Messrs. Navra & Offner have, by their enterprise and perseverance, rapidly extended their business during the last few years, and affor i an illustration of what industrious perseverance can do even in hard times. See advertisement in another column.

SOULE'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE.—But few men in the South have labored more assiduously than Mr. George Soule to build up an institution for the purpose of affording young men an opportunity of obtaining a substantial and polished business education. We have watched with great pleasure the progress of this institution for many years, and we take great pleasure in commending the advertisement in another column to the attention of our readers.

THE LOUISIANA REMEDY, kept at the depot, 106 Camp street, and at the different drug stores, is recommended in a great many certificates, given by well-known citizens, copies of which are at the office or the agent at the above-named place. See advertisement elsewhere.

WE WOULD call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of E. W. Thompson, which will be found on the sixth page of this paper. Mr. Thompson's office is 24 Dey street, New York. Any communications addressed to him at that place will be received.

LEATHER AND SHOE FINDINGS.—A large, varied and complete assortment of leather and shoe findings, etc., may be found at the establishment of Messrs. John Frank & Co., 112 Poydras street. They are also manufacturers of hand, shoe and gaiter nippers.

DR. PRICE'S PREPARATIONS.—Certificates in another column speak for themselves in reference to Dr. Price's baking powders and other preparations. William H. Shepard, Esq., at 106 Camp street, is the efficient agent for them, where those making inquiries will receive polite attention.

SHOES AND BOOTS.—Pierre Samorini, corner of Custom-house and Bourbon streets, is offering his large stock of boots and shoes at rates very much reduced from recent prices. We invite attention to his advertisement in another column.

RESIDENCE FOR SALE AT BROOKHAVEN, Miss.—See notice elsewhere. Brookhaven is one of the most prosperous and desirable towns on the railroad from here to Jackson, and has one of the finest schools in the Southern country.

A GOOD DRUGGIST.—Max Vilter, successor to Oscar Czarnowski, we have known for several years, and think we are safe in saying he is a good and competent pharmaceutist. See his advertisement elsewhere.

READ the advertisement of Brasselman & Adams on this page. These gentlemen sell for cash, and can therefore offer bargains to purchasers. All the latest and best goods in the market.

MILLINERY.—Mme. Samson, at 605 Magazine street, is now receiving an assortment of the latest styles of goods in her line, which she proposes to sell at prices to suit the times.

HARDWARE, AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS, ETC.—Consumers and dealers in search of the largest and best-assorted stock of hardware, agricultural implements, iron, steel, nails, paints, metals, tools, cutlery, guns, etc., to be found in the Southwest, are referred to the advertisement of Messrs. A. Baldwin & Co., No. 74 Canal street, and Nos. 91, 93 and 95 Common street.

The old firm of Slocomb, Baldwin & Co. was well known throughout the South, and to the trade in the North and in Europe, and the spirit and vigorous enterprise of the late lamented C. H. Slocomb gave to the house a popularity and extent of patronage which, by thorough acquaintance with the necessities of the trade, judicious management and a liberal policy to customers, the present firm, who are the successors, have been able to retain.

Mrs. C. A. Slocomb and Mrs. A. D. Slocomb, the mother and widow of the late C. H. Slocomb, retain a leading interest in the firm in commendam.

The present managers of the firm are Messrs. A. Baldwin and C. Eustis, both judicious and capable merchants. Mr. Baldwin is president of one of our banks, and prominently connected with the management of several of our municipal incorporations. Mr. Eustis had been in the service of the firm, in a confidential and responsible position, for many years before he became a partner in the succession.

The means of the firm are ample for the necessities of the trade. They can buy from first hands, and in such quantities as to insure the lowest rates, and pay cash where it is to their advantage to do so.

SHOW CASES.—Until recently it has been difficult to obtain a decent show case without sending to some Northern or Western city. There is no investment in a store, where solved and perishable dry goods and notions are kept, which usually pays for itself sooner than a show case, protecting, as it does, from dust and dumps, as well as from soiled hands and insects. See the advertisement of J. H. Hinrichs, 93 Chartres street.

THE LOUISIANA OIL COMPANY.—One of the most prosperous corporations engaged in legitimate business in our city is the Louisiana Oil Company. In another column will be found the names of the directors and officers elected at the annual meeting, held November 10, 1875.

COAL AT FIFTY-FIVE CENTS PER BARREL.—See the advertisement of Mr. J. Chandler, corner of Philip and Tchoupitoulas streets, who offers the best Pittsburg coal at fifty-five cents per barrel.

Are Yeast Powders Healthful?

From the Picayune, Nov. 1.

"That adulteration in all the more important articles of our daily food widely prevails, all must acknowledge; and that it is an evil that seriously affects the public health none will deny." During the past year several of the leading journals in the West have agitated this subject to such an extent that manufacturers who are not afraid to let the public know what they offer them to eat have had their productions analyzed by several of the most prominent chemists of Chicago and St. Louis, and have published their certificates concerning them. We publish some of the testimonials awarded to Messrs. Steele & Price, the importance of which the public will appreciate:

From C. Gilbert Wheeler, Professor of Chemistry, Chicago University.

LABORATORY UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO,
March 31, 1875.

I have made a chemical examination of Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder, and other well-known baking powders, which were purchased by me in the open market. The result shows Dr. Price's to be richer in carbonic acid gas and freer from foreign substances; therefore the strongest and purest powder, and entirely worthy of its high reputation. C. GILBERT WHEELER,
Professor of Chemistry.

OFFICE OF JAS. V. Z. BLANEY & SON,
Analytical and Consulting Chemists,
Cor. Dearborn and Randolph Sts.,
Chicago, Dec. 4, 1871.

MESSRS. STEELE & PRICE—Gentlemen: Since I made an analysis of your Baking Powder in November, 1873, and became satisfied of its purity, its freedom from adulteration, and the care taken in its preparation, I have had it used in my own house, and with an occasional exception, when another brand had been sent us by mistake, I have continued to use it with the most satisfactory results. It is perfectly efficient (used as directed) and will keep any length of time—the last teaspoonful in a five-pound can, which lasts my family many months, being apparently as efficient as the first.

I can cheerfully recommend it as being a pure, wholesome and unadulterated Baking Powder.

Truly yours, JAS. V. Z. BLANEY.

From Prof. H. W. Scheffer.

ST. LOUIS, April 17, 1875.

MESSRS. STEELE & PRICE: I have analyzed Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder, and several other of the leading baking powders in the market, samples of which I obtained from dealers in this city. The analytical figures obtained prove conclusively that Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is superior as regards whiteness and purity, for it contains more carbonic acid gas—the important agent for which alone baking powder is used—and less inert foreign matter than any of the others. I am therefore compelled, from a scientific point of view, to fully recommend the use of Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder.

Respectfully, H. W. SCHEFFER.

CHICAGO, July 31, 1874.

MESSRS. STEELE & PRICE—Gentlemen: This is to certify that I have examined, analyzed and tested your Dr. Price's special flavoring extracts of vanilla, rose, orange, lemon, anise, ginger, allspice, almond, mace, celery, nutmeg, clove, coriander, peppermint, coffee, cocoa, wintergreen, cinnamon, and find the same strong, fine, made of good material, and well put up in bottles of full measure. Your fruit coloring is free from any deleterious substance. Therefore do I gladly commend the above-named products of yours for family use.

Respectfully, PROF. M. PELAFONTAINE.

We are using Dr. Price's Baking Powder in our homes, and can truthfully say that we prefer it to any other kind. We are also convinced that Dr. Price's articles are all that they profess to be—free from deception, made from the purest materials, and not injurious to health.

MEDICAL.

THIS unrivaled Southern Remedy is warranted not to contain a single particle of Mercury, or any injurious mineral substance, but is containing those Southern Roots and Herbs which an all-wise Providence has placed in countries where Liver Diseases most prevail. It will cure all Diseases Caused by Derangement of the Liver.

PURELY VEGETABLE,

The SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a Bitter or Bad Taste in the Mouth, Pain in the Back, Sides or Joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism, Sour Stomach, Loss of Appetite, Bowels Alternately Costive and Lax, Headache, Loss of Memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done, Debility, Low Spirits, a Thick, Yellow Appearance of the Skin and Eyes, a Dry Cough, often mistaken for Consumption. Sometimes many of these symptoms attend the disease, at others very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and Death will ensue.

This Great Unfailing Specific will not be Found the Least Unpleasant.

For DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, SICK HEADACHE, Pain, Depression of Spirits, SOUR STOMACH, Heartburn, etc.,

FOR FIFTY YEARS

SWAIM'S CELEBRATED PANACEA

HAS attracted the notice of the most eminent and leading members of the medical profession, in this country and Europe, by its great power and excellence in curing what were considered incurable cases of disease, where the patients have been almost destroyed by SCROFULA, etc.; and Prof. VALENTINE MOTT, of the New York University, Profs. GIBSON, DEWEES and CHAPMAN, of Philadelphia, and many other physicians of celebrity and eminence, gave over their own signatures, letters recommending it and certifying to its great merits. It has been extensively advertised during its long period, and thousands of families throughout the United States recommend and use it. The Laboratory is under the direction of Dr. FRANKLIN STEWART, who has devoted his attention and skill in its careful preparation during the past twenty-five years, and not a bottle put up that is not worth two times its cost to the purchaser. It is perfectly safe for the most diseased and debilitated, and will always relieve where it will not cure. In all Cases where the Blood is not Pure it should be Used Freely.

Prepared only at SWAIM'S LABORATORY, 1836 Seventh St., below Chestnut, Philadelphia.

NEW PATENT TIDY FASTENER.—Seldom does it occur in the history of a new invention that the manufacturers do not experience great difficulty in convincing their patrons of its merits, but our new Tidy Fastener seems to have filled a vacancy, as it were, to be the article wanted to make up the comforts of a well-regulated home.

We have spared neither time, labor nor expense in making it a first-class article, feeling assured that in so doing we shall merit a continuance of the confidence so generally reposed in us by a discriminating public.

Pasture.

No one variety of grass, however valuable, can alone fill the requirements of a first-class pasture. A variety that in May blooms in its prime and juicy sweetness, withers and fades in July, becomes brown and woody in August, and ere the frost of September decays. Most grasses are congenial in their natures, and in order to secure a good turf, ever fresh, ever green, through all the warm months, several varieties of seed must be used. An early variety shades the tender, coming plant of a later one from the scorching rays of the sun, which would suck the life-sap from it, and, when its prime is spent in decay, nourishes it. In their turn the later varieties shade the roots of those before them, as the dutiful child, remembering the many kindnesses received in youth, returns them again to the giver. And when the last varieties are nipped by the frost, they too spread their protecting folds above all those before them from the chilling blasts of the coming winter; and in case they should not give sufficient protection to insure a certain return to their order another season, kind nature has provided that above them shall be spread a pure and virgin white mantle of snow. A thin coating of straw, evenly spread through the summer and fall, will greatly assist nature in this respect, and cannot be too highly recommended. It serves the same purpose that the decaying grass does, keeping the earth moist and cool in summer and warm in winter; and, while it protects, it nourishes as well. Should any part of the pasture seem to be falling, seed should be sown there, and with a sharp-toothed harrow scarify it well, and cover after with a thin coating of straw. Timothy, red, white and alsike clover, red top, blue and June grass are all desirable, and well adapted to most pasture lands. The late summer or early fall is the best time to secure the desired results, although the early spring may sometimes do as well. If you wish a good pasture, be sure that no weeds shall escape the scythe and go to seed. Gypsum, or land plaster, wood ashes, salt, lime and other fertilizers should be used when the soil is deficient in them. Your measure of success will depend very much on the knowledge you gain of the wants of your own soil, and supplying them. No rule can be given by which you may know in what point your soil is deficient; you gain that knowledge by actual experiment, as what one soil has in over-abundance another may lack.—Working Farmer.

LIQUID GRAFTING WAX.—The Horticulturist gives the following formula for making Lefort's liquid grafting wax, which is said to have been highly commended in France, and until lately kept secret:

Melt one pound of common resin over a gentle fire. Add to it an ounce of beef tallow and stir it well. Take it from the fire, let it cool down a little, and then mix with a tablespoonful of spirits of turpentine, and after that about seven ounces of very strong alcohol (sixty-five per cent.,) to be had at any druggist's store. The alcohol cools it down so rapidly that it will be necessary to put it again on the fire, stirring it constantly. Still the utmost care must be exercised to keep the alcohol from getting inflamed. To avoid it, the best way is to remove the vessel from the fire when the lump that may have been formed commences melting again. This must be continued till this is a homogeneous mass similar to honey. After a few days' exposure to the atmosphere in a thin coat it assumes a whitish color, and becomes as hard as stone, being impervious to water or air.

CARE OF HORSES.—The London Horse Book says: "All horses must not be fed in the same proportion, without regard to their ages, their constitution and their work, because the impropriety of such a practice is self-evident. Yet this is constantly done, and is the basis of diseases of every kind. Never use bad hay on account of the cheapness, because it brings on inflammation of the bowels and skin diseases. Chaff is better for old horses than hay, because they can chew and digest it better. When a horse is worked hard its food should chiefly be hay, because oats supply more nourishment and flesh-making material than any other kind of food; hay not so much. Rack feeding is wasteful. The better plan is to feed with chopped hay, because the food is not then thrown out, and is more easily chewed and digested. Sprinkle the hay with water that has salt dissolved in it, because it is pleasing to the animal's taste and more easily digested. A tablespoonful of salt in a bucket of water is sufficient."

SUNFLOWERS.—They are rich in honey, and are consequently good neighbors for bees. Oil, hardly to be distinguished from olive oil by any one but an expert, may be extracted from the seeds, in the proportion of one gallon to one bushel. One acre will produce something like fifty bushels of seeds. The seeds, too, make food not unpalatable for human beings, and very good for animals and poultry. The Portugese and the American Indians make a kind of bread from them, and use as a substitute for coffee. The stalks may be used as bean poles while growing. Dry, they make possible roofs for sheds and the like, and burn readily on the hearth. The ashes are very rich in potash. Altogether it is a very useful plant, and, to crown all, it has a reputation, which the scientists have never disproved, for absorbing malaria, and acting as an effectual screen against that scourge of low-lying districts—fever.

HAPPY is he who grows with Christ as his portion, for he is ever renewing his youth. He lives, like Moses, upon the mount, in full view of the promised land.

MEDICAL.

DUCONGE'S

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP.

NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound. Its well-established virtue and its high reputation in all ailments of the Chest, Lungs, Throat and Bowels is so well known, and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage, that it would be superfluous, at this late day, to dwell at any length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Bowels, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial in all Inflammatory disorders, such as Rheumatism, Diarrhœa or Dysentery and Summer Complaint, and especially in those cases of Cholerine which, for want of proper cure, so often degenerate into confirmed Cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, verging on Consumption, it has been found most efficacious in preventing that most awful scourge whenever timely resorted to.

Besides its acknowledged certainty of cure, this truly extraordinary medicine has, over most compounds of the same nature, the decided advantage that, owing to its agreeable flavor, it can be administered without the least difficulty to children, and it requires no particular diet. It is also the cheapest, not only because the bottles contain more syrup than any other, but owing to its peculiar composition this Sirup will keep for years without fermenting, and it can be used in families whenever required by simply keeping the bottle well corked.

Directions for Taking the Sirup.—Grown persons can take from four to six spoonfuls in the course of the day, either pure or diluted in a little water, or a less quantity at intervals of three or four hours.

Persons much troubled during the night may take two tablespoonfuls of the Sirup on going to bed, when it will stop the cough and procure a good night's rest.

Children from three to five years old may take from four to six teaspoonfuls during the day, in suitable quantities, at intervals of three to four hours. For sale by

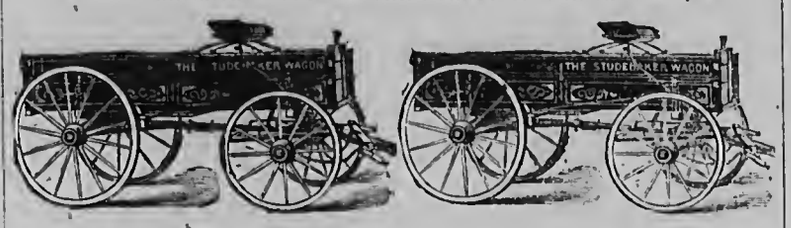
I HAVE RECENTLY ACCEPTED THE AGENCY OF THE CELEBRATED



STUDEBAKER WAGON.

FROM ONE TO SIX HORSE.

THE MOST SUBSTANTIAL WAGONS MADE!

There are several reasons why all should buy the above Wagon: First. They are made of the BEST SELECTED TIMBER, the same being cut at the proper season of the year, piled under sheds, properly dried, and allowed to remain there from three to five years. Second. The wood-work is shaped by the latest improved machinery, put together by the BEST WAGON MECHANICS IN THE WORLD, and are the best ironed and painted Wagons in the market. Third. Their thimble skeins, made of select iron, are set by patent skein setters, and weigh from four to twenty-five pounds per set more than any other, thereby making a perfect running Wagon, which will not break. Fourth. They are the only Wagon in which the SLOPE-SHOULDER SPOKE is used; hence they have the best wheel, which is actually the foundation of the Wagon, and should be carefully examined by persons purchasing. Fifth. They are sold only by responsible parties, and every Wagon is warranted; while the Studebaker Bros. are practical workmen, and attend to their business personally; hence the superiority of their work over all others.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals for the three days ending November 16:

Mississippi river and bayous	bales...	20,857
Railroads		16,066
Lake		162
Mobile		1,554
Texas		8
Florida		5
Total		38,038

On Saturday the market opened under the depressing influence of sales of only 6,000 bales at Liverpool, where quotations were unchanged, and a decline at New York of ⅛c. in spots and 1-32@3-32c. in futures. The sales amounted to 4,350 bales. Strict ordinary sold at 10¼, 10⅜@10⅜c, good ordinary at 11@11⅛c.—the latter for good style—low middling at 11⅜@11⅝c., strict low middling to middling at 12⅛c, and middling at 12⅜@12⅜c. On Monday, with nothing in the dispatches to have much influence, the market opened with a moderate inquiry, mostly from brokers, who came forward making concessions which factors were unwilling to grant. The sales during the morning were consequently restricted to about 1,500 bales, mostly at prices indicating no quotable decline, but later in the day parties came together more freely, and further transactions were reported to the extent of 4,700 bales, making a total of 6,200 bales. Good ordinary sold at 11c, low middling at 11¾c., middling at 12⅛, 12⅜@12⅜c.—the last for good staple—strict middling with good staple at 12⅜c, and good middling at 12⅝c. On Tuesday factors were more stringent in their pretensions during the morning, but, finding that buyers were unwilling to go on at the asking rates, subsequently evinced a disposition to meet the demand more freely. The day's business was 11,300 bales, which is the largest reported this season.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 21,850 bales, against 21,050 for the corresponding time last week and 16,200 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 272,348 bales, against 223,775 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 125,117 bales. The increase by the reports per telegraph is 187,689—1,169,547 against 1,031,858. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 41,470 bales to France, of 73,502 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 30,771 to Great Britain. NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. VOL. 21. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1875. NO. 48.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

LOUISVILLE, Nov. 16.—The Episcopal Board of Missions is discussing plans to bring the negro race within the pale of the church. The board seem to think the Catholic Church in a fair way to do this.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 17.—The monument to Edgar Allen Poe was unvalled at Westminster church to-day. The preliminary ceremonies took place in the Western Female High School, where the initial movement took place, in October, 1865, to devise some means to perpetuate the memory of the poet. The day was propitious and the vast hall crowded. Several addresses were delivered, poems recited and letters read, when the assemblage repaired to the church-yard, where Prof. Elliott unvailed the statue, placing on the head a chaplet of evergreens. A dirge was sung, and Mr. Gill, of Boston, recited "Annabel Lee."

AUGUSTA, Nov. 18.—A frightful accident occurred last night on the Charlotte, Columbia and Augusta railroad, near Pine House, about twenty-five miles from Augusta. After the regular passenger train left Columbia yesterday for Augusta it was followed by a train of empty cars for Augusta. The two trains rolled along at the rate of about twenty miles per hour, the one following closely on the other. The passenger train was about to stop, when the second train came rushing along, and the engine telescoped with the ladies' passenger car, throwing it and the smoking car from the track. A terrible scene followed. The ladies' car was filled with passengers. Men, women and children were jammed together, wounded, crushed and bleeding. After a few moments' confusion windows and doors were broken open and passengers emerged from the wreck. It was then discovered that while many were bruised seriously, but one life was lost—that of Charles Nightingale, a bright and lovely child about six years old, son of William Nightingale, of Brunswick, Ga. The child had but a slight wound on the head, and seemed to have been steamed to death.

MONTGOMERY, Nov. 18.—The majority for the ratification of the new constitution will not be less than 50,000, and may reach 60,000. Only four counties in the State gave majorities against it; the remaining sixty-one were overwhelmingly in favor.

NEW YORK, Nov. 19.—Moody and Sankey are holding their final meetings in Brooklyn to-night. The rink is crowded to suffocation. An overflowing meeting is going on in the Simpson church, in charge of Mr. Needham, the evangelist. Vast numbers are in the street unable to get into either building. This morning at eight o'clock, when Mr. Moody led in the prayer meeting, three thousand five hundred persons were at prayer. This has been the average attendance during the last three weeks. After this service the pastors of Brooklyn met and voted to continue the daily union meeting in the Second Presbyterian church.

A large woman's meeting was then held under the direction of Mrs. Newham. Mr. Moody began an inquiry meeting in Simpson church at ten o'clock this forenoon, and continued it until four o'clock. He then went to the Tabernacle to give his usual Bible readings. The multitude gathered was so great that the gates of the building had to be locked half an hour before Mr. Moody came. An overflowing meeting was held in the adjoining church by Mr. Needham. Thousands left who were unable to get into either building. Mr. Moody spoke forcibly on faith, and closed with a most touching prayer, which melted the crowded and almost breathless assembly to tears. William E. Dodge and many from abroad were present.

The chief power of the Brooklyn revival has been felt among the young men. Hundreds have been hopefully converted. The young men's meetings are to be continued every evening under the leadership of Mr. Hall, of Washington, D. C.

In return for the blessings of God upon this feature of the work, Mr. Moody proposed yesterday a thank offering, to be contributed to sustain the Brooklyn Young Men's Christian Association. About $1,000 have been paid in or pledged already. The funds necessary to pay for all the public services, printing, etc., have been raised.

The committee of arrangements—Messrs. McWilliams, Marvin, Wletas, Pratt, French, Trask and A. S. Barnes—have issued over one hundred and twenty-five thousand tickets of admission to the rink and to the young men's meeting at the Tabernacle within the last ten days.

It is estimated that over three hundred thousand persons have attended upon the meetings of Moody and Sankey during the visit to Brooklyn. The number of converts it is of course very difficult to determine; it is very large, and it will now be left to the pastors of the different churches to look after these converts, and also to carry forward the revival work so auspiciously commenced.

The Tabernacle church, Dr. Talmago, Dr. Scudder's church, Dr. Cuyler's, Mr. Steele's, Mr. Lyian's, and several other churches, report a deep religious interest. Some very remarkable conversions have taken place. There has been a perfect unity of action among the pastors of different denominations.

Mr. Moody will not close his inquiry meeting until near midnight. To-morrow morning he and Mr. Sankey leave for Philadelphia, where they commence their labors on Sunday morning. They have won their way into the hearts of all classes in Brooklyn. Mr. Needham will preach in the rink on Sunday afternoon and it will then be closed.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 19.—Orders have been received at the navy-yard to hurry the completion and equipment of the new sloops of war lying in the Delaware, and put a number of monitors in readiness for service.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 21.—Fourteen Chinese, crew of the German schooner Anna, mutinied and murdered the captain and mate.

The Japan Gazette is informed, through a source which it usually finds reliable, that war with Corea is inevitable.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 21.—The Moody and Sankey revival meetings commenced to-day in the old Pennsylvania railroad freight depot. Between ten and eleven thousand persons were present.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 22.—The Vice President died very suddenly at half-past seven this morning. He rested well last night, awoke at seven this morning, and expressed himself as feeling bright and better; sat up in bed to take his medicine, lay down on his left side, and expired in a few moments without a struggle.

Senator Ferry, of Michigan, is president of the Senate pro tem.

The embalmed remains of Mr. Wilson have been laid in state in the Vice President's room on a catafalque which occupies the place where the writing table stood at which he did all his work. The body, attired in a dress suit of black broadcloth, faces Rembrandt Peale's portrait of Washington, and beside it are a wreath of tea roses, japonicas, calla lilies, white pinks and heliotropes, from the wife of the President, and a cross of white flowers from Gen. Babcock. The room is guarded by a detail of the capitol police.

FOREIGN.

PARIS, Nov. 17.—The evening papers of this city publish the text of the letter written by Don Carlos to King Alfonso. The attitude of President Grant, the letter says, is a prelude to war between Spain and the United States if you do not recognize the independence of Cuba. The revolution which you represent is responsible for this parricidal rebellion. Had I reigned it would not have occurred; at least not gained strength. Now, however, the integrity of the country is at stake, and all her children are bound to defend it. Should war break out I offer you a truce as long as the contest lasts, but maintain my rights to the crown, as I retain the conviction that I shall one day wear it. I cannot send my loyal volunteers to Cuba, but I will defend these provinces, and the Cantabrian coast will send out privateers, manned by the indomitable population of that coast, which will pursue the merchant ships of our enemies and perhaps chase them into their own harbors. If you accept the truce let us appoint representatives to settle the conditions—if you refuse, the world will be the witness that Catholic Spain has nobly done her duty.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 17.—A serious battle took place, November 12, at Piva, in Bosnia, between the Turkish troops and a large body of insurgents. The Porte is officially informed that six battalions under Chiefket Pasha were engaged. It is reported the insurgents were completely routed, leaving six hundred killed on the field.

MADRID, Nov. 18.—Gen. Quesada has been commanded by a royal order to henceforth receive no communication from Don Carlos, except the announcement of the unconditional submission of himself and his partisans.

LONDON, Nov. 19.—The Telegraph says £10,000 has been placed by a gentleman at the disposal of the Church Missionary Society in answer to an appeal through Stanley for Christianization in Africa.

MADRID, Nov. 20.—The Cronista says the last American note was discussed in the cabinet yesterday. Meanwhile the satisfactory situation promises a favorable and early settlement of the pending questions relative to the United States.

From the Work.

HOMER DISTRICT.—Mr. Editor: Another year is nearly gone. Again are we beginning to talk of "how shall we get to Conference?" That is a vexed question in this portion of the Conference. Preachers are poor, finances are short, and it is a long and expensive route to New Orleans—first on horseback or by stage, then by steamboat or railroad, and it all costs money. Ah! that is the great desideratum. Some of our preachers say they cannot go unless Providence opens up some way not yet seen for the expenses to be paid. Now we think there ought to be an Annual Conference in this hill country. Then, perhaps, our people would get to see and hear a Bishop. It would greatly relieve our preachers from that heavy annual tax of going to the other extreme of the Conference.

In looking over the past we can truly say that we have had peace and prosperity. We have had eleven camp meetings on the district. Bro. Parvin, on the Farmerville circuit, carries off the palm in number. He has had four. That is characteristic of him, however. We attended eight of these camp meetings. God honored them all with his presence and power, and many souls were converted. There were protracted meetings on some of the circuits that were eminently successful. Upon the whole, we have had a good year religiously.

We have had in this country an unprecedented drouth. Many will not make corn enough to last them till spring. Cotton crops are turning out better than was expected; yet there is but little money coming back to the planter. They have had advances in supplies, and when the bills are settled there is not much left. The present system of labor, with the extravagance of our Southern people, and the unmerciful taxation of the government, has worked ruin to the whole country. Our hope is alone in God.

JOHN A. MILLER, P. E.

HOMER, LA., November 9, 1875.

ELMORE CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: As I have just closed my last protracted meeting I will give you an outline of what the Lord has done for us in Elmore circuit. The tenth and eleventh of July was the time of our third Quarterly Conference, from which time we protracted, the Lord working with us, and confirming the word with signs following. Scores have been convicted and converted unto God, and the church has been greatly blessed. Up to this time I have received one hundred and seven persons into the church, and baptized fifty-four of that number.

The spiritual condition of the church is quite healthy, and it is to be hoped that it will continue so. I believe the people are taking higher grounds in Christianity than they have been occupying heretofore.

Yours etc.,

B. C. GLENN, P. C.

WETUMPKA, ALA., November 11, 1875.

PINE BLUFF, ARK.—Mr. Editor: We are just closing our ecclesiastical year. The year foots up favorably in this part of the Little Rock Conference. We have had a very sickly year all over the State, yet the preachers have been wonderfully preserved, and have done their work well. We are much pleased with the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE as a companion for our Western Methodist.

WM. H. BROWNING.

Report for Quarter Ending Aug. 31, 1875, of the China Mission.

Rev. D. C. Kelley, D. D., Associate Secretary Board of Missions:

I am truly thankful to be able once more to write you. For two weeks I have been confined to my bed, and, though not now entirely well, I am greatly improved, and hope soon to be able again to engage heartily in my work. This will account for my delay in writing you, and sending the report of the first quarter, ending August 31. You propose to have the financial year begin the first of June each year. I have no objection to this, and will do so from this time. I give you, in as brief a manner as possible, an account of funds received each quarter, from the first of June, 1873, to the end of August, 1875, and the expenditures of each quarter.

Native Agents.—From the first of November next we shall have engaged in the regular work six native agents, Bro. Marshall being included in that number. Bro. Tsung, who has been laboring with the Presbyterian brethren for several years, will join us in November, making the sixth. Bro. Tsee, who has been laboring at Chang-chow, has been suspended for refusal to do the work assigned him, and for telling a falsehood with intent to deceive. Had he remained faithful we should have had seven young men engaged in preaching.

The last young man, Bro. Lee, now preparing for the ministry, is a graduate from the Presbyterian school at Hang-chow. His father is a minister in the church. Bro. Lee is a fine young man, a noble Christian, humble, devout, and anxious to engage in the ministry. He has been transferred to our church, and promises to make an excellent minister of the gospel. I have had many pleasant hours of conversation with him. During my sickness he manifested great concern for my safety. I was compelled to detain Bro. Dsan (C. K. M.) for a few days to be with me night and day, and thus found it necessary to send Bro. Lee to take his place in Soochow. Before leaving me he came to my room, and asked if he might pray with me. He kneeled beside my bed, and offered up a sincere prayer to God for my recovery. The native Christians all manifested the greatest concern for my safety. Many sincere prayers were offered up by these noble Christian men and women; some shed tears to see me confined to my bed. The school children also joined in with their prayers, especially those whom I had a few days before baptized. They all came in several times to see me. I was overwhelmed with wonder to see the joy of all the native Christians when they saw I was able to be up and walk about. And now my whole soul goes out in thanksgiving to God for his kind, preserving care in permitting me yet to remain and labor with these native Christian men and women for the conversion of the thousands around us.

We have at present five schools in operation—two boarding schools and three day schools. The boys' boarding school at Soochow has fifteen scholars; the girls' boarding school in Shanghai has twelve scholars; the day school in Naziang has fifteen scholars; the day school in Karding has ten scholars. The schools in Naziang and Karding cost about $6 each per month, including rent of house, payment of teacher and purchase of books. I have just returned from the Naziang station. While there I was greatly pleased with the conduct of the teacher and scholars. Bro. Fong, the young preacher in charge, is pursuing an excellent plan with the school. Morning and evening the school is opened and closed with prayer, after a few words of Scripture are read and explained. The scholars manifest great interest in the services. The teacher is so fully convinced of the truth of Christianity that he has handed in his name as a candidate for baptism. He is studying the New Testament, and trying to teach his own family. One man, living at a distance of twenty miles, I hope to baptize on next Sabbath. He has been a probationer for many months. There were no baptisms the last quarter, ending August 31, but I shall be able to report several additions to the church at the close of this quarter. Three of the girls from Mrs. Lambuth's school were baptized three weeks since. I was greatly encouraged while visiting Naziang, a few days since, to see an increasing interest on the part of many in listening to the word of God. There are several persons, who have been regular attendants at church, almost persuaded to be Christians. Bro. Fong is doing a good work among the people. He is sincere and earnest, and often walks many miles to the neighboring villages and hamlets to tell the people of the glad news of salvation through Jesus. Bro. Tsung, from Karding, preached for us on Sabbath night in our church at Naziang. He preached from the parable of the ten virgins. It was plain, forcible, and spoken in such a manner as to gain the attention of the whole audience. He promises to be an excellent preacher of the gospel. O that the blessed Spirit of the living God might now be abundantly poured out upon these young men, that they may be kept humble, pure and zealous for the cause of their heavenly Master, is my earnest prayer.

Our churches at present number five—two in Shanghai, one in Naziang, one in Karding and one in Soochow. The one in Karding is a rented building. Our new church in Naziang was completed about the last of May, an account of the dedication of which I sent to the secretary of the Board of Missions, but I have never seen any notice of it in the Advocate. I have been surprised at this, and fear the notice I sent has never reached you. The money for the building of this church was the gift of two brothers in the Mississippi Conference, one of whom is a member of the Mississippi Conference—Bro. Hunnicutt, of Natchez, Miss. I am sorry no mention has been made of it in the papers, as far as I have been able to see. I hope it will be mentioned, that our people at home may be encouraged to give of what God has given them to further the interests of his kingdom among these benighted heathen.

We have at present two Bible women. The third Bible woman, not finding it convenient to engage daily in the work, acts in concert with the other Bible women three days in each week. The work among the women in Shanghai is very encouraging. Quite a number, three times each week, attend the reading of the Scriptures in the woman's reading-room. One woman was baptized three weeks since. She had been attending these meetings for months, and was persuaded to trust in the Lord Jesus for salvation.

I have also to report the completion of our book-room in Shanghai during the past quarter, without any cost to the board. It is now filled with books—scientific and religious—and I think it will be the means through which much good will be done.

I will now bring this to a close. Pray for us, and for the work of the Lord among the heathen. Hoping to hear from you soon, I remain yours in the bonds of Christian love,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

SHANGHAI, September 29, 1875.

We have published everything about dedications which we have received. We thank God for these signs of advance, and ask the prayers of the church for the health of our missionary. It was hard to be sick with wife and children all in America. We rejoice in his returning health.

Supernatural Knowledge.

We are under special obligations to Bishop Doggett for a copy of his address on "Supernatural Knowledge—Its Philosophical Claims," delivered before the literary societies of Emory and Henry College, Virginia, in June last. The address is in the Bishop's best style of finished and elegant diction, and marked by clear and profound thought, and thorough analysis. The address concludes by noting several of the lessons which the discussion of the subject inculcates. These lessons are thus stated:

The foremost of them is the rationality of Christian faith; its perfect conformity, in every respect, to the laws of the human understanding, and to every real indication of the progress of society. There is no suppression of original convictions, there is no surrender of a manly independence, there is no compromise of constitutional dignity, in becoming a Christian believer. On the contrary, an intelligent faith is the perfection of reason, and the coronation of manhood—the sweet response to its agonizing appeals, and the joyous solution of life's consuming problem. To the haughty taunt of every skeptic one may fearlessly exclaim:

Wrong not the Christian; think not reason yours:
'Tis reason our great Master holds so dear;
'Tis reason's injured rights his wrath resents:
To save lost reason's life he poured his own:
Believe, and show the reason of a man:
Believe, and taste the pleasures of a God.

Another lesson inculcated by this discussion is the sacred unity of every branch of legitimate knowledge. All truth, of every kind, possesses an innate coherence with itself, whatever diversities may characterize its manifestations. The tendency of its inherent affinities is to form one harmonious system, in accordance with the law of relative proportions. There can therefore be no permanent discord in its utterances. The relation of supernatural knowledge to every other species of knowledge, on the hypothesis which we have adopted, is primary and fundamental. It stands at the front of the illustrious line; or, better still, in the center of the brilliant circle, and constitutes the dazzling focus of its illumination. This is exactly the position which supernatural truth sustains to truth in general. It imparts tone and continuity, strength and beauty to all the rest. Amidst the incipient and incidental collisions which occur in the various fields of exploration, this universal unity is giving signs of an ultimate outburst and efflorescence. Truth is the heir of immortality, and no degree of violence can extinguish its existence. In this respect it may be said:

Truth crushed to earth will rise again,
The eternal years of God are hers;
But error, wounded, writhes in pain,
And dies amidst her worshipers.

An imperative lesson, in this connection, is the text-book of supernatural knowledge. I have hitherto forborne to state what must be no longer omitted: that the Bible is the exclusive source of supernatural knowledge—the sole fountain and repository of its communications. The spontaneous and irrepressible demand of human nature for communion with the invisible world has laboriously evinced itself by abnormal and spurious methods of intercourse with it. The mythologies of all nations, the oracles of the Greeks, the auguries of the Romans, and the ghostly exhibitions of modern spiritualism, are only so many baleful abortions in attempting to produce the genuine response. The Bible alone is the living oracle, and its unambiguous answer solves the mysteries of life. Its divine authenticity and its consistent testimony assign to it a solitary and unapproachable prerogative in the sphere of credible revelation. The Vedas, the Shaster, the Sybil, the Koran, the Seance, are the phosphorescence of moral decay, glimmering through the night of human ignorance and sorrow. The Bible is the burnished lamp of the eternal sanctuary, filled with its oil and kindled at its altar, let down by an adamantine chain, into the midst of earth's darkened temple, lighting up, with a steady radiance, dome and arches, colonades and aisles, recesses and cloisters; and reflecting its cheering rays upon the careworn faces of its bewildered occupants.

The Bible, the Bible, is, by eminence, the book, in a sense in which no other book is a book at all. It was issued in heaven, and bears the imprimatur of the Holy Ghost. "It has God for its author, salvation for its object, truth without any mixture of error for its subject," angels for its commissioners, prophets for its heralds, and apostles for its embassadors. Its resources are a perpetual miracle. It is the book of humanity, the classic of the scholar, the problem of the philosopher, the pandect of the civilian, the inspiration of the poet, the model of the artist, the magazine of the orator, the arsenal of the soldier, the vade mecum of the traveler, the song of the captive, the wealth of the poor, the counselor of kings, the boon of the peasant, and the passport of the dying.

The Bible is the basis of civilization, the support of government, and the bond of society. Itself a library, it has created libraries, it has reduced to written forms the jargon of barbarous sounds. It speaks to-day three hundred languages and dialects; and will speak, in every tongue of this babbling earth, "the wonderful works of God." Its mysterious character and matchless excellence provoke attacks from its enemies, without receiving damage from them. It may be likened, says Henry Rogers, to some great ship floating down a mighty river, like the Amazon or the Orinoko, the shores of which are inhabited by savage tribes. From every creek or inlet sally flotillas of canoes filled with warriors, in all the terrors of war paint, and with their artillery of bows and arrows. Meantime the noble vessel silently moves on, without designing to alter its course or fire a shot. Perhaps, here and there, a seaman casts a compassionate glance from her lofty bulwarks at the hardihood of those who come to assail his grand leviathan.

The last lesson suggested by this discussion is the illustrious career of the Christian student. It differs essentially from that of the mere student of nature. It is replete with moral grandeur, and imposing responsibility. He stands on a higher plane, and is intrusted with a sublimer mission. He hears God in his word, and sees him in his works. Voices fall upon his ears, and visions pass before his eyes, which transform the earth into a school of instructive wonders, and life into a disciplinary pilgrimage for a grander life to come; where the tree of life will be also the tree of knowledge, whose ambrosial fruit will yield an endless festival of delight; and where the intellectual and moral stature of our manhood will ascend the glowing meridian of its predicted greatness, and expatiate in spheres of cloudless light, through cycles of interminable progression; says a poet:

The soul of man was made to walk the skies,
Delightful outlet of her prison here;
There, disencumbered of the ties of joys terrestrial
She can rove at large; there freely can respire,
Dilate, expand; in full proportion let loose
All her powers.

NOTICE TO THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—The presiding elders of the Mississippi Conference will please send me the names of lay delegates, applicants for admission and candidates for orders from their respective districts who expect to attend our next Conference.

All members who expect to bring their wives will confer a favor by giving me immediate notice.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1875.

LIGHTS ALONG THE SHORE.

There are lights by the shore of that country,
Where my bark amid perils I steer,
And they ever grow brighter and brighter
As that glorious haven I near.

CHORUS.

Oh! the lights along the shore, that never grow dim,
Never, never grow dim,
Are the souls that are aflame with the love of Jesus' name,
And they guide us, yes, they guide us unto him.

There are lights by the shore as we journey,
As we float down the river of Time;
All the days of our pilgrimage brighten
With a radiance truly sublime.

Oh! they tell of a hope that will cheer us
In the midst of our sorrow and cares;
When the lamp on our vessel burns dimly
We watch for the glimmer of theirs.

Then forget not to keep your light shining—
O Christian! be earnest and true,
For a soul on Life's ocean may perish,
May sink in the waves not for you.

Fraternity Unfraternal.

MR. EDITOR: How apt our zeal is to carry us too far!

Hear a brother: "I defy any sober-minded man, not sold to prejudice and belligerency of spirit, to believe that the writing and promulgation of such articles as those of the three stars in the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE can by possibility do good." Not very fraternal, that! Charity would lead us to suppose that the writer signing himself three stars, and the editor who "promulgated," and the thousands of readers who approve the sentiments of three stars, are actuated by honest intentions to do good, and that they as sincerely believe that they are doing good, as does the author of the sentiment above quoted believe himself to be so doing. Yet they are defied to believe in the purity of their own motives, or else declared to be "sold to prejudice and belligerency of spirit." Such judgments do not seem fraternal.

But, supposing that three stars and the editor will answer for themselves, we ask leave to offer a few thoughts which have been suggested to our mind during the recent discussion of the great question of fraternity between the Northern and Southern Methodist Churches. Having a committee appointed by order of our last General Conference to adjust all matters of dispute between ourselves and our Northern brethren, it would seem proper that we should await their action in the matter. Nevertheless, some refrain not from urging the necessity of speedy and unceremonious fraternity, not disguising their dissatisfaction with the proceedings of our late General Conference on the subject. Much as the question has been discussed, we have not yet seen fraternity defined. Doubtless much writing, and perhaps some unpleasant feeling, might have been saved had the precise point in dispute been clearly stated by each writer in the outset. Those who have imagined themselves opponents on each side would no doubt have readily assented to what has been said on the other had they seen clearly how each writer intended his arguments to bear practically upon the question in hand. To be fairly debated the question must be first distinctly stated. As it is not our purpose now to discuss the question of fraternity, we are saved the necessity of undertaking its definition. We propose simply to examine the grounds of some of the arguments which have been presented, apparently with a view of hastening fraternity.

1. It seems to be assumed or tacitly admitted (perhaps unconsciously) by several writers that the South was wrong in the causes for which she sought or consented to be separated from the Methodist Episcopal Church. Because the Southern delegates in 1844 admitted that slavery was "a great moral evil," and were under circumstances of inevitable constraint in the matter of separation, and because some passions, prejudices and dislikes may have arisen during the consummation of the great disruption, therefore our separate and independent existence now is wrong. Suppose we were wrong in all that pertained to the original separation, what has that to do with the question of union or fraternity now? Even admitting, for the sake of the argument, that we began our existence in a very unchristian quarrel, in which we were chiefly in the wrong, does it thence follow that we are now morally bound to reunite with those from whom we separated, or to enter into any special relations with them other than such as we sustain toward all denominations of Christians in the world? Abraham and Lot separated because of a dispute between their herdsmen. Supposing either or both to have been blameworthy in producing the separation, does it thence follow that it was forever afterward wrong for the posterities of Abraham and Lot to dwell apart? Paul and Barnabas had a "sharp contention" and "departed asunder;" are we to conclude that all their after lives were sinful until they came together and journeyed in company? If there are those who regret having come out of the Methodist Episcopal Church, we allow them their feelings, but ask that they shall not, because of those feelings, involve hundreds of thousands who were never connected with that church in implications of guilt because they cannot entertain the same feelings as themselves. Do not find fault with another because he cannot love your mother as much as you do. The causes of the origin of the Methodist Episcopal Church South must not be confounded with the reasons for her present existence, nor should they be allowed in any way to control her conduct toward the Methodist Episcopal Church. Should a wicked son disobediently abandon his father's house at fifteen years of age, duty would scarcely require that he at forty-five should return with perhaps a large family to his father's house. The latter course would by no means repair the former wrong, and might make the family very inconveniently large. We are aware that the views we have been discussing look rather to union than to fraternity with the Methodist Episcopal Church; but it must be remembered that several writers have proclaimed their desire for union, and union may be fairly presumed to be the ultimate aim of many, if not most, of those who seem anxious to hasten fraternity.

2. It has been in substance alleged that the Southern Methodist Church maintains its existence by and in opposition and strife against the Northern Church; that if we began in a dispute which was inevitable on our part, we ought not to continue in strife. We have been warned that we cannot maintain our existence on an "extinct issue." Is it possible that any Southern Methodist feels that his church is based on a contention with another church, and that, too, on an extinct issue? We confess that we should not feel comfortable in a church that undertook to maintain its existence on any other issue than that which has for ages been kept up between truth and error, between the children of light and the powers of darkness. If we stand only by opposition to the Northern Church, then she has but to cease opposition to us, and we, like a leaning wall, will fall of ourselves. Whatever of strength or support the Southern Church derives from opposition to the Northern, we hope she may lose as speedily as possible. That she should maintain a position of solemn and earnest disapproval of the wrongs which may have been done her by the Northern Church is a part of that testimony which it is her duty to bear to truth and to justice. That in so doing she should promote anything like spite or hatred toward the members of that church is, we trust, neither desired nor experienced by any Southern Methodist. That questions about the rights of property and about other things have arisen between the members of the two churches is nothing more than is liable to occur between any other individuals or societies in the world. These can no doubt be amicably and satisfactorily adjusted. It is to be hoped that Southern Methodists will not accuse their brethren of disliking or maltreating Northern Methodists because they ask justice of them. We are first erroneously accused of unchristian feelings toward the North, and then severely reproved for the imagined offense. Nothing is more apt to make one do wrong than to be accused of it. We fear that some are so fraternal abroad that they forget to be fraternal at home.

3. But the fundamental idea which seems to underlie almost all the arguments for fraternity is this: that the distinct existence of the Methodist Episcopal Church South is a violation of that unity which Christ designed should characterize his church. The two Methodist Churches, it is argued, ought to be one, for the sake of unity and harmony in the kingdom of Christ. The changes have been rung on the beauty of union and the sin of division, and we are blamed for keeping the family of Methodism divided. They may not say as much, but their arguments imply that the mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church South ended with slavery, and that to undertake to maintain it longer is perverse and wicked. We cannot so view the case. The connection of our church with slavery was purely incidental, and the discontinuance of slavery should no more affect the integrity or permanence of the Methodist Episcopal Church South than should the termination of the presidency of Gen. Grant overthrow the Methodist Episcopal Church. It seems impossible for some to get rid of the idea that we derived our existence from the Northern Church, and therefore she ought to control us, or that we should at least return to her communion. The cry of mother church took thousands of colored members from us just after the late war. There are those not colored who find it difficult to free themselves from the spell of the same charm. If the right of every church to separate, independent existence depends upon the legitimacy of the manner or reasons of its departure from the pale of some previously existing church, then doubtless every church in Christendom might be shown to be illegitimate, and the claims of the Romish Church to be the only authorized ecclesiastical communion would be wholly indisputable by any modern church. Let us look at this argument in its simplicity. If it is wrong that there should be two Methodist Churches, then it is wrong that there should be two of any other kind, and we are driven to admit the Romish dogma that Christ's visible kingdom is and should be organically one, and that all sects and denominations claiming to be outside of its dominion justly incur the displeasure of God and the anathemas of the Pope. Brethren do not say so, and of course we do not think they mean to teach it, yet the legitimate inference from many arguments which we have lately seen favoring union and fraternity would be that all plurality of churches is essentially wrong, and that all who attempt to establish other than the one church are what the Pope calls them—"damnable heretics." Has the Methodist Episcopal Church South a right to a distinct existence? If so, let us hear no more in this connection of the blessings of union and the evils of division. If we see fit to enter into fraternal relations or union with the Methodist Episcopal Church or any other, let us do so; but it is no sin if we do not. Our independent existence is not a violation of the peace or harmony of Christendom.

But, says one, Christianity requires us to be fraternal, and the Scriptures are quoted to prove it. Very true, but perhaps not applicable to the case. We read: "If thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone; if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established. And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church; but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as a heathen man and a publican." As we understand the case, the Southern Church has been endeavoring for the last thirty years to induce the Northern Church to hear her complaint, and, though repulsed and disappointed, she is still making efforts, and hopes yet to gain her sister. May God speed the day of profound peace and good will between the two Methodisms.

Old-Fashioned Itinerancy.

MR. EDITOR: There is no one more opposed to newspaper notices of living men generally than the writer; but there are cases where it is not only admissible but proper to give them. It is pertinent in the case of the retiring presiding elder of the Seashore district of the Mississippi Annual Conference—Rev. Charles F. Gillespie. He had formerly belonged to the Methodist Protestant Church, and was president of the Mississippi Annual Conference of said church when it united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South. At the following Conference he was appointed to the Seashore district, and has for four successive years served the district faithfully, promptly. The district is one of the hardest works in the knowledge of the writer. It embraces Jackson, Greene, Jasper, Covington, Simpson, Jones, Rankin, Perry, Harrison and perhaps more counties. There is not a railroad nor any other means of public conveyance in the district except the Mobile, New Orleans and Texas railroad along the coast, where it is little or no service in traveling the work. So the work had to be or has been done on horseback. I have heard some brethren express themselves as skeptical in reference to the "creek-swimming" experience of the fathers, but this man and minister here in the State of Mississippi, in the light and with the improvements of our civilization, has actually encountered floating bridges and swimming waters, and has come forth from these encounters all wet and cold, thankful, however, that he and his faithful horse escaped with their lives. He is not a young man in the prime of manhood's day, but has attained unto his threescore and ten years. But, notwithstanding the labor and disadvantages, he has served the district with a promptness that is incredible—he has never disappointed a congregation—and he has not served for self. His salary, we may safely say, has not exceeded $500 per annum, and perhaps it has fallen short of that amount. But in accordance with the economy of the church his work on this district is done for the present, and it is well done, and he carries with him the prayers and sympathies of the best people in charge. Who can or will succeed him? Wherever he may be sent, let the people know that he is an able preacher, a perfect gentleman, a true Christian, and a hero of the Asbury and McKendree stamp.

SOJOURNER.

OBITUARIES.

MIEL EZELL was born in Virginia, March 24, 1802. When about two years of age his parents removed to North Carolina. In the year 1818 he emigrated to Clarke county, Ala., and settled near Suggsville. At his late residence, five miles south of Suggsville, he lived for forty-three years, where, on the tenth of October, 1875, he breathed his last, and quietly fell asleep in Jesus, to await the resurrection of the just at the last day.

Bro. Ezell, upon his removal to Alabama, at once identified himself with the fortunes of his adopted State, and by industry and business integrity rose to a commanding position in the community and county. In the year 1824 he was happily married to Maria Gordon. Her devoted piety and Christian virtues left their impress upon the character of husband and children. Up to the time of his marriage, and for three or four years thereafter, he had lived a wild, irreligious life. At about that time, under the influence of such surroundings and the blessing of God, he was converted. Like Saul of old, he was not disobedient unto the heavenly calling. Conferring not with flesh and blood, he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, and for a period of forty-seven years walked with God.

Our acquaintance with Bro. Ezell began three years ago. Appointed by the Conference to serve the charge of which he was a member, he was among the first to visit and welcome the new pastor and his family. Time served only to strengthen our appreciation and attachment. He loved and labored for the church, taking apparently as much interest in its success and prosperity as in that of his own family. With many in the Alabama Conference his name will be held in grateful remembrance. His last active service was for the church—attending upon the session of the District Conference at Choctaw Corner, in July last. With feeble and attenuated form, bending under the combined weight of years and disease, we find him obedient to the calls of duty, and standing at his post to the last hour of effectiveness. Upon his return home he took his bed. It was our privilege to see him frequently during his last illness. At the outset he found difficulty in being resigned to the will of God, and requested us to pray that he might be perfectly submissive. Grace finally triumphed, and he was enabled to say in respect to himself and children: "Not my will, but the will of the Lord be done." His testimony during his entire sickness was "that Jesus was with him." Sometimes he sang, and repeated hymns and passages of Scripture suited to his feelings and experience, such as:

"Jesus can make a dying bed
Feel soft as downy pillows are,
While on his breast I lean my head
And breathe my life out sweetly there."

When asked what message he had for his brethren left behind, he promptly replied: "Tell them to follow me, even as I have followed Christ." At another time he appropriated the triumphant language of Paul: "I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me in that day." Oh, death! where is thy sting? Oh, grave! where is thy victory? Thus strong in faith, giving glory to God, this prince in our Israel passed away, enriching the church and world with another instance of the faithfulness of God in the fulfillment of his word, that "precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

Four children are left to mourn the loss of this Christian father. But a few years ago the mother was called away, leaving the grief-stricken husband and father to be solaced and comforted by the kind and Christian ministrations of an affectionate daughter. I have never known such an instance of filial affection and devotion. May the Spirit of light and truth direct her, as in her gloom and sadness she meekly and submissively prays: "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

May each of the surviving members of this family, for whom their father in his last hours felt such a deep interest, experience in this sad hour that the Lord is their hiding-place, and so pass the troublesome waves of this life as to meet him in glory everlasting.

E. M. TURNER.

DIED, at her residence in Sabine parish, La., of heart-clot, October 18, 1875, Mrs. M. L. BRANCH, aged fifty-one years, two months and twenty-six days. The deceased was born in Claiborne county, Miss., July 22, 1824, where she lived until she was eight years old. Her parents then moved and settled near Port Gibson; then removed to Madison county, Miss., where she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the sixteenth year of her age. She then removed with her parents to this State, settling in Sabine parish, where she has since lived a member of our church, ever administering to its wants. Sister Branch was married twice. By her first husband she had three children, two of whom survive their mother. Her last husband died at or about the close of the war, leaving her with two daughters to fight the battle of life alone. In the death of our beloved sister the church has sustained a loss that is hard to be replaced. The church of which she was a member is almost orphaned. Sister Branch was blessed with plenty of this world's goods, and she was ever ready to give to the church of her substance. The preacher on the circuit only had to let his wants be known to have them supplied. In her wealth she never forgot the preacher and his family. Her death will be sad intelligence to all the preachers who knew her. It was the writer's privilege to talk with her the day before she died. Although death was then doing its fatal work, she did not lose sight of duty. She spoke freely—although feeble—of the church; seemed to regret that she was unable to talk no more with us, as was her delight to do when in health. Just before her final exit from earth she raised her eyes heavenward, clasped her hands, and for the last time addressed her Savior, committing her soul into his hands, who no doubt sustained her in crossing over the cold Jordan of death. Sister Branch leaves two daughters, with many kind friends, to mourn her loss.

J. M. F.

ON THE twenty-first of August last, while passing through the neighborhood, I learned that JAMES ARBUTHNOT—a young man with whom I was well acquainted—was not expected to live. As early as possible I was at the bedside. It fell to my lot, in the presence of the physician, to tell him that his days on earth were numbered. Though it was somewhat unexpected to him, the news was received with perfect composure. Said he: "I would like to get well for the sake of my parents and sisters; but I have made peace with God, and have no fears of the future, if it is his will to take me." With calmness he bade his weeping family and friends "good-by," with the addition of these familiar words: "Meet me in heaven." A sister said, under the burden of her sorrow: "Oh, that I could die for him!" His reply was: "Julia, don't talk so. I want to die for myself." So passed from earth to glory James Clinton, youngest child of Rev. John and Mary Arbuthnot, who was born in St. Helena parish, April 6, 1853, and died August 21, 1875. May God comfort the aged parents, and through this dispensation bring the sisters and brothers into the fold of Christ.

D. P. BRANFORD.

LIKE the gradual departing of light after a cloudless day, so declined the health and life of WILLIAM M. ELDRIDGE from the effects of that great foe of physical life—consumption—until on Thursday night, the thirtieth of September, 1875, while sitting up in his bed, he quietly breathed his last, and was no more on earth, for God had taken him to himself.

After the death of his beloved wife, which took place about eighteen months previous to his own, he seemed to feel that he would not linger long behind her, and was evidently obeying that summons applicable to all the dying race of Adam's posterity: "Set thine house in order; for thou shalt die and not live." Having been an earnest, faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South for more than thirty years, true to every charge, and upright in all his dealings with his fellow-men, he received in his death a verification of that word which declares: "The end of that man is peace."

H.

BELLE AMBROSE, daughter of H. H. and W. E. Bradford, died July 18, 1875, aged four years, ten months and twenty-seven days.

She was an intelligent and religious child. Few children of her age were more devoted to the church and Sunday school than she was. While on her sick-bed she called for her catechism and learned her Sunday school lesson. She did not recite it on earth, but when Sunday came she crossed over the river of death. It was a great pleasure to her to give of her little savings to her minister. Often she has come and put money in my hand. We all miss her, but none more than her blind grandfather, whom she would lead in the neighborhood when he wished to go. Belle was the last and eldest of three beautiful little girls that these sad-hearted parents have buried.

N. B. YOUNG.

THOMAS J. WIMBERLY ceased to suffer on the second day of May, 1875, in the sixty-seventh year of his age. He professed religion and joined the Methodist Church in early life—a step which he never regretted. He was an old-fashioned Methodist, who abominated dancing and card-playing. He had been a great sufferer for several years, and had been expecting death at any hour for the last year. He expressed no fear. He leaves a family, some of whom have not taken refuge in the ark of safety. May the Lord incline their hearts to seek and serve the God of their father.

FOR THE ADVOCATE.

THE PHILOSOPHER AND THE SCIENTIST.

BY R. T. V.

An old philosopher one day
Met a young scientist astray,
And "Hall, my friend!" the former said,
You'll soon be wandering 'mongst the dead."
O no!" the scientist rejoined;
I seek the cause of 'growth' to find.
Have you not heard that man has sprung—
By 'regular succession' wrung—
From mollusks, moles and apes, we find,
Have sprung the whole of human kind."
"Ah!" the philosopher averr'd,
Of this I find not seen a word,
Save that in ancient tomes, well rusted,
'Twas once a theme, but long since busted."
"Hal," said the scientist, "we've found
They occupied the proper ground;
And only ignorance, ever shy,
Could let such precious truth slip by.
We've late been looking all around,
And now its truth is surely found.
All nature's in her youthful session,
And perfects all things by 'progression.'
The little grain becomes a tree,
The child grows up a man like me."
"'Tis true," the philosopher averr'd,
"Of constant progress I have heard;
Of all things in their line, I know,
They start unripe, to perfect grow.
But never yet wise men essayed
That any ever left its grade.
The acorn planted on the lea
In time becomes a spreading tree;
The little infant of a span,
By growth and culture, makes a man:
The child can never make a tree—
The tree a child can never be;
And as far back as history goes,
No change of kinds and sorts she knows.
Even hybrids, tho' they have their use,
By nature's laws can ne'er produce;
And from Berosus down to Pollard
There's none but fools your system swallow'd.
If your philosophy were true,
As I have said, it is not new;
The ancients, watching this succession,
Saw things develop by progression;
Then caught the thought which you have swallow'd,
And for a time in error wallow'd;
But, watching closer still, they found
That nature kept her own true bound.
The greatest mystery she knows
Is where two elements disclose,
First, life in water, then in air,
And tadpoles make us frogs. (You stare.)
But do they then progress and change?
First hop, then run upon the range?
No; they return, each son and daughter,
And start their race again in water.
Now progress, even in its line,
We must with limits well confine;
The bones of every ancient creature,
Possessing yet each line and feature
Of their own species, still we see,
Outstrip in size what now they be;
And this would rather go to prove,
Not onward we, but backward move.
As idle folks have naught to do,
They dig up errors, old and new.
'Tis better far for culture'd youth
To bow in reverence to the truth.
Your system, if it had truth's brand,
Would witness monsters through the land:
A mollusk walking, speaking notes,
And apes, half human, liking souls;
A baboon shedding off his hide,
His tail gone in, his head made wide,
His claws drove up to make more brain,
Half man, half monkey, on the plain.
So thistles soon would bring us figs,
And thorns bear grapes upon their twigs.
You know, my friend, from Time's first birth
Such sights were never seen on earth.
No order could be known below
If from its species aught could go.
The beast we slay we'd find, to sorrow,
Had been a human by to-morrow;
And just as soon could I believe
That human souls in beasts could live
As that the ape's form and nemsen
Could ever grow into a 'human.'"
The wise man ceas'd; the scist sped,
And left his field notes as he fled.
His cause was bad, his morals rotten.
I pass'd again—he was forgotten;
While earth mov'd still in Order's laws,
And victory shown'd on Truth's high cause.

COVINGTON, Louisiana.

Outside Saints.

BY REV. TALBOT W. CHAMBERS, D. D.

This is the name given by some to certain persons or classes who are supposed to have gained the favor of God without being included in the visible church of any dispensation. The text usually quoted to sustain this view hardly answers the purpose. It is Peter's declaration to Cornelius: "God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him."—Acts x, 35. But these words, by their inherent force and their connection, mean only that national distinctions are no longer regarded by the Lord; that an alien, when converted, need not become a Jew in order to become a Christian; that a believing Gentile is entitled to baptism without previously being circumcised. This is a truth which Peter had not previously known, but now learned by the Lord's teaching at Cesarea. Hence he says: "I perceive"—that is, comprehend or grasp what before he had failed to learn. The passage, therefore, was not intended to announce any new terms of salvation, as if Peter had suddenly discovered, contrary to his express statement (Acts iv, 12,) some other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved. Fearing God and working righteousness are not conditions of grace, but fruits and evidences of its existence. And whom has these may be sure of the divine acceptance, no matter what his lineage or his country.

Still it is claimed that whatever Peter may have meant in the application of his utterance to Cornelius, that utterance contains a universal proposition, and therefore fairly admits of a wide, an unlimited application to all times and countries. This is true, and agrees quite with the corresponding expression of Paul (Romans ii, 14) that the Gentiles "having not the law, are a law unto themselves, which shew the work of the law written on their hearts." There is a revelation made to every man in the constitution of his own nature, and in the material universe around him—"the things that are made"—quite sufficient to guide him in the way of righteousness, certainly enough in the judgment of the apostle to render him "without excuse" if he does not glorify God. But possibility is one thing and fact is another. Whatever the heathen may do, and are responsible for not doing, does not decide the question as to what they actually do. The very Scriptures from which we learn of their opportunities, testify to their abuse of those opportunities. For example, Paul's whole luminous argument on the teachings of nature and conscience, in the first chapter of Romans, is designed to prove not Gentile innocence, but Gentile guilt. So far from affirming, as a modern preacher has said, that there are millions under the old-nature religions, living in goodness and dying in hope, he declares that he has "proved both Jews and Gentiles that they are all under sin," and that all the world is guilty before God.

But are there then no outside saints at all? By no means. There certainly have been such, and may be still. But we learn of their existence not by stretching texts beyond their fair scope, nor by using the premises of an argument to forswear its conclusion, but by noticing the explicit statements of holy writ, which must be received, whether we can explain them or not. The first instance on record is Melchizedek, king of righteousness, king of peace. He was not in the line of the covenant and promise. According to the most probable view he was a descendant of Ham, and yet, as a priest of the most high God, he pronounced a blessing even upon the father of the faithful. His knowledge of God came down from the family of Noah by a different church than that through the descendants of Shem. So Reuel or Raguel or Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses, is called a priest in a way which seems to imply a real, acknowledged sacerdotal function, and, if so, he must be considered a Gentile believer even in that early age. The same conclusion is enforced by the history of Balaam. It is true that he was anything but a saint, outside or inside; but his case demonstrates the probability that there were in his time not a few who kept pure the light of primitive tradition. Balaam was a diviner, a covetous man, a betrayer of the truth for the rewards of unrighteousness. Yet his evident acquaintance with the true God, his respect for his character, and his expressed purpose of absolute obedience, all show beyond question the possession of quite enough knowledge for salvation. Given another man along the Euphrates who, with the same intelligence, united a superior power of resisting temptation, and a more exact obedience to God, and there is an outside saint. The Ninevites are said by our Lord, who never used words lightly, to have repented at the preaching of Jonah; if so, the outer communion of the faithful had a large accession. The strong terms used in Isaiah (xliv, 28, xlv, 1-6) respecting Cyrus, whom God anointed, called and qualified to be his shepherd, and to perform all his pleasure, indicate a relation which had at the bottom a spiritual bond.

Surely, then, there is nothing to hinder the pleasing conviction that in all ages and places God has his witnesses, who, by some special providential guidance, have retained enough of the original revelation made to the forefathers of the race to bring them into the service of the one true God. But that such are to be found now in large numbers all over the heathen world is an opinion so opposed to all the evidence of every kind that bears upon the subject, that no charity authorizes one to receive it. On the contrary, true charity rather requires us, admitting the painful truth of the general guilt and ruin of the pagan world, to redouble our zeal and energy in obeying the final injunction: Preach the gospel to every creature.—New York Observer.

Preaching Duty.

Calvin, in Geneva, was allowed to thunder away from the pulpit about the "terrible decrees"—to speak as much as he chose about faith; but when, as a stern disciplinarian, he set himself to work to put checks and hinderances in the way of the loose practices of the "libertines," they protested, saying: "It is your place to explain the Scriptures. What right have you to meddle with other things—to talk about morals and find fault?" The old evangelical, Thomas Scott, said his flock followed him joyfully when he preached upon the first part of the Epistle to the Ephesians, but they forsook him when he came to the latter part. They delighted to hear of "being predestinated unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ;" but they counted it legal and not evangelical to be urged to walk worthy of the vocation wherewith they were called.

Congregations now delight to hear about faith in God and Christ; but open up to them that there is a tremendous lack of faith when they do dishonest things; if, when times are hard, and there is an opportunity of making money just by a little underhand process, and they do it, it shows they have faith in money, but not in God. This is descending from the respectability of the pulpit, coming down from explaining the Scriptures, which is the minister's great duty.

The Athenians found fault with Socrates because, instead of using elegantly-turned sentences and studiously-selected illustrations, like the sophists, he was always talking about "smiths, and tanners and shoemakers, and asses with pack-saddles." The wiser among them, however, found out that behind all these common illustrations there lurked a divine meaning. The Athenians are among us—"the Greeks are at our doors." The dignity of the pulpit is to be maintained at all hazards. It may be allowed to speak of the down upon an angel's wing—not of the feathers upon a goose's back. It may tell of the beauty of the rainbow—not of the ugliness of scalding and fretting. It may discourse of the wisdom of God in framing the world, but not of the wisdom of declining a challenge, of forgiving an insult, of keeping out of debt and holding one's tongue.—Southern Churchman.

EVERY one must find out for himself the key to the riddle of life. It is of no use to have it told. Some do not hear, while others misunderstand it.

Scientific.

—A good cement for marble may be made by melting and stirring together one part of white wax and eight parts of resin, and then adding four parts of plaster of Paris. It should be used while hot.

—A curious fact connected with the grasshopper raid in western Missouri is that, wherever pastures have been destroyed by the insects, new varieties of grass, which never before have been seen in the localities, have sprung up. The principal species is a green bunch grass of luxuriant growth, covering ground formerly yielding nothing but blue grass. Cattle eat the new species with avidity. It is conjectured that the seed was brought to the region and deposited by the grasshopper swarm which laid their eggs there last fall. Some definite explanation of the phenomenon would be very interesting, since it is not known where the grass originally grew or what may be expected of it, if its growth continues, in the future. Possibly the grasshoppers may prove a blessing yet.

—M. Decharme, a French physicist, has described in the Comptes Rendus a new form of sonorous flame, which is very simple. An ordinary jet of gas is allowed to burn from an open tube three-sixteenths of an inch in diameter; and a second tube, carrying a moderate blast of air, held horizontally, is brought gradually down along the flame. When it reaches a height of a few inches from the gas-jet a distinct sound is heard, which becomes louder and more musical as this jet is approached. The character and intensity of the sound is, of course, dependent upon a variety of conditions, easily determined by trial. An ordinary Bunsen burner, with the air-holes stopped, makes an excellent jet; and the character of the flame when sounding, as studied in the rotating mirror, is stated to be very remarkable.

INFLUENCE OF MUGGY WEATHER. Herbert Spencer advances a theory singularly consonant with some popular impressions. All know how enervating is the damp, "muggy" weather. This debilitation is due to the difficulty of carrying on the normal evaporation of the body, when the air is already loaded with moisture. Spencer finds that it is the hot and dry regions of the earth which have produced the smartest races, while the hot and moist have produced the Ethiopians. The great raceless quarter, extending across North Africa, Arabia, Persia and Thibet, has produced all the conquering races of the world. The Tartar, Aryan, Semitic and Egyptian races have all sprung from this region, and gone forth from it to conquer the earth. On this continent it is the raceless region of Mexico, Central America and Peru which attained high development in the prehistoric era. Livingstone and Schweinfurth attribute blackness of skin to the union of heat and moisture.—Rural New Yorker.

PUT IN MIND.—Old Dr. Johnson said that "mankind did not so much require instructing as they did reminding." Have any of us ever failed in our duty to our Maker, our neighbor or ourselves for lacking the knowledge of it? Who is ignorant of what is right? No one. We have been imbued with the principles of truth till the knowledge of it appears like intuition; and yet how often do we require to be reminded of our duty?

And this, after all, in Christian lands, is the great duty of the pulpit. It is not to tell congregations new truths, but to remind them of old ones; not to inform them of new duties, but to urge them to the practice of old ones they have been neglecting, and which all of us, by reason of the constant din of this world's work, are ready to forget and neglect. "I stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance." The man who does not need to be reminded of old truths, and to be urged to the practice of old duties, has no need to be preached to. But who can say he does his duty so well that he stands in no need of being put in mind about them?

MUSIC IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.—There is one thing to be admired in the English Church—the apparent unity and fervor of devotional interest and feeling in the congregation. The moment the text is announced there is a general opening of Bibles, all following the preacher's explanation of the passage with the greatest earnestness. The singing also is diffusive and congregational. There are no instrumental interludes between the stanzas of the hymn. There is no flourishing of trumpets in the playing of the organ, and nothing like executing music. Art is subordinated to devotion more than it is with us. The choir is mixed up with the congregation, thus giving correctness and fire to the singing of all the people. I have never heard in (Roman) Catholic countries, or in any other part of the world, church music that for beauty, animation and fervor at all equaled the choral singing in the public service of the great English cathedrals.—Prof. Hoppin's "Old England."

WE SEE in a jeweler's shop that as there are pearls and diamonds, and other precious stones, there are files, cutting instruments, and many sharp tools for their polishing; and while they are in the workhouse they are continual neighbors to them, and often come under them. The church is God's jewel—his workhouse where his jewels are polished for his palace and house; and those he especially esteems, and means to make most resplendent, he hath oftenest his tools upon.—Leighton.

LOOKING to others for our standard of happiness is the sure way to be miserable. Our business is with our own heart and our own motives.

I KNOW of two beautiful things—the starry heavens above my head, and the sense of duty within my heart.—Immanuel Kant.

Religious Intelligence.

—By the last census of Canada there were in the Dominion 21,000 Congregationalists, 237,000 Baptists, 550,000 Presbyterians, and 1,501,000 Roman Catholics.

—The Native Home Missionary Society in Burmah has held its first anniversary, and is in itself a most cheering fruit of the labors of the American missionaries in that country.

—The Indian Mirror, the organ of the Brahmo Somaj, writes thus in regard to the prospects of this deistic society: "We must confess with humiliation that the efforts hitherto made by the Brahmo Somaj to alter and exalt Hindoo society have not produced a desirable amount of success. We are still unpopular, exceedingly unpopular."

—The Japanese, writes Mr. Loomis, are a newspaper-reading people. About five million copies were taken last year. These newspapers are actively discussing the doctrines of Christianity. They are generally opposed to it; but by this very discussion the attention of the people will be drawn more fully to the subject and the truth made manifest.

—Dr. Somerville, the venerable ex-secretary of the Free Church missions, whose recent evangelistic visit to India has been noticed in these columns, states as the result of his observations that the high education which the government is giving to many in India has utterly failed to reconcile them to British rule. In common with other careful observers, he regards the situation as politically dangerous. The necessity of a Christian education in India is becoming more and more manifest.

—The Canadian Baptists, as we learn from the Baptist Missionary Magazine, have for some time had two separate foreign missionary organizations. These two have now been combined into one, and the field selected for their united work is the Telugu country, India. One missionary is already stationed among the Telugus, at Coconada, and a company of ten persons—four missionaries and their wives, and two single women—who had originally been intended for the Karens of Siam, has now been sent to the former place.

—There are now connected with the Hawaiian Evangelical Association five associations and one presbytery. Sixty churches are connected with these ecclesiastical bodies—on the Island of Hawaii three associations, with twenty-three churches; on Maui and the adjacent islands, one presbytery and nineteen churches; on Oahu one association, with thirteen churches; and on Kauai one association, with five churches. English-speaking churches are not included. Thirty-five pastors are in connection with these ecclesiastical bodies.

—On March 29 Dr. E. C. Scudder, of the Arcot mission, baptized sixty persons belonging to the village of Nansanier. Of this number twenty-seven adults afterward participated in the Lord's Supper, which service most of them had never before even witnessed. This baptism included the people of a whole village, with the exception of a single family, in which the mother holds her husband's children from Christ. The work which culminated in so general a baptismal and communion service had been going on for two years, and the gospel has found lodgment among a simple and earnest people.

—A correspondent of the Christian Mirror, writing from Natal, South Africa, says: "Though I am not writing on missions, yet you will wish to know what progress is made in educational and evangelistic efforts in this colony. There are 128 churches and chapels (or congregations) scattered throughout a territory about twice the size of Massachusetts. The English population number 17,000; the Zulus or natives 400,000. Two thousand eight hundred and thirty-six pupils are gathered in various schools, which are supported by a government grant of £4,880. The two seminaries for training Zulu teachers—one at Amanzimtote, the other at Inanda—under the American Board of Missions, are growing in importance."

MORAVIAN MISSIONS.—The Moravians were the first to lead off in the modern missionary work. As early as 1730 they proclaimed that the Church of Christ was a missionary church, and every member of it a practical missionary. Acting under the influence of these sentiments, they have accomplished wonders in the salvation of the world. They have missionaries in nearly every part of the globe. The following are the last published statistics of their missions: "Stations in Labrador, Greenland, among Indians of North America, Moskito coast of Central America, the West Indies, Surinam, South Africa, Australia, Thibet, 92 in all; 333 missionary agents, of whom 28 are natives; 1,389 native assistants. Of the total number of persons belonging to our missions (69,322,) 2,745 are Esquimaux, 1,344 Indians, 9,329 South Africans, 55,750 negroes, 154 natives of Australia and Thibet."

—Another letter from Mr. Gladstone to Mr. Eubule-Evans has been published. Mr. Eubule-Evans recently published a paper in the Contemporary suggesting reforms in the English Church, and Mr. Gladstone tells him that they will never be carried. "At a certain age the framework of institutions becomes too stiff and stark for changes of a certain kind and extent." He is persuaded, nevertheless, that there is "that in the church which, with establishment or without it, will keep for her a place and a name in the final record of God's dealings with mankind for their salvation;" and that as to establishment, "if it is hard to maintain, it is harder to destroy." He thinks the "most marked want in the church is the want of great men as leaders," and that it is losing ground in this respect relatively to the lay mind of the country, but adds: "When I look to moral tone, if nobleness is repelled from holy orders, I know not where it takes refuge." One seems to detect it in Hinchshire, not in holy orders.

WORK TOGETHER.

Which builds the nest
In the bright spring weather—
This bird or that bird?
They build together.

Who makes the comb,
And the sweet, sweet honey?
Who says it's cold?
Who says it's sunny?

All the little bees
Go to work together;
They make no excuse
Because of the weather.

Who helps mamma
As if it were fun?
Who wants to work
Till the work is done?

And who will say,
With a pout and a groan:
I want to rest
And be selfish alone?

Grandpa Goodale Stories.—No. 17.

TOM SINKLE TAKES A BACK TRACK.

MY DEAR CHILDREN: Margie says she has a question to ask before we go any further in Porpoise Tom's yarn. What is it, Margie?

"Why, grandpa," says Margie, "I want to know if, when you come to tell us Tom Sinkle's grandmother's story, you are coming to a place where her mother has a story to tell; and, if so, where the end of it all is to be."

Margie, did you ever see any one using a spinning-wheel?

"Yes, grandpa; there is old Mrs. Ryder has a spinning-wheel, and I have seen her use it often."

Did you ever notice the yarn she was spinning?

"Yes, grandpa; it is always coarse and white."

But, I mean, how many ends has it?

"How many ends, grandpa?"

Yes, how many ends?

"Why, grandpa, it hasn't only one end, and that is the beginning, unless she cuts it off."

Well, Margie dear, I think that would have been the case with Tom Sinkle's yarn had it not been cut off right here by an old salt by the name of Slippery Jack.

"But, grandpa, how came he to have such a funny name?"

Never mind, Tom; I'm not to be diverted from my determination to tell Tom Sinkle's yarn just as he told it. You see when Tom Sinkle commenced talking about the manuscript with his grandmother's story on it I saw Slippery Jack step up behind him with a long knife that sailors always wear in their belts. I was afraid at first that he intended some mischief, until I caught sight of the fun twinkling in his eyes, and directly he shouted:

"Belay there, messmate; may be that grandmam had a mammy too. Suppose we leave the balance of that yarn of yourn on the spindle, and commence to reel up these skeins you have left lying round loose."

And Slippery Jack made a flourish with his knife in the air, as though he was cutting off a sure enough skein of yarn.

"All right, messmate," said Tom. "Since you have found out the trick I have no objection to the order: 'Bout ship.' So with your leaves I will finish what my aunt had to say after she had read me the manuscript.

"'So you see, Tom,' continued Aunt Molly, 'that beautiful child grew up with us in our home, right here in Blue Hill, and we all loved her like she had been 'bone of our bone,' as the Scriptur says. She was such a beautiful child, and so loving like, every one of us was drawn to her. But I must confess, Tom, I was jealous of her from the start. I know there wasn't any sense in it, but you see I was always sort of envious like; and then you know the promise your father and I had made each other. Your father, Tom, seemed to take to her from the very first, and whenever I saw him fondling the "little wee one," as he called her, on his knee, I know I must have showed how foolish I was by my looks. Well, at last the time came when your father had to go away to Boston to school, and I was right glad of it, for I thought then he would learn to forget Florinde (I would have told you, said Tom, how we found out her name if you hadn't stopped me,) and remember his promise to me. The night before he left he came to me, and, taking me in his arms, he said; "Molly, you are foolish to be jealous of Flora. Don't you think I can love more than one person? Do you suppose, you silly thing, that I love you any less because God has given us that little waif to love?" But I only cried, and reminded him of his promise to love no one else but me.

"'Your father, Tom, was sixteen years old when he left, and Florinde was twelve; and, though he came home once or twice during the time, he didn't come to stay any time for nearly six years, for after he had been to school for two or three years he went to sea, determined, as he said, to be a skipper before he came back; and, sure enough, he did. I never shall forget how proud we all were when we saw in the papers which came every week from Boston, among the arrivals: "The ship Tokay, James Sinkle, master." We knew he would come down to see us, and I had a new dress made, for I wanted to look my best when he came. But in spite of my new dress, Tom, I couldn't help noticing how much prettier the little witch Flora looked with her plain calico and a sprig of wild flowers in her long black hair. He came at last, and looked so grand in his neat sailor clothes; and though he stepped so wide that it took the whole house for him to walk in, yet I thought him the finest-looking man I had ever seen. He brought us all such beautiful presents from Calcutta, Tom; and though he was so particular that he had two of everything—one for Flo and one for me—yet I was jealous to think he loved her as much as he did me. He must have noticed this, for one day he brought me a beautiful gold locket, with his own picture in it, and a lock of his hair on the other side, which he said he had had made for me in London. I was more proud of this locket than of all the other presents, because Flo did not have one like it. But I needn't make a long story of it, Tom. I saw, day by day, that your father was learning to love Florinde; and indeed whenever I stopped to think about it I couldn't wonder at it, for she was the most beautiful creature you ever saw, with eyes that seemed to look way down into your soul. But although I knew it was right that they should love one another, and foolish in me to be jealous about it, yet I was jealous, Tom, for all that. We were twins, you know, Tom. One night James came into my room after I had gone to bed, just as he used to do when we were children, and said he: "Molly dear, Flo and I are going to be married. Are not you glad, Molly?"'"

Mamma says I must stop, children.

"But, grandpa, may I ask a promise of you?"

Certainly, my dear Bessie; what would you have me do?

"Will you promise me, grandpa, to tell the story 'How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest' as soon as you finish 'Tom Sinkle's Yarn' and the 'Bee Hunt?'"

Yes, my dear, I will promise.

"'Pon honor, grandpa?"

Yes, darling, "'pon honor." You and Margie are company, and must have one promise apiece, I suppose. So good-night.

GRANDPA GOODALE.

From Our Little Friends.

SUNNY HILL, WASHINGTON PAR., LA., November 8, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I want to write a little letter, too, for your good paper; and as I can't write yet (I am only six years old) I will get my teacher to write what I want to say. I have to hear my teacher read the pieces in your paper for us children. We get the ADVOCATE every Monday, and we are so glad when it comes. My pa and ma are so kind to us, and they love to have us go to school. Our school-house is a mile and a half from our house. My sister Rose and I go with our teacher to school, for she stays with us. We are all little, but we are learning fast. We know all our catechism, and can say the twenty-third psalm. Every Friday we bring pretty flowers to the school-house, and make our school-room look so sweet with them; and our parents all come in the evening and hear us say our lessons, and our speeches and dialogues. We are trying to be good, and we are so happy. Mr. Editor, please come out to see us. Pa will go to meet you with his buggy if you will, and we will all give you a hearty, happy welcome. Mr. Adams is our preacher this year, and everybody likes him. May God bless you. Hoping you will ask God to help us to be good,

I am your little friend,

"FINCE" RICHARDSON.

WAYNESBORO, MISS., Nov. 8, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I have been thinking for a long time that I would try and write you a short letter. I did not think that I had the courage to write to you or your paper until I tried to. I read the ADVOCATE very often, and I like to read the interesting stories in the Child's Corner. My mother takes the ADVOCATE. I attend the Sabbath school of this town, and I am a member of the Missionary Society, and a member of the Methodist Church also. I joined the church at the time of our protracted meeting. Bro. McLaurin is our pastor. He boards at our house. My parents are both members of the church also. I must close for fear of entertaining you too long.

Your young friend,

WILLIAM H. JONES.

OUR strength often increases in proportion to the obstacles which are imposed upon it. It is thus that we enter upon the most perilous plans after having had the shame of failing in more simple ones.

Different Kinds of Leaven.

There is the good leaven of the kingdom, exhibiting the assimilatiug and diffusive power of religion. The gospel doctrines implanted, and the work of the Holy Spirit, are like the fermenting lump that gradually changes the entire mass. The object in using this illustration was to present especially the inward development, as the mustard seed shows the outward. Whether in the individual heart, or upon the world at large, it is the internal influence—silent, unseen, and yet mightily worklug until the person is sanctified wholly, and until the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord. There is a hidden but powerful principle which God has put in the measures of meal. It makes its way surely, and is gradually chauging the character and reforming the world. This is the nature of truth as attended by the Spirit. It is like the leaven thrust into an alien material, but it takes hold at once of the surrounding elements, and produces a ferment that ends in complete assimilation.

There are convictions that live long in the conscience before they are made potential in repentance and conversion. There are early religious instructions that do not come to the surface for a long time, but they have lived and wrought, and at length the outermost shell is worn away, and the whole nature yields to the grace of God. How the leaven was put into Mexico through the soldiers' Bibles thirty years ago is matter of history, and now the power of the Romish hierarchy is broken there, and the word of the Lord is having free course. Madagascar in a quarter of a century has been delivered from the power of darkness, and translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son. The gospel was put into that measure, and it made its own way. There were commotions within and violent conflicts, but there is now a Christian nation. The same process is going on in other pagan lands. The visible is little in comparison with what is beneath the surface. The thought and conscience of the nations are penetrated, the doctrines of salvations are obtaining lodgment in the deepest consciousness of Buddhists and Brahmins, the Holy Spirit is reproving and striving, the leaven of the kingdom is honey-combing the heathen world. In Christian lands there is a strong under-current of religious inquiry and awakening. The fires of Christian zeal, long smoldering, are bursting out here and there. Christianity is working from its own center of spiritual life, advancing outwardly with a swift pace and with gigantic strides, but its unseen forces are moving with even a greater momentum.

We should not forget, however, that there is a bad leaven as well as a good. The doctrines of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees was of this character. Self-righteousness and practical atheism operate aggressively. False doctrines, infidelity, materialism, are now secretly at work, as they were when Christ bade the disciples beware. Hypocrisy then burrowed in the soul, and corrupted the heart of society. These evil principles are within, and working side by side with the leaven of the gospel. There is malicious diligence in sowing tares, and in all diabolical agencies, to counterwork the gospel. There must be carefulness on the part of parents. The nearly grown boy may have imbibed the poison unknown to them. He has drifted into materialism, and is at heart an infidel, while he is yet under the shadow of the home and the church. The deadly venom is in the literature of the day, serpents nestle in the secular newspaper, and doubt and unbelief are wreathed with the fascinations of science, poetry and fiction. If the kingdom of heaven is a leaven, so is the kingdom of hell. The mystery of iniquity worketh. The insidious character of bad doctrines and unsound principles must be understood and exposed. There is a deadly fermentation which, if unchecked, works shipwreck to faith and destroys the soul.

An evil leaven may creep into the doctrines of the church. Paul tells the Galatians that their leaning to legalism, and corrupting the doctrine of justification by faith, was an evil and dangerous leaven. "A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump." We have illustrations of this in Romanism, in high church dogmas, wherein Christ and the Holy Ghost are made subordinate to rites and ceremonies. Circumcision, made essential to salvation, vitiated the whole system of salvation by grace through faith. The gospel is the feast of unleavened bread, and, like the Jews of old at the Passover, we must sweep the floors and scrape our dough-troughs, lest a particle of the mischievous thing be lurking unawares.

There is also the evil leaven of wickedness in the company of believers. It is a personal leaven in the toleration of disorderly members in the household of faith. Such persons are described as roots of bitterness, springing up to trouble and defile. The fornicator in the Corinthian Church was an evil leaven, with reference to whom the apostle expostulates: "Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump?" Sinners knowingly permitted taint the whole body. What an evil leaven is a drunkard in the church, or a man who defrauds his creditors, or such as defile their garments in the lust-provoking dance, and the dissipating and expensive recreations of the theater! A church with this kind of material in it has but one course to pursue. "Purge out, therefore, the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened." A bad example in the church has its effect upon others—by leading the weak and unwary astray, and by wounding Christ in the house of his friends.

The good leaven of the kingdom let us by all means promote. The bad let us repress, and be on our guard lest its secret workings undermine our spirituality, and sap the foundations of Christian doctrines and morals. We have placed them—the good leaven and the evil—side by side, in one study, that the analogies and lessons of the inspired illustration may be exhibited in a single view.

Fraternal Criticisms.

Certain gentlemen somehow having got a revelation that "God needs the fraternal union," and "what he needs he can command, and will," very naturally concluded that any form of fraternity which does not end in "the unity of the Methodisms" is but "a semi or partial Christianity," and felt free to treat as they please all who want it on the General Conference plan. Charging us with the wish to "continue the existence of our church on the basis of an extinct issue" (in politics,) and rating us as only "semi-Christian" (the other half, of course, being heathen,) they have given us a genuine Samaritan recognition, which is the ancient and well-known canine privilege of being soundly beaten.

Well, having advertised the failure of their business, and advised them to try to do no more business in that line, I for one should have expected nothing better; and, indeed, I didn't. One thing, however, appears a little unfair—that is the laying of the cudgel with such gusto on parties non-combatant. From boyhood I never did believe the irate old gentleman in the spelling-book picture treated Tray exactly right, for the poor fellow was there just looking on out of curiosity, and, so far as the testimony goes, had not even shown a tooth or raised a bristle for the fight. And so it seems somewhat unfair in slinging the shillaly to hit on purpose that "higher functionary of the church," who may or may not have been just looking on, but who was very innocent of any word or line written.

From such spirit and conduct, however, Dr. McFerrin is free in his letter, which is full of good feeling, and very paternal. What he says of me is true—I am his friend. He is one of the products of Methodism of which Methodism may justly be proud; for in variety of talents, amount of labors and extent of usefulness few men in any church are his equals. The office he fills brings him before the eyes of all churches at home and abroad, and gives his words a tremendous power—a power, indeed, greater than that of all the rest put together. With great emblazonry and delight was he advertised as one of the leaders of "this grand moral movement." Now it was for just these reasons that so much space was given to his speeches, and the criticism was made so sharp. His Round Lake statement of the animus of "our people" (by which expression he certainly meant Southern Methodists, and none other) was thought to be too strong—based upon partial or wrong information. The statement was challenged on this ground. It was not a question of veracity, but one of information. I then believed and said: "The missionary secretary has been misinformed;" and now I reaffirm the opinion with increased assurance of its correctness, notwithstanding the facts the doctor states in his letter.

Unknown Bro. "Fraternity," in the ADVOCATE of October 28, brings out the distinction between the political and the church aspects of this question, and also shows the difference between Christian fraternity and church fraternization. This paper is earnestly commended to the careful study of the "grand moral movement men." If they will master it they will write more clearly themselves, and see how silly it is to denounce others, who are just as loyal to the church and to the gospel as they are, as "haters of fraternity," "belligerent scoffers of fraternity" and the like. By making these distinctions so clearly Bro. "Fraternity" has sufficiently answered all the argument of the doctor's letter, and therefore, with two or three observations, I will pass on to my special critic.

The first is this: It is to be somewhat regretted that when giving the motives which took him to Round Lake he did not say he went in the interest of Christian fraternity as inaugurated by our General Conference, instead of "as inaugurated by the General Conferences of the two churches." The substitution of our General Conference for the General Conferences of the two churches would have removed all ambiguity and exactly defined his position.

The second is this: If "he was against them and deprecated their movement when the Northern Methodists sent down their missionaries to disintegrate and absorb," we who live in this "section where we see but one side," and who don't "know as much as some others," cannot, for the life of us, understand how himself, "with many others, including several of our Bishops," can go billing and cooing to Round Lake and other camps while this same cause of opposition continues to exist. Right here is our stone of stumbling; for these fishermen are yet in the seas—the German, the Black and the White. Age may mellow us, but until that process takes place, and while we are forced to see the part played by these missionaries in the political and school affairs, as well as in the church matters of this section, we are constrained to say in sorrow:

> "In ways that are dark
> And tricks that are vain
> The heathen Chinee is" not "peculiar."

My special critic, Dr. Abbey, announced some time ago, in the Baltimore Methodist, his intention to answer the man of the three stars. Well, here it is, in two papers. He starts with an asseveration of his zeal, in a form very solemn and apostolic, but soon loses that almost sacramental state of mind, and begins to lay serious charges against me, and bedaub me with ugly names—says I advocate a "new doctrine in ethics," to wit: "that Christian fraternity is not enjoined as a universal obligation," which doctrine has been the ruin of every church that has sunk down "since Joshua crossed the Jordan." Then he quotes the Scriptures, which, he says, this "war writer" "could no doubt show, in his way, belong to a former age and to different circumstances from these." Calls me a "belligerent scoffer of fraternity," whose "writings smack of war in every line," whose "principles are retaliatory throughout." Tells what the politicians are doing, and, classing me with the most unscrupulous and odious scalawags and carpet-baggers, says "they seem to have been taught in the same school of raw-head-and-bloody-bones with the brother of the three stars;" and winds up the first paper by asking: "Is Christian fraternity a subject of bargain, stipulation?" etc. A tight document, to be sure! Fraternitas ardens! Umph!

In the second paper he drops his harshness, and, seemingly forgetful of the style of the first, gives a right good little homily in soft words, anger, strife, retaliation, etc.; then asks: "Is it not strange that the question of fraternity with a sister church is an open one?" Shows, or thinks he does, how one or two pious men could settle all these matters between the churches in a few weeks, "at an expense of certainly not more than $2.50;" defies any man, "not sold to prejudice and belligerency, to believe that such articles as those of the three stars can by possibility do good;" then warns me not to say I have not written against "Methodist fraternity." This is a brief but not unfair synopsis of his two articles; in reply to all of which I have these things to say: 1. I will not sling billingsgate with him. 2. That he does not, nor can he, prove from any word of mine, written or spoken, that I am now or ever have been opposed to Christian fraternity. 3. He has strangely failed to see the design of my articles, for he says I wrote against Methodist fraternity, whereas I wrote specifically against the designs of certain gentlemen of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, as I gathered their designs from their speeches, letters and conduct.

What started my pen was utterances like the following: "Our General Conference made a little fraternal mistake, it is true; but—we ought to congratulate ourselves that it was no worse." "Some of our people want a semi or partial fraternity—that is, a semi or partial Christianity." "Let there be Christian fraternity, and the unity will take care of itself. It results, or rather it is necessarily. It requires no making, no producing, no bringing about—it is." "I have said before, 'a fig for the Plan of Separation,' and I wish I could repeat it with emphasis a thousand-fold, with all fulness of meaning. Whatever there ever was in it, it is superseded by and lost sight of in Christian fraternity." "Never before, in the history of Bible religion, were two bodies of religious people separated by personal and sectional dislike, and one in every other respect, and rated and spoken of as two churches." "Can churches thus related continue to coexist? I will not ask: Is it desirable? for that cannot be. But I ask if it is possible? Will not disintegration and absorption sooner or later end the anomalous warfare?" These sentences are to be found, ipissima verba, in the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, August 28, 1875, in a fraternal letter from Mississippi, by Rev. R. Abbey, D. D. Such doctrines, in my judgment, would sink our church very soon as far out of sight as any church has gone "since Joshua crossed the Jordan."

And now let me say: If those who have said such things will say such things no more, then I will make no more war, for these sentences express the only Methodist fraternity I have written against. ***

From Mexico.

MR. EDITOR: As you are aware, we opened our new church for public worship on August 22. Since then we have been moving on smoothly and pleasantly. Apprehensions were entertained by many that we would have trouble from the attacks of fanatical hatred. To this time we have had no trouble whatever, I am happy to say. The house itself is so pretty, so sweet and clean, that it seems to have inspired awe and respect. Not a stone has been thrown, not a window-pane broken. This indicates a strong advance movement. Our congregation is a fraction smaller than in the first few weeks, but the services have increased in interest in a double ratio. Of course the beauty and attractiveness of the house—the novelty of a new place of worship—brought out a good many from mere curiosity. Time has done the winnowing, and we have settled down to our work with a good, substantial congregation. The average attendance at night service is about one hundred. Considering the vast numbers of people in the city, this seems like an insignificant beginning. Still, with the exception of one Sunday morning congregation, we have the best house in the city. It must be remembered also that the work is really, as yet, in its infancy. Our hopes strengthen as the prospect brightens. We have really nothing to discourage, but everything to urge us on. It is a work of time. There is a wide margin for patience, watchfulness, prayer, waiting.

About a week since we organized the first Southern Methodist church in Mexico. From the introduction of active Protestantism in Mexico the people forming the congregations considered themselves members of the church. They saw no necessity for formal membership—for a formal organization. They have been slow to see the necessity of such a course manifested in the spirit of organization by foreign missionaries. The fact is, there was a strong prejudice against it. But this is gradually giving way. We began with twenty-five members. The number has been more than doubled at subsequent meetings, and additions are being made all the while. Sixty bona fide, substantial, intelligent members is no bad two months' work. At least so we, occupying a position to judge of the difficulties, think.

Our native preachers are active, earnest workers. They study the Discipline closely, and appear to be fully imbued with its spirit. Better than this, they study the Holy Bible, and their preaching is becoming wonderfully spiritual and impressive. I do not think I ever witnessed a more decided improvement in manners, style and spirituality in preachers anywhere than in these Mexican brethren. I have a daily conference with them, in an "upper room," for Bible reading, prayer, etc. In many of these timely "waitings" before the Lord we all feel the reality of the divine presence. They have been a great blessing to my own soul, and I doubt not also to my faithful co-laborers.

I have also organized a Bible class of young men, now numbering twenty, who meet at my house each Saturday night. They are punctual in their attendance, and evidently feel a deep interest in the work. First we read two chapters in the New Testament, verse about, and one of the class leads in prayer, always closing with the Lord's Prayer, each member repeating after him the petition. A "golden text" is selected, the week previous, for study and analysis. During the week all are more or less meditating upon the same passage. One of the class is also selected to write a special paper on the subject. After the reading, the lessons and prayer, this paper is read by the author, and then an hour is spent in the further analysis and discussion of the subject. I also prepare an analysis, which is given in conclusion. You would be gratified to see the manifest interest of each one. You would be more astonished at the decidedly original thoughts and knowledge of the Scriptures given by many. Quite a number of these young men take an active part in our week-night services. These are held on Wednesdays and Thursdays. They read the lessons, lead in prayer, give exhortations, etc. These week-night services are called cultos libres, and form a special characteristic of primitive Mexican Protestant worship. For the benefit of all I will say that the literal meaning of this phrase is "free worship." Any member of the congregation is at liberty to offer a word of exhortation, tell his experience or lead in prayer. Each being brief and spirited, gives variety and interest.

You also know that in connection with the congregation we have three schools:

1. A night school for adults. The sessions are from seven to nine o'clock, three nights in the week. The teachers are members of my Bible class. The school is well attended, and is doing much good, not only giving solid instruction for every-day use, but interesting the students in the church, which gives such evidences of practical charity, who would perhaps have no thought of Christianity.

2. A day school for boys. The average attendance is about thirty. It is filling up steadily. The master is an interesting young Mexican gentleman, faithful and earnest in his work. He is a member of our church. Possessing a singular capacity for singing, he is a great help in public worship.

3. A day school for girls, about equal in numbers to that of the boys. For this school we were fortunate in securing the services of a cultivated French lady, an American citizen, who has been teaching many years in this republic. Among the girls we have several interesting young ladies preparing for teachers. In each school a given part of the day is devoted to vocal music. In the reading classes we use freely and effectively the New Testament. Finding my school-room too small, I have rented rooms adjoining the church, and moved the girls into them. It increases the expenses, but in a great enterprise like this a few hundred dollars, or even thousands, more or less, is really no consideration.

Our work is growing daily in interest. We only need the material sympathy of the church to advance rapidly. With the money to meet one-half the demands of the hour we could soon form a little Annual Conference, and need the help of a Bishop each year.

Will the church come to the rescue of Mexico? JOEL T. DAVES.

BISHOP KAVANAUGH.—A private note from Bishop Kavanaugh, says the Pacific Methodist of November 12, informs us that he will return from Los Angeles to this city about the last of the month. He will probably remain in or near San Francisco during the winter, and give himself to the work of establishing our church on higher ground. We anticipate a series of his delightful sermons.

DEATH OF THE VICE PRESIDENT. Henry Wilson, Vice President of the United States, died on Monday, November 22. Mr. Wilson throughout his career was a staunch anti-slavery man, and for many years a leader in the Abolition party. He was a self-made man, making his way to eminence through many difficulties, and always maintaining a reputation for honesty of purpose and integrity of character. At the time of his death he was understood to be opposed to the President's extreme Southern policy, and was regarded by all sections and parties as an upright man. There was, we believe, no blemish upon his private life, and no well-founded charge of corruption or dishonor resting upon his official record. If we remember rightly he was a member of the Baptist Church, and was decided in his religious convictions and profession.

CONFERENCE SESSIONS.—The North Mississippi met yesterday at Kosciusco, Miss., Bishop Paine presiding. The Alabama meets at Greenville, December 8, Bishop Marvin presiding. The Mississippi at Canton, December 15, Bishop Paine presiding. The Louisiana in New Orleans, December 15, Bishop McTyeire presiding. The editor of the ADVOCATE expects to be at the sessions of the patronizing Conferences, though the meeting of two of them at the same date will compel him to divide the Conference week between them.

THIS is the day appointed by the President to be observed as a day of national thanksgiving. Services have been announced to be held in several of our city churches. The Southern Methodists unite in one service at the Carondelet Street church. We presume the observance of the day will be general throughout the country. It is well to recognize the good providence of God, and to give thanks to the Father of lights.

REV. JOEL T. DAVES, superintendent of our Mexican mission, arrived from Mexico on the seventeenth instant. Bro. Daves will be in attendance at the approaching session of the Louisiana Conference. A communication in this issue presents the condition of the work as never more promising than now.

LOS ANGELES CONFERENCE.—The Los Angeles Conference held its session at Los Nietos, Cal., October 27 to November 1. Bishop Kavanaugh presided; G. E. Butler, secretary. From the minutes, promptly furnished, we learn that Albert B. Gill was admitted on trial; M. J. Law readmitted; W. L. Stevens discontinued at his own request. L. A. Smith was received by transfer from Missouri Conference; L. J. Hedgpeth, from Pacific Conference; Philip Tuggle, Memphis Conference. Marcus G. Settle (local) was elected and ordained elder. W. A. Spurlock was located at his own request. J. E. Miller, M. W. Glover, superannuated. Collected for claimants, $108.75. Collected for missions, $133.75. White members, 875; local preachers, 17. The next session is to be held at San Bernardino.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

DR. CUNNYNGHAM, says the Nashville Christian Advocate of November 20, has been spending some time in Nashville, preparing the Sunday-school budget for January. We have had curiosity enough to peep into it, and we can assure our Sunday school friends that they will be delighted with their periodicals in their New Year's dress. The doctor has gone after his family. He and all his will receive a hearty welcome. They expect to stay for awhile at the "Old Academy," where they will find many congenial spirits.

AS A MAN crossing water, lest it should make him giddy, and endanger his life, but fixes his eyes on the further shore, and so crosses in safety, so the Christian, passing the troublesome waves of this life, gazes not on them, but fixes his eyes on the heavenly banks beyond, and so makes a safe crossing.

THOSE who propose to attend the Alabama and Mississippi Conferences are referred to notices on our eighth page.

REV. H. C. THOMPSON, of the Presbyterian mission at Zacatecas, Mexico, gave us a call last week.

THERE is seldom a line of glory written upon the earth's face but a line of suffering runs parallel with it; and they that read the lustrous syllables of the one, and stop not to decipher the spotted and worn inscription of the other, get the lesser half of the lesson earth has to give.

MOST people drift. To do this is easy. It costs neither thought nor effort. On the other hand, to resist the tide one must have principle and resolution. He must watch and pray and struggle continually. And yet no thoughtful person, who cares for his soul, will dare to drift.

VALUE the friendship of him who stands by you in the storm. Swarms of insects will surround you in the sunshine.

NO MAN can answer for his own valor or courage till he has been in danger.

OUR BILLS.

We are sending our bills to subscribers. Many of them have assured us that they would remit as soon as crops were harvested. We have waited till now, hoping that by this time they could pay the small amounts they owe. Each subscriber may think his two dollars and fifty cents too small an amount to affect us; but if every subscriber should reason the same way, and withhold it, the sum total would be over twenty thousand dollars. We need every dollar due us—we need it badly. Will you send it once through your pastor, if convenient? If not, please remit directly to this office and greatly oblige the publisher.

LADIES' HAIR, AND FANCY AND JET GOODS.—Mr. George T. Schilling, at 381 Dryades street—branch of 159 Canal street—has a new store, handsomely fitted up, and well filled with a very fine and attractive assortment of goods in his line. He manufactures all goods in his line—hair work, braids, switches, curls, etc. Those who have not called will be surprised at the attractive appearance of his place.

FAMILY GROCERY.—John L. Lavelle, Esq., has at 361 Dryades street a large and complete stock of family groceries. His enterprise deserves reward. Butter and tea are his specialty. Goods will be delivered free of drayage, and he only asks a trial.

WE CALL the attention of our readers to the advertisement of holiday goods by the well-known house of R. H. Macy & Co., Fourteenth street and Sixth avenue, New York. Send for catalogues and illuminated centennial cards, which they furnish free.

BRASELMAN & ADAMS, 586 and 588 Magazine street, have a very large and select stock of dry goods. Read their advertisement.

IF YOU wish to purchase crockery, go to the "China Palace" of Navra & Offner, on Canal street.

WATCHES, JEWELRY AND DIAMONDS.—Messrs. A. B. Griswold & Co., corner of Canal and Royal streets, whose advertisement appears elsewhere, have for many years stood at the head of their branch of business in New Orleans, and they may be safely regarded as among the very best models of business character—conscientious, faithful, truthful and reliable. In purchasing articles that most of us know little about it is best to go to those whose character is well established, and who cannot afford to sell an article which may prove to be different to what it was bought for. Many persons give high prices for articles of jewelry, and probably are never aware of the fact that as property they are utterly worthless. We advise those who have money which they propose to invest in silverware or jewelry to go to a responsible firm, such as the above.

ENGLISH CARPETINGS, RUGS, ETC. Messrs. Elkin & Co., at 168 Canal street, whose card will be found in our columns, enjoy the well-deserved reputation of being one of the best and cleverest houses to deal with in the city. Mr. F Stringer, the managing partner, we have known for many years, and it is enough to say that he is just such a gentleman as every good man will love to meet in business intercourse. The stock of this house is large and very choice. Call and see it.

GENTLEMEN'S AND BOYS' FURNISHING GOODS.—H. T. Walshe, at 110 Canal street, is not surpassed by any for fine goods, cheap goods, well-made goods, or goods well suited to the climate. He thoroughly understands his business, and if you get into the habit of going to his establishment you are sure to find yourself buying a good opinion of him and his goods. In another column you may see how he swept the premiums at the Mississippi State Fair.

THE New Orleans Savings Institution, No. 156 Canal street, is one of the most safe and reliable institutions of its kind in the country. The officers and directors are gentlemen of high standing and well-established character. Mr. Charles Kilshaw, the treasurer, was selected for that important trust, and we do not doubt the good judgment exercised by the board in his election. See advertisement in another column.

MUSIC AND MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.—Mrs. A. C. Gardner, at 807 Magazine street (formerly Mrs. Von Hofe,) keeps pianos for sale, rent or exchange. Church and parlor organs well repaired, promptly and faithfully, and pianos tuned, on application to the above.

MME. SAMSON, 605 Magazine street, is constantly making additions to her stock of millinery goods.

Are Yeast Powders Healthful?

From the Picayune, Nov. 1.

"That adulteration in all the more important articles of our daily food widely prevails, all must acknowledge; and that it is an evil that seriously affects the public health none will deny." During the past year several of the leading journals in the West have agitated this subject to such an extent that manufacturers who are not afraid to let the public know what they offer them to eat have had their productions analyzed by several of the most prominent chemists of Chicago and St. Louis, and have published their certificates concerning them. We publish some of the testimonials awarded to Messrs. Steele & Price, the importance of which the public will appreciate:

From C. Gilbert Wheeler, Professor of Chemistry, Chicago University.

LABORATORY UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO,
March 31, 1875.

I have made a chemical examination of Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder, and other well-known baking powders, which were purchased by me in the open market. The result shows Dr. Price's to be richer in carbonic acid gas and freer from foreign substances; therefore the strongest and purest powder, and entirely worthy of its high reputation. C. GILBERT WHEELER,
Professor of Chemistry.

OFFICE OF JAS. V. Z. BLANEY & SON,
Analytical and Consulting Chemists,
Cor. Dearborn and Randolph Sts.,
Chicago, Dec. 4, 1874.

MESSRS. STEELE & PRICE—Gentlemen: Since I made an analysis of your Baking Powder in November, 1873, and become satisfied of its purity, its freedom from adulteration, and the care taken in its preparation, I have had it used in my own house, and with an occasional exception, when another brand had been sent us by mistake, I have continued to use it with the most satisfactory results. It is perfectly efficient (used as directed,) and will keep any length of time—the last teaspoonful in a five-pound can, which lasts my family many months, being apparently as efficient as the first.

I can cheerfully recommend it as being a pure, wholesome and unadulterated Baking Powder. Truly yours, JAS. V. Z. BLANEY.

From Prof. H. W. Scheffer.

ST. LOUIS, April 17, 1875.

MESSRS. STEELE & PRICE: I have analyzed Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder, and several other of the leading baking powders in the market, samples of which I obtained from dealers in this city. The analytical figures obtained prove conclusively that Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is superior as regards efficacy and purity, for it contains more carbonic acid gas—the important agent for which alone baking powder is used—and less inert foreign matter than any of the others. I am therefore compelled, from a scientific point of view, to fully recommend the use of Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder.

Respectfully, H. W. SCHEFFER.

CHICAGO, July 31, 1874.

MESSRS. STEELE & PRICE—Gentlemen: This is to certify that I have examined, analyzed and tested your Dr. Price's special flavoring extracts of vanilla, rose, orange, lemon, anise, ginger, allspice, almond, mace, celery, nutmeg, clove, coriander, peppermint, coffee, cocoa, wintergreen, cinnamon, and find the same strong, fine, made of good material, and well put up in bottles of full measure. Your fruit coloring is free from any deleterious substance. Therefore do I gladly commend the above-named products of yours for family use.

Respectfully, PROF. M. DELAFONTAINE.

We are using Dr. Price's Baking Powder in our homes, and can truthfully say that we prefer it to any other kind. We are also convinced that Dr. Price's articles are all that they profess to be—free from deception, made from the purest materials, and not injurious to health.

ADDRESS TO THE PUBLIC

BY THE

Louisiana Levee Company.

OFFICE LOUISIANA LEVEE COMPANY,
No. 24 Carondelet street,
New Orleans, November 13, 1875.

To the Public:

The undersigned, President of the Louisiana Levee Company, in behalf of the directors and stockholders of said company, deems it his duty to the public and to the stockholders to publish the following statements to correction and refutation of the persistent misstatements and false accusations made regarding us and our motives and actions through the press of New Orleans.

The parties, not ourselves, who framed the Levee Company, and originally contracted with the State of Louisiana for the building and maintenance of levees, in February, 1871, found themselves wholly unable to comply with their contract for want of capital. The State had previously issued more than $8,000,000 of bonds for levee construction purposes, under Boards of Commissioners; which bonds were much depreciated in value in the market, and the State was powerless to raise further means for continuing the work of levee maintenance. She had no money, and could no longer get the work done on credit. The levees were broken and gone in very many places, and unless something were done the whole alluvial portion of the State was certain to be inundated during the next floods of the river.

The State could not build the levees, and the new Levee Company, as then constituted, was equally powerless to proceed with the work it had undertaken. Such was the situation in November, 1871.

At this juncture a few gentlemen, including among their number several bank presidents, large landed proprietors and capitalists, all resident citizens of long standing, who thought they would thereby render the State good service, joined together in the emergency and concluded to invest a portion of their funds, and undertake to do what neither the State, the new Levee Company nor the riparian proprietors could do.

They acquired, as the only means of operating and of having the levees built (for the only possible instrumentality there was the newly-formed Levee Company,) the franchises and contract of said company. They then jointly contributed and paid in, dyked on $600 in cash, for a capital. In December, 1871, and commenced to rebuild such levees as the State, through its Commission of Engineers, designated as most necessary, and ordered for construction. They built every levee so ordered, and complied with all the requirements of their contract stipulations as designated to them by the State as the proprietor of the levees, through her officials.

By the use of their whole capital, and straining their credit, they succeeded in building upward of one hundred levees completely, with many others at the same time under process of construction, before receiving one dollar of compensation therefor from the State.

To October, 1872, they built levees amounting in the aggregate to 2,357,761 cubic yards, for which $1,531,850 was due, and on account of which only $292,000 had been paid to them by the State. The Levee Company has paid to its sub-contractors, on an average, from three to four, nearly thirty-five cents per cubic yard on a cash basis, besides defraying all of its incidental and other necessary expenses. The company's loss, in interest alone, on the unpaid balances past due by the State, for work actually performed—say on about $1,500,000, at ten per cent. for three and a half years—amounts to $525,000. The balance due the Levee Company on the first of November, 1875, after deducting all receipts from both the construction and repair funds, was over one and a half millions of dollars.

We have built 5,617,553 cubic yards of levees in all, and the amount charged to the State for construction and repairs is $3,266,317. It is said that the Levee Company is making large profits on its contract. If so, how is it that stock, the face value of which is fifteen dollars ($15) per share (on which no cash dividends have ever been paid) is now selling at prices varying from only two dollars to three dollars per share?

The facts are that the entire amount received from the State so far ($1,751,200) has been expended in levee construction and disbursements connected therewith. In addition to the amounts received from the State, we have advanced and expended out of our own means, obtained from other sources, $780,000, or about one-third of the cost of the levees built up to this time; for which we have received little else than abuse, coming from anonymous writers to the public, and which abuse was dictated, in some cases, by those whose venality had been disappointed by our refusal to submit to the exactions of "black mail," and in other cases emanating from the vindictive feelings of discharged employees.

How many business men in New Orleans, or anywhere else, would be willing to contract to build levees for the State of Louisiana at fifty cents per cubic yard, and wait a year or more to be reimbursed, without interest, after paying an average of thirty-five cents per cubic yard in cash, or its equivalent, to sub-contractors, interest on all loans, and other incidental expenses in addition? They would find the actual cost per cubic yard for levees at least forty cents—all expenses included.

Our company has complied with and kept its contract obligations faithfully from first to last, but the State from the very first has been and is still in default. The absurd impression prevails, even with those who should know better, that for some unexplained reason the Levee Company should build all the levees needed in Louisiana of its own volition, without orders and without compensation. For the account of the balance due us we have rendered a full equivalent in work done, and yet we are denounced as seeking to rob the State for asking to be paid in depreciated State bonds the amount due us in cash, as per contract.

Large sums, in bonds and warrants, issued for no consideration whatever, as far as the public are informed, and even tainted with fraud from their first inception, have been funded, but our just claim is sought to be repudiated, and we ourselves held up for public execration for presuming to ask to be paid in bonds, instead of cash, for what is due us. By Act No. 4 of 1871 it was provided that the "State of Louisiana contracts and agrees with the Louisiana Levee Company in terms as follows:" "That the Auditor of Public Accounts shall be required to pay the Louisiana Levee Company at the rate of fifty cents per cubic yard for all levees constructed, by said company after the first day of October, 1873," and for "all levees constructed by said company before the first day of October, 1873, * * * at the rate of sixty cents per cubic yard, as the existing contracts and laws provide." We seek but to obtain from the State the fulfillment of its contract stipulations.

It is said that the Levee Company has not the means to maintain the levee system, and therefore that its contract should be broken. The truth is that, if the state were in a condition to pay cash for all work done, our company could build any number of millions of yards annually for less than the present contract price. It is the State, and not our company, that is without the means to maintain the levee system. Our company is anxious that the United States should assume charge of levee construction and maintenance throughout the whole length of the Mississippi river, and is willing to yield all of its rights and privileges, so far as necessary to secure that end, to the General Government, if required to do so.

We entirely approve of the clause in the levee bill of the last Congress, which reads as follows:

"That the Secretary of War shall, after public advertisement, under the supervision of the said Chief of Engineers, let all work to be done by virtue of this act, and under this appropriation, to the lowest responsible bidder or bidders, and in no event shall the sum herein appropriated, or any part thereof, be applied to the payment of debts incurred by the local levee authorities, or to any other work than such as may be contracted for and constructed under the supervision of said Chief of Engineers."

We have no interests which are antagonistic to those of our fellow-citizens of Louisiana in this or any other respect. We claim that we have conferred a great benefit upon the public by maintaining the levees of Louisiana, so far as it was possible with the means available to maintain them, and so far as the State, the proprietor, has required them to be built and maintained during the past five years, which, as is now evident, was much beyond the State's ability promptly to pay for.

We have in all respects faithfully complied with the terms of our contract, and performed much more than of right we could or should have been required to do as such contractor or, in all we claim that in no particular have we deservedly forfeited the confidence and esteem of the public. It has become the fashion to abuse the Levee Company—to vilify, misrepresent and slander it without right, cause or reason. Popular clamor and prejudice seem to demand it, but, so far as we know, every investigation of its affairs has failed to justify or furnish any grounds for such abuse.

Certain it is that, until the General Government comes to the relief of Louisiana, no other method so economical to the taxpayer, for securing even the partial protection which along the State can provide for, can be devised. If the public think otherwise, we are willing to withdraw as soon as the indebtedness of the State to us for work done is liquidated.

I would now respectfully call public attention to the following resolution, unanimously adopted by the Board of Directors at their regular monthly meeting held November 9, 1875, as an expression of the views and purposes of this company:

"Whereas, The Louisiana Levee Company is unable to hold all the levees of the State out of the taxes assessed and collected for that purpose, more particularly as large amounts have been deducted from said collection to meet the current wants of the state, and as commissions to assessors and tax collectors, under a construction of the law deemed by us erroneous, and even in direct conflict with the act incorporating this company;

"And whereas, It is the desire of this Board that the United States Government shall take entire charge and control of all the levees of the State; be it, therefore,

"Resolved, That this Board will use all its influence to induce the General Government to assume control of all the levees of the State of Louisiana and, in case such action be taken by Congress, the Louisiana Levee Company will surrender all the rights, titles and franchises conferred upon it by the act incorporating said company, provided that the State of Louisiana makes a just and equitable settlement of the sums due said company at that date for repairs upon and construction of levees, as per contract."

JOHN HENDERSON,
President Louisiana Levee Company.

NOTE.—I am much in our attention has been called to the fact that an impression exists in the minds of many that the series of bonds known as "Levee" and "Special Levee" bonds were issued to this company, we beg leave to add, in addition to what is stated above, that no bonds of any description have ever been issued to or in favor of the Louisiana Levee Company.

Neither has any portion of the proceeds of such bonds figured to the benefit of or been paid to the Levee Company.

The taxes annually levied and collected for the "Levee" and "Special Levee" tax funds are used to pay interest on bonds issued anterior to the existence of the Levee Company, for levees constructed under the old Boards of Levee Commissioners, and the present Levee Company has nothing to do with the disbursement of said funds. The interest alone on said bonds has about equaled the present assessment of three mills for the annual construction and repairs of levees, under the contract with the Levee Company.

The first cost of levees, paid for in bonds under the old system was much higher than the price paid to our company, while the annual interest on the old bonds has been as much as is now paid to the company for levee work done. For instance, the State Treasurer, in his reports for 1872 and 1873, gives the amount of the annual assessment to pay interest on bonds issued for levee purposes anterior to the existence of the Levee Company at $567,530 per annum, an amount far in excess of the three mill tax annually received by the company. no25 1t

MEDICAL.

FOR FIFTY YEARS

SWAIM'S CELEBRATED PANACEA

HAS attracted the notice of the most eminent and leading members of the medical profession, in this country and Europe, by its great power and excellence in curing what were considered incurable cases of disease, where the patients have been almost destroyed by MERCURIAL, etc.; and Prof. VALENTINE MOTT, of the New York University, Profs. GIBSON, DEWEES and CHAPMAN, of Philadelphia, and many other physicians of celebrity and eminence, gave, over their own signatures, letters recommending it, and everything to its great merits. It has been occasionally advertised during this long period, and thousands of bundles throughout the United States recommend and use it. The Laboratory is under the direction of Dr. FRANKLIN STEWART, who has devoted his attention and skill in its careful preparation during the past twenty-five years, and not a bottle but one that is not worth ten times its cost to the patient. It is perfectly safe for the most diseased and debilitated, and will always relieve where it will not cure. In all Cases where the Blood is not Pure it should be Used Freely.

Prepared only at SWAIM'S LABORATORY, 113 S. Seventh St., below Chestnut, Philadelphia.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Berkshire Swine.

The Berkshire originated in Berkshire county, England. Originally they were a large breed of black, white and sandy-spotted colors, rather coarse in form, but far superior to the black and white breeds of the northern counties. It was by continual selections of the best and most uniform specimens in form and color, and also by the introduction of Essex blood, that the Berkshire was so refined that at the present day it is classed among the small breeds of swine. It is not, however, rare that 500 to 600 pounds is reached by some of the choicest animals.

While the White Chester and Suffolk breeds are the choice in some of the Northeastern States, the superior hardiness and freedom from disease of the Berkshires are fast giving them the preference even there; while in the Southern States and California the black breeds—Essex and Berkshires—are the only breeds generally considered worth raising, owing to the fact that the white-haired and white-skinned swine mange very badly by exposure to the sun, and are more liable to disease.

The main difference between the Essex and the Berkshire is that the Essex is finer-boned and finer-muscled, is not as strong in build, will make more lard at any given weight when fattened, but not so much pork. The Berkshire makes the best hams of any breed—just the right size, and with a proportion of fat and lean the most desirable.

Taken for all purposes, the Berkshire is reckoned by leading breeders of swine everywhere as the very best breed. There is no breed so free from disease, no breed that will make more pork on a given amount of food the first or second year. They improve any breed with which they may be crossed, and are so strong of constitution as to leave permanent traits of their own qualities when bred into other herds. It has been truly said that "for improving the common stock, or for raising pigs for market, there is no breed that will show better or more satisfactory results than a cross of a thoroughbred Berkshire boar on the large, coarse sows. Such a cross will get pigs that in nine months, if liberally fed, will weigh from 200 to 250 pounds, and will bring a higher price in the market per pound than a large, coarse hog weighing 400 or 500 pounds, and will not cost over one-fourth as much to produce it."

The small Essex will also be much improved by a cross with the Berkshire for stock purposes. We are not sure but the very best swine for our climate will yet be produced by judicious crossing between the thoroughbred Berkshire and pure Essex. It will at least improve the Essex for pork, and by combining the good qualities of both breeds by long and careful crossings, no doubt splendid results would be achieved. But at present the Berkshire is king.—California Stock Journal.

HARVESTING PEANUTS.—Seed dug after a heavy frost is not reliable. If dug before frost the vines make excellent fodder for cattle and horses, but the nuts are better filled and heavier if dug a few days after frost. To dig the nuts, use a one-horse Dixie plow, with peanut blade attached. We run plow deep enough under the plant, so as not to cut off the nuts—say five inches deep—using two horses to plow, and run one on each side of the row. We let a hand follow, lifting the vines and shaking the dirt off. Each hand can shake two rows. We throw the vines into heaps as we shake them, placing them carefully one on top of the other, for convenience in shocking. Six rows will make a shock row. In the shock row we drive stakes seven feet long, sharpened at both ends, and put the stakes down firmly, laying a fence rail on each side of the stakes. A stick of cord wood will make three blocks for the rails to rest on. A twelve-foot rail or pole is long enough for four shocks. Shocks should not touch each other. We let the hand that shocks them shake the vine again as he puts them up, round and round the stick, as high as he can reach, settling them well down, and putting on a cap of straw or hay—hay is the best. As much as possible the nuts should go next to the stick, and the vines should be so put on the shock as to shield the nuts from sun and rain. In about four weeks after digging the nuts will be cured enough for hand-picking.

WHICH ARE THE BEST LAYERS?—At a recent meeting of an agricultural association in New Hampshire the advantage of the poultry and egg department of the farm was presented in a strong light by the secretary. The revenue from this branch of farming was said to exceed that derived from the potato product of the State. A bushel of corn was said to produce nine pounds of live poultry. The amount of the product of a bushel of corn fed to hens for eggs was nine dozen. The manure from the perch was equivalent to guano, pound for pound, and would pay well for attendance of hens. The secretary said this industry would furnish profitable employment for men too infirm for field labor, and for women's active hands and busy minds. For the egg department, the non-sitters recommended were: Leghorns, Houdans and Black Spanish. Good layers were marked by single combs. Good layers were found in other breeds, but their product was small. The different varieties of hens, by experiment, were found to lay the following number of eggs yearly: Dunghills, 240; Brahmas, 240; Black Spanish, 120 to 160; Leghorns, 200; Hamburgs, 240; Houdans, 250. The secretary would feed moist food in the morning, and dry at night. The liability to disease should be prevented, as it might be, in a great degree, by care and attention.

The above contains some valuable hints for those who keep poultry for profit.—Moore's Rural.

THE following recipe for the prevention of moths is strongly recommended: Prepare a mixture of half a pint of alcohol, half a pint of spirits of turpentine, and two ounces of camphor. Shake thoroughly before using. The materials to be preserved are to be wrapped in linen, and pieces of blotting paper soaked in the liquid placed in the boxes with them. The supply of the liquid should be renewed once a year.

MEDICAL.

DUCONGE'S

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP.

NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound. Its well-established virtue and its high reputation in all ailments of the Chest, Lungs, Breast and Bowels is so well known, and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage, that it would be superfluous, at this late day, to dwell at any length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Bowels, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial in all Inflammatory disorders, such as Rheumatism, Diarrhœa or Dysentery and Summer Complaint, and especially in those cases of Cholerine which, for want of proper care, so often degenerate into confirmed Cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, verging on Consumption, it has been found most efficacious in preventing that most awful scourge whenever timely resorted to.

Besides its acknowledged certainty of cure, this truly extraordinary medicine has, over most compounds of the same nature, the decided advantage that, owing to its agreeable flavor, it can be administered without the least difficulty to children, and it requires no particular diet. It is also the cheapest, and only because the bottles contain more syrup than any other, but owing to its peculiar composition this Sirup will keep for years without fermenting, and it can be used in families whenever required by simply keeping the bottle well corked.

Directions for Taking the Sirup.—Grown persons can take from four to six spoonfuls in the course of the day, either pure or diluted in a little water, or a less quantity at intervals of three or four hours.

Persons much troubled during the night may take two tablespoonfuls of the Sirup on going to bed, when it will stop the cough and procure a good night's rest.

Children from three to five years old may take from four to six teaspoonfuls during the day, in suitable quantities, at intervals of three to four hours. For sale by

FROM ONE TO SIX HORSE.

THE MOST SUBSTANTIAL WAGONS MADE!

There are several reasons why all should buy the above Wagon: First. They are made of the BEST SELECTED TIMBER, the same being cut at the proper season of the year, piled under sheds, properly dated, and allowed to remain there from three to five years. Second. The wood-work is shaped by the latest improved machinery, put together by the BEST WAGON MECHANICS IN THE WORLD, and are the best ironed and painted Wagons in the market. Third. Their thimble skeins, made of select iron, are set by patent skein setters, and weigh from four to twenty-five pounds per set more than any other; thereby making a perfect running Wagon, which will not break. Fourth. They are the only Wagon in which the SLOPE-SHOULDER SPOKE is used; hence they have the best wheel, which is actually the foundation of the Wagon, and should be carefully examined by persons purchasing. Fifth. They are sold only by responsible parties, and every Wagon is warranted; while the Studebaker Bros. are practical workmen, and attend to their business personally; hence the superiority of their work over all others.

NEW PATENT TIDY FASTENER.—Seldom does it occur in the history of a new Invention that the manufacturers do not experience great difficulty in convincing their patrons of its merits, but our new Tidy Fastener seems to have filled a vacancy, as it were, to be the article wanted to make up the comforts of a well-regulated home.

We have spared neither time, labor nor expense in making it a first-class article, feeling assured that in so doing we shall merit a continuance of the confidence so generally reposed in us by a discriminating public.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals for the three days ending November 23:

Mississippi river and bayous	bales	22,662
Red river		1,667
Onachita river		784
Railroads		6,484
Lake		95
Mobile		793
Texas		3,933
Total		36,122

On Saturday, with nothing in the dispatches calculated to have any material influence, the market opened with only a moderate inquiry and light offerings of the kinds most in request; the movement consequently exhibited but little animation, barely 1,500 bales changing hands during the morning, but later in the day buyers came forward with increased spirit and took 4,900 bales, making an aggregate of 6,300 bales. On Monday the market opened with a fair inquiry and light offerings, especially of middling and the better qualities, and rather more stringent pretensions on the part of factors, which checked the movement. The sales amounted to 7,200 bales. On Tuesday operations were checked during the morning by brokers claiming concessions predicated on the heavy receipts, and a decline at New York of 1-16c. in spots and 1-32@3-32c. in futures, while factors adhered to their previous pretensions. The sales during the morning, nevertheless, reached 1,500 bales, after which the movement became more active, and swelled the entire business of the day to 7,100 bales. Prices exhibited some irregularity, middling and the higher grades maintaining their previous position, although showing rather less strength, but low middling and the poorer qualities ruling in favor of buyers, indicating a falling off of ⅛c. in strict ordinary and good ordinary, and of a partial ⅛c. in strict good ordinary and low middling.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 20,800 bales, against 22,550 for the corresponding time last week and 21,050 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 328,193 bales, against 272,438 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 147,809 bales. The increase by the reports per telegraph is 159,279—1,355,878 against 1,196,599. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 57,768 bales to France, of 95,238 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 51,357 to Great Britain. We quote:

Ordinary	10¼	10⅝
Strict ordinary	10⅝	10¾
Good ordinary	10⅞	11⅛
Strict good ordinary	11¼	11⅜
Low middling	11⅝	11⅞
Strict low middling	12	12⅛
Middling	12⅛	12⅜
Strict middling	12⅜	12⅝
Good middling	13	13⅛
Middling fair	13⅞	14

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. PUBLISHED BY ROBT. J. HARP, FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

VOL. 21. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 2. 1875. NO. 49.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

ST. LOUIS, November 23.—The Railroad Convention.—Col. Broadhead, chairman of the executive committee, called the convention to order. Dr. W. G. Elliot prayed, when Broadhead read the call, and stated in detail the object of the convention. Delegates were present from twenty-seven States, and thoroughly represented the various interests of their respective communities. The colonel read the bill granting a charter to the Texas Pacific road. He gave some statistics of the working of parts of the road already finished, and described the country through which the proposed road will run. Mayor Britton then welcomed the convention to St. Louis.

Gen. Anderson, of Richmond, was elected temporary chairman, and L. L. Walridge and D. H. McAdams, of St. Louis, secretaries. At this point Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, in response to general request, took a seat on the platform, and was greeted most cordially by Gen. Sherman, who advanced and shook hands with him very heartily, amidst the greatest applause from all parts of the house. Gen. Beauregard was then called up, and was received in the same warm and friendly manner. Mr. Davis was also invited forward, but declined.

NEW YORK, Nov. 24.—William B. Astor is dead, aged eighty-four. He has been in ill health for a long time; his death was not unexpected. During the course of his long life the value of the property bequeathed to him by his father has been constantly increasing, and it is almost impossible at present to estimate its value. It consists of real estate in all parts of the city, and is worth many millions of dollars. He will be buried on Saturday.

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 24.—Forty students were expelled from college for persisting in belonging to a secret society, against the orders of the faculty. Two-thirds of those expelled belong to the senior class.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., Nov. 27.—Ex-Gov. James English has been appointed United States senator, vice Ferry, deceased. The appointment of Ex-Gov. English as United States senator is very favorably received by both political parties.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 20.—The commission to examine the various surveys for the ship canal across the Isthmus of Darien have submitted their report to the President. They are of opinion, after full investigation, that the Nicaragua route is the best. They estimate that the canal, from the harbor Brite, on the Pacific, to Greytown, on the Atlantic, can be constructed at a cost not to exceed $66,000,000. There are objections of an almost insurmountable nature in all but the Panama and Nicaragua routes, and, notwithstanding its great length (one hundred and eighty-six miles,) they give the preference to it. Lake Nicaragua is on this route.

The canal commission, after alluding to the importance and feasibility of the canal, say it is now regarded as of the highest importance that the United States take some action at once to carry out the feasible plans of the ship canal in order to prevent either France or England from coming in and taking the honor and profit of this great enterprise. The commission consists of Gen. Humphreys, Capt. Patterson and Commodore Ammen.

FOREIGN.

SAN SEBASTIAN, Nov. 19.—The Carlist Gen. Miret is negotiating with the authorities of Puigcerda with a view to bringing about a truce. All the intelligence received here indicates that a settlement of the war is inevitable in consequence of the exhaustion and demoralization of the Carlists.

MADRID, Nov. 25.—An official dispatch from Gen. Queseda announces that Pampeluelia has been completely relieved. After fighting twelve battalions of the Carlists they were routed with heavy loss.

The Imparcial states that seven thousand persons in Spain, Cuba and the Philippine Islands will send goods to the Philadelphia exhibition.

The municipality of Victoria is preparing to receive King Alfonso, on his way to the front.

HENDAYE, Nov. 25.—Don Carlos has issued a proclamation exhorting his soldiers to an energetic resistance against the fresh attack of the northern army.

LONDON, Nov. 26.—The Times has reason to believe the British government has bought from the Khedive £4,000,000 of stock of the Suez Canal. The Egyptian government is authorized to draw on the Rothschilds at sight for the amount. This purchases one hundred and seventy-seven thousand of the four million shares.

The Times, in its financial article to-day, says in relation to the purchase by Great Britain of one hundred and seventy-seven thousand shares of Suez Canal stock that a breathing-time most essential to Egypt is secured. The value of the purchase to England is great, and probably will be taken by the public to mean more than it does. By buying the rest of the shares and paying the two loans raised by the company, amounting to £4,800,000, England would be possessed of the entire property.

LONDON, November 27.—A dispatch from Paris to the Morning Echo says the announcement of the sale of the canal shares to the British government caused a great sensation in Suez.

The purchase of the Suez Canal stock is heartily approved by the English press. There will be a meeting of the bondholders and others interested.

Liberia has resolved to send a deputation to the English foreign minister and to the American minister to England, with a view of obtaining aid for the republic in the present crisis.

The Prince of Wales visited Genoa yesterday.

MADRID, Nov. 27.—It is ascertained officially that negotiations with the United States are proceeding favorably, and the relations between the two countries may be regarded as excellent.

From the Work.

SOUTH BOSSIER CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We have found friends in abundance on South Bossier circuit. With the exception of our little boy's afflictions it has been a very pleasant year with us. We cannot grumble. We have not had any great revivals on our circuit, but have harvested some of the best material in the country. We have built one church complete. Rev. S. S. Scott, presiding elder of the Shreveport district, dedicated it on the first Sabbath of this month. After the services were over the congregation raised about $100 for support of pastors. Between $75 and $100 have been expended on the Fillmore church, which amount was raised by the influence and energy of one young lady who is a member. O for an army of such! A plan is on foot to have a third one repaired. You may think, from the above report, that the houses of worship are in a dilapidated condition. If so, you judge rightly.

Our fourth Quarterly Conference is over. Something over half the assessment was paid, with good promises for the rest. Sixteen adults have been added since our last quarterly meeting. Eleven children were baptized. There has been some improvement in the spiritual condition of the church. We refrain, as Conference is close by.

Sister Bryan, of Castor Valley, has presented us a nice turkey for a Christmas dinner. May all our brethren in the Louisiana Conference fare likewise. Who will follow her example and supply their pastor with a turkey for Christmas?

G. M. LIVERMAN.

FILLMORE, November 18, 1875.

FANNIN CT., MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We are now on our last round of appointments for the present Conference year. In some respects the year has been a pleasant, profitable one, as well as one of financial tightness—never more so in this country. Our missionary and Conference collections are quite small up to the present, and our own support remarkably slim.

The Fannin circuit, spiritually, is in rather a healthy condition, while the Sunday schools have done and are doing a good work for the church. Our protracted meeting at Shiloh was a grand success. Seventy accessions and eighteen conversions were the result of this meeting. I am under obligations to Bro. W. H. Leith, who aided me faithfully and efficiently. We had accessions and conversions at other points on the circuit, amounting in all to about fifty accessions and twenty-five conversions during the year. To God be all the praise.

We are now looking forward for better times in Mississippi. The change of our politics and State government will of necessity bring about a reduction of the burdensome taxation under which our people have been laboring, and which has paralyzed our efforts and energies in all our business avocations for the past ten years. From this time we hope to see all the interests of the church fully met and her great claims liquidated. May the great Head of the church hasten the period when our people shall learn the spirit and genius of our beloved Methodism, and contribute largely of their means and substance to support her institutions. Fraternally,

W. W. HURST, P. C.

FANNIN, November 20, 1875.

SUMMIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Another Conference year is fast drawing to a close. The year foots up rather favorably in this part of our Conference. I will give you an outline of what the Lord has done for us in Summit circuit. We have received into the church, by letter and by baptism, thirty members; have witnessed about twenty conversions. There have been some new family altars erected. We hope to be able to report our assessments all paid by Conference. We are canvassing earnestly for the ADVOCATE.

Your brother in Christ,

IRA B. ROBERTSON, P. C.

NOVEMBER 26, 1875.

From Oregon

MR. EDITOR: Again I write you from the northwest Pacific slope. Of course it is now useless to say that the Columbia Conference, at the appointed time, went through the business and adjourned; and we are all in the Master's great field once more. Bishop Kavanaugh was in the chair, and filled it with his usual acceptability.

On Sabbath the new church was dedicated, and the Bishop gave the crowded audience one of his very best sermons. This church is at Albany, where the Conference met. Bro. T. B. White deserves credit for adding this neat house of worship to the trophies of the cross in this arduous field. The Bishop preached at different points in the bounds of the Conference, and always with power. The regret was that he remained so short a time with us—a few weeks only. O that we had a Bishop who lived on this coast! Then we could have him at our camp meetings and District Conferences, as well as at the annual gathering of the church here through her leading officials. Our Northern brethren understand the importance of this work, and hence they have all this thing arranged; and their Bishop can spend months in this State and its mountainous suburbs, infusing life and power into their whole body. To-day they number not less than five thousand; while we on the same ground cannot count much over one thousand members. Now I do not take the position that this great difference is owing chiefly to the faithfulness of their Bishops to the work; but I do say that it is so in a very great measure. If a preacher attend his work diligently, will it not be stronger in every way than if he were to neglect it? And will not this apply to the work of a Bishop, which is only a larger circuit? It is said at some points here that the golden opportunity of our church in this State was unimproved and lost. This was about the time of the war.

We all love Bishop Kavanaugh, and feel that he is one of the grandest of men as a man, and as a preacher of Jesus and the resurrection. We indulge, too, a hope that he may come back to us from the gold State before he recrosses the plains for his home in Kentucky.

It has been suggested more than once that the two churches west of the Rocky mountains unite, and thus get rid of the presence and expense of at least one Bishop, a large number of starved-out parsonages and preachers, and much bitter feeling. Now, sir, I love a union, a fraternal union, of all Christians, of whatever faith or order; and the more sincere and simple the better and more lasting. Of course, then, I believe in such a relation between the two great Methodisms of the land, not only west but also east of the Rocky mountains. But beyond this I am not willing to go. In fact I stand with both hands up in earnest, solemn and continued opposition to any organic union between us, whether east or west, or on both sides of the mountains.

I am not prepared to be a member of a political church, because I am not ready to acknowledge slavery to be wrong in principle, for then I would oppose the word of God on the subject; because I am not prepared to wipe out every distinction of race or color in our schools, churches, legislative halls, Conferences and family circles; "for God is not the author of confusion." Besides all this, I am not willing to indorse all their official acts against us. No! no! No organic union for me. But let us cultivate all that fraternal spirit, and work for the same great end—the salvation of the world—in the name of "him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood."

Our winter rains have set in—falling now, slowly but ominously. Our people generally are ready to receive the wet season—one class excepted, which is not ready; and would you guess any other but the preacher? Many of us are not ready—our winter's wood is not under the shed, our supplies are still in the hands of the merchant, and our pocket-book empty. And yet God cares for his people, and in some way provision is made. But do we not frequently get sick at heart at the indifference of the stewards who have charge of the Master's goods, and who have been commanded to fill every order without delay? We lived nearly two weeks lately on "war rations" (scant ones too,) in this land of abundance, because of this very thing. O when shall the wheels of a preacher's support move without all this terrible friction, which is loud enough to be heard far and wide, and which jars heavily every worshiping ear?

Our State election for Congressman, in place of a deceased member, is past. I believe the State cast a Democratic vote.

If our beautiful Willamette valley were in your State it would be classed as one of Louisiana's richest swamps—low and marshy, very soft and miry in the wet season, hard and dry in the summer.

Wild fowl are very abundant. Every house now is freighted with these annual visitors to our valley from the extreme north; and, though fat and juicy, I find quite a number of people here who will not eat them—literally throw geese and ducks away after taking their feathers.

Short Bits (Dimes.)—Eight of them make a dollar in this State—four to every half dollar. Of course it's all coin; scarcity of change is said to be the reason.

HARRISBURG, ORE., November 6, 1875.

MOODY AND SANKEY IN PHILADELPHIA.—The building fitted up for the revival services conducted by Messrs. Moody and Sankey in Philadelphia is an immense structure, 362 feet in length by 248 in width, and was formerly used as a freight depot. It is bounded by Market street on the north, Thirteenth street on the east, and Juniper street on the west. From its vast area a strip thirty-three feet wide has been cut off on three sides, and these portions of the building will form vestibules. Facilities for entrance and exit are ample, there being a number of wide doors on each of the sides of the building. The auditorium is capable of seating, with comfort, 8,000 persons, or even more. The entire cost of fitting up the house and seating it is estimated at $20,000. The committee has, therefore, announced that contributions may be sent directly to their treasurer, Mr. John R. Whitney, at places designated, or to either of its members.

Arrangements are completed for securing from the various churches 300 Christian men, to act as ushers during the meetings—fifty or more to be in attendance at each meeting.

A class of "Christian workers," to be under the care of the ministerial committee, for use in the meetings, has been organized. Each pastor of the city was, by circular, requested to forward the names of suitable persons of either sex who were willing to join this class. A committee of four ministers and two laymen, with Rev. Richard Newton, D. D., as its chairman, has charge of the class. The meetings opened with crowded congregations on Sunday last.—New York Christian Advocate.

THE engineers of the New Orleans and Texas Pacific are somewhere between Mansfield and Bayou Pierre. We have not learned certainly where they are, except that they run one line out to within twelve miles of this point, and returned to the bottom to bring up another line. They will reach Mansfield in the course of two or three days. The work on the road is progressing as favorably as its most sanguine friends could hope.

Capt. Bill West has been working for three weeks on Bayou Pierre, with a force of hands, in the interest of the Bayou Pierre Navigation Company. He reports the Bayous Pierre and Winsey cleaned out thoroughly of all the logs and snags that impede navigation, as far up as Marcelile, and that there will be good navigation in the bayou as soon as we have thirty inches rise in the river. He also reports the river and lakes lower than in 1872, down here, which must be attributable to the clearing out of Old river, and allowing the water to pass off too rapidly, and notwithstanding the very low water there has never been less than thirty inches on the Bayou Pierre falls.—Mansfield Reporter, November 13.

THE Memphis Appeal, in noticing the acceptance by Hon. Jefferson Davis of the presidency of the American department of the Mississippi Valley Society, of London, says:

"The object of this movement is to direct attention to the development of the commercial, agricultural and mineral resources of the valley of the Mississippi. Mr. Davis will devote his energies to the work in this country and Europe, making his headquarters at New Orleans. We congratulate the Mississippi Valley Society on the result of their long-pending negotiations, and predict as a result of Mr. Davis' presidency the entire success of its schemes for the revolution of the trade of the Mississippi valley."

Books and Periodicals.

CARTOONS. By Margaret J. Preston. Boston: Roberts Bros., 1875.

This is a volume of real poetry. Mrs. Preston's merits as a poet have been recognized for years. Many of her pieces have been given to the public through the periodical press. A volume of her poems, "Old Song and New," was published in 1870. Cartoons exhibits much the same qualities of genuine poetic feeling and cultured taste that were so manifest in Old Song and New. That the latter is better we can hardly say, but it is equal, and abounds in gems of purest ray. Our Southern readers will be specially pleased with "The Shade of the Trees," commemorating the well-known words of the dying Confederate hero, and "Through the Pass," referring to the last words of Matthew F. Maury. We give a couple of stanzas from the latter:

Stars lit new pages for him; seas
Revealed the depths their waves were screening:
The ebbs gave up their mysteries,
The tidal flows confessed their meaning.

Of ocean paths, the tangled clew
He taught the nations to unravel;
And mapped the track where safely through
The lightning-footed thought might travel.

GEMS OF ENGLISH SONG.—A collection of very choice songs, duets and quartets, with accompaniments for piano-forte or reed organ. Price, $2.50 in boards, $3 in cloth, $4 fine gilt for presents. Ditson & Co. are in the field with their holiday music-book, which will be reckoned among the most acceptable of presents to be given to a musical friend. There are about seventy-five pieces. Among them we notice Gounod's "Sing, Smile, Sleep," his "Ring on, Sweet Angelus," and his "Nazareth." Campana contributes "Do You Remember," and others. Lachner, "Ueberall Du." Smart, "The Sunny Rhine Land." Abt, "Like the Lark;" and others. Randegger, "Nothing Like a Freshening Breeze." Allen, "I Love My Love in the Morning." Lady Scott, "Douglas, Tender and True." Boott, "Break, Break;" and Sullivan, Pinsuti, Barnby, Howe, Lyle, and a few more, some of their best efforts.

THE synod of Mississippi met in New Orleans on November 10. Respecting the meeting the Southwestern Presbyterian says:

The meeting of the synod was not as largely attended as we hoped it would be. We looked for eighty members at least, and did not have more than sixty. Hard times is held responsible for the deficiency. Those who were in attendance, however, belonged to the tribe of workers, and the interest of the meeting was sustained to the close.

A pleasing feature of the occasion was the visit of our secretaries of education and foreign missions. Dr. McIlwaine presented the cause of foreign missions, sustentation, evangelistic work, and the invalid and relief funds, with great force and impressiveness. Dr. Waddell gave a lucid and strong address on the interest of the work of educating young men for the ministry. The effect of their visit, we think, will be most valuable to the interests they represent, besides increasing our regard for them personally, as faithful and able, and worthy of all confidence. Their visit was a very welcome one to our people, and will be remembered with satisfaction. Several items of the business of this meeting deserve attention. The synod adjourned on Saturday.

AN ITALIAN CHURCH IN NEW YORK.—A new Italian Protestant Episcopal church has been organized in this city, the services of which are held each Sunday, at four P. M., in St. Ambrose Episcopal church, corner of Prince and Thompson streets. October 31, Bishop Potter, assisted by several of his clergy, and in the midst of considerable show of ceremonials, confirmed eighty-four Italians. The singing was conducted by three hundred Italian voices. In an earnest address Rev. Mr. Stander exhorted his brethren of Italy to keep that primitive faith which had once made Italy the mistress of the nations; to abandon forever the Tridentine and Vatican innovations, which had broken asunder the body of Christ; and to cling steadfastly to the faith and the liturgy of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, which he insisted alone kept herself exempt from change and corruption in her dogmas.—New York Christian Advocate.

All members who expect to bring their wives will confer a favor by giving me immediate notice.

AN AUTUMN THOUGHT.

BY S. J. HAWKINS.

Like the depths of the wood when October is cold,
By the sting of the frost turned to purple and gold,
Are the virtues of heart, sad and tender, that owe
All their beauty and brightness to sorrow and woe.

Like the pine on the mountain, unchanged by the frost,
When the beech-tree and maple their verdure have lost,
As the heart of a friend that is steadfast and true
When the tears of misfortune our pathway bedew.

Like sere leaves whirl'd by Autumn's wild, eddying blast,
On which Beauty shall ne'er place his signet again,
Is remembrance of love too inconstant to last;
But not thus pure friendship which still doth remain.

Christian Perfection.

MR. EDITOR: We had a Baptist preacher (once a Methodist) to preach for us last Sabbath. He found his text in the wilderness, he dragged the "children of Israel" to and fro in the wilderness, he left his subjects (the true Israel) in the wilderness, and they will doubtless remain in the wilderness so long as they have such a leader to lead them out of the wilderness. His whole argument from beginning to end—a shaft at Methodism or "Christian perfection"—was to prove by the children of Israel, journeying in the wilderness, living in idolatry and open rebellion against God, that it was right and proper, and in accordance with the will of God.

A more superficial effort I never witnessed. Such illogical reasoning, too, to disprove the doctrine of "Christian perfection," so explicitly taught in the word of God, and so little preached nowadays by Methodists. I moved to this place last November. I found the Baptists predominant, and, strange to say, not one Methodist did I find who believed in fact that perfection is attainable now. Having been led by the Spirit, I began to urge upon every one the importance and necessity of living up to the requirements of God's word, and attaining to those heights of grace we find described in the Bible and enjoyed by thousands. The doctrine of "Christian perfection" is very unpopular, especially among those who hold to "final perseverance;" hence you see what gave rise to the above sermon. I am scattering "higher life" and "holiness" tracts all over the country, and by the grace of God I intend to do all that I can to raise the standard of Christianity, for the line of distinction between the church and the world is very nearly rubbed out.

I will tell you what the Lord has done for me. I was not fully awakened on the subject of religion till about the first of January, 1873. I saw the necessity of being a true Christian. I set out in earnest for salvation. I sought the Lord with all my heart till the work was done. God pardoned my sins; there was no condemnation. I cannot tell when nor where this blessed work was done, nor do I care to know much about that. The great question for me to settle is not when I was converted, but am I converted. Thank God I can say of a truth: I am converted. I am as conscious of peace with God as I am that my body is warm; and while God is no respecter of persons, he is a respecter of the service done him, and a rewarder of those who diligently seek him. In the summer following my conversion I became convicted that there was a higher life for me to attain. I wrote to Bro. William Baker, editor of the Home Altar—a monthly devoted exclusively to Christian perfection—to send me a few copies, that I might inspect it before subscribing. When it came I saw directly that it contained the very food my soul needed. The many experiences and the logical reasoning this valuable little journal contained to prove "Christian perfection" attainable in this life increased my hunger, and I therefore put on the whole armor of God, and made holiness my theme, endeavoring to walk in newness of life. I can say I am "buried with him in baptism"—not water, but spiritual baptism. Oh, what peace I have at times! My heart is strangely warm every day, and for the last few days I have had a plenitude of his Spirit, giving me much peace. I intend to serve the Lord with a perfect heart and a willing mind all my days; for most assuredly the more I serve him the nearer I get, and the more I talk about Jesus, and work for God, the greater my own pathway shines. Hence the common-sense conclusion that to be religious is to practice religion.

I have before me a letter from a presiding elder to a young preacher, both in the West, in which there is no uncertain sound. The elder says: "It rejoices my heart to hear of your success in winning souls for Christ. Oh, it is better than anything else. I would rather live on bread and water, and be assured that I would at last have my crown full of soul-stars, than to have all that this world can yield, and wear at last a starless crown." After relating his experience from conversion to perfect love he says: "I told it to the church; I kept telling it and preaching it until the Nazarite fanaticism broke out, and I conscientiously refrained from saying anything about it, and for a time lost the dear light. But now for three months I have again walked in the full, rich light." Dr. Deems said recently: "The doubting, hesitating and uncertain 'don't know' and 'hope so' statements which have been made in many pulpits and by many professors of religion, have been and still are producing their legitimate results." We want a positive, practicable religion—the church needs it, especially our ministers. The Lord give us living examples, known and read of all men, of the power of holiness. Mr. Wesley says: "You can never speak too strongly or explicitly upon the head of 'Christian perfection.' If you speak only faintly and indirectly, none will be offended and none profited. But if you speak out, although some will probably be angry, yet others will soon find the power of God unto salvation." The minister who preaches this Bible-cheering doctrine will have an uphill business for a time, because of its unpopularity; yet it is unquestionably the only doctrine that is calculated to lead the church out of the wilderness and convert the world.

I would like to know by what process a man can get to heaven, where Jesus is, without having a heart, even in this life, as pure and as clean as his was. I know his blood cleanseth, "I know my Redeemer liveth," and I say emphatically that it is the privilege of every one to become as pure in heart as was our "Faultless Pattern;" or, in other words, as pure in heart as angels in heaven, or those who have washed their robes in the blood of the Lamb. Pray where did this wonderful cleansing or washing take place? Certainly while on earth below. We cannot discharge life's duties without this miraculous cleansing. We cannot live prepared for death without it, and there is no heaven without it. To be pure in heart is simply to be prepared for heaven, or fit subjects for heaven; and to be fit subjects for heaven is to be as pure as those who have "washed their robes in the blood of the Lamb." I cannot see it in any other light, and if I am not sound in the faith I would be pleased to hear from some brother who is now "perfect in love." Yours in Christ,

J. A. GIDDENS.

The Alabama Conference.

REMINISCENCES.

In the first communication sent you the promise was made that in the next the members of the Conference who were in it a quarter of a century ago would receive some special notice. Of the twenty spoken of who are now in connection with the body, attention will first be directed to those who are superannuated.

Zaccheus Dowling entered the South Carolina Conference in December, 1815, and of course he has been an itinerant preacher about sixty years. He rendered very efficient service in various appointments in South and North Carolina, being stationed one year in Charleston. In 1829 he was sent as presiding elder to the Tallahassee district. The appointments embraced in that district were Tallahassee, Leon, Quincy, Chattahoochee, Holmes' Valley, Early mission, Pensacola mission and Escambia mission. This was an extensive field, and nearly all of it on the pioneer order. On this work he spent four years in succession, and then transferred to the Alabama, and was very abundant in labors in this Conference, from the gulf to the mountains, up to December, 1857. Since that time he has held the superannuated relation. Bro. Dowling possesses many of the traits and characteristics of the early Methodist preachers—full of energy and zeal, noted for fidelity and loyalty to Episcopal Methodism, and always ready to combat doctrines not in full accord with Wesleyan theology. He resides in Dale county, Ala., and must be over fourscore years old. It is hoped the Rev. Moses E. Butt, his presiding elder, and the Rev. Angus Dowling, his relative and pastor, will interest themselves in collecting from this venerable servant of the church such materials as might be useful data for the history of Methodism in Alabama.

Elias W. Story was admitted on trial in the Georgia Conference in December, 1836. He traveled three years in that Conference, and then transferred to Alabama; and up to January, 1851, was eight years effective, one year superannuated, and one supernumerary. At the session of 1851 he was placed on the superannuated list, and has held that relation ever since. Bro. Story is a man of remarkable industry, and very decided and ardent in his religious character. His home is in Macon county, Ala. If his presiding elder, the Rev. Dr. William A. McCarty, would do so, he might gather from this aged man incidents about which he could write with as much interest as he did in his elaborate papers on the subject of "Education by the State." Or his pastor, the Rev. Daniel M. Hudson, could draw upon him for facts that would enable him to interest the masses of our people as he did savants and divines in his learned articles on "Booke." Alabama has too much prestige as a Conference not to have at least a niche in the history of Methodism in the South.

Charles Strider became a traveling preacher in Alabama in January, 1837, and has been an itinerant for thirty-nine years. More than thirty of these have been spent in the active duties of the ministry. From the Chattahoochee river to Mississippi, and from the mountains into the fertile prairies, he has gone in obedience to episcopal authority. He served large circuits and missions, and was for four years presiding elder and in labors abundant on the Blountsville district. This unostentatious and devoted servant of the Master has been very intimately and usefully connected with many of the Methodists of the Alabama Conference. He is now superannuated, and lives in or near Summerfield, Ala. The Revs. A. J. Briggs and R. S. Woodward, who sustain to him the relation of presiding elder and pastor, could possibly gather some valuable and instructive information from one who has traveled over so much of our Conference territory. As the writer desires to continue the series, and has but a paucity of information in reference to some to whom he may wish to direct attention, any facts or incidents in the lives of any will be gladly received.

IN MEMORIAM.

LITTLE OLLIE MONTGOMERY.

BY L. R. P. M.

Would we call her back, our darling,
Oh, mourning mother, say,
To the bitter pain of living,
The travail of to-day,
She who is now at rest?

Safe from the thorny perils
Lurking upon our way,
Safe from our darkened passions,
In that blessed, endless day—
Safe upon Jesus' breast.

If we thought her fair and stainless
And thought her pure as snow,
And robed her dainty little form
With care, and loved it so,
Think how much fairer now!

Think how much purer and how sweet
Is little Ollie there,
Blessed by the gracious touch of God,
Without one troubled care
Upon her crowned brow!

Waiting with patient hope to greet
Each dear one on that shore
Where sorrow cease, and happy hearts
Are parted never more.
Lift up your tear-wet eyes,

And dry them in the light of love
That shines so full and clear,
Up to our lost and precious child,
She whom we held so dear
Waits for us in the skies.

CUTTING A DIDO.—This is a phrase older than most people imagine. Do you call to mind the story of Dido, Princess of Tyre? Her husband, Acerbas, priest of Hercules (so runs the legend,) was murdered for his wealth by the King Pygmalion, brother to Dido. The widowed princess succeeded so well in hiding her sorrow that she was enabled to escape from Tyre, bearing with her the wealth of her husband, and accompanied by a number of disaffected nobles.

After a variety of adventures they landed upon the coast of Africa, where Dido bargained with natives for as much land as she could inclose in a bull's hide. Selecting a large, tough hide, she caused it to be cut into the smallest possible threads, with which she inclosed a large tract of country, on which the city of Carthage began to rise.

The natives were bound by the letter of their bargain, and allowed the cunning Queen to have her way; and after that, when any one had played off a sharp trick they said he had "cut a Dido." That was almost three thousand years ago, and the saying has come down to our day.—Ladies' Repository.

AN Episcopalian writer in a Welsh paper, reviewing the "Life and Speeches of Dean Cotton," says: "None but those who knew the 'Dead See' of Bangor before it was galvanized into life by the present Bishop can have any idea of its woeful condition seventy years ago, when it is veritably recorded that 'a parish clerk in Lleyn gave his rector notice, saying that, as he was getting to be an old man, it was time to think about the saving of his soul, and so he was going to join the Methodys.'"

WHEN they build a railroad the first thing they do is to break ground. This is often done with great ceremony. Then they break the stockholders. This is done without ceremony.

IF YOU are ever in doubt as to whether a thing be right or wrong, consider whether you can do it in the name of Jesus, and ask God's blessing upon it.

OBITUARIES.

MRS. MARY ELVIRA SPIGENER.

Mary Elvira Spigener (nee Ramsey) was born in the State of Georgia, June 23, 1825; was married to Col. L. Spigener, August 13, 1848, and died at her residence near Prattville, Ala., September 29, 1875.

Filled up, as it was, with acts of devotion to God and deeds of kindness to man, the life of this excellent woman was in no sense a failure. Her death is mourned as a great bereavement not only to her family, but to the church and the community. A careful "keeper at home," attending promptly to the daily routine of domestic duty, she won, without seeking it, the esteem of her neighbors, and made her home a delight to her husband and children. By nature endowed with a spirit at once amiable and resolute, she pursued her plans, when once made, with a quiet but fixed purpose. Mild without timidity, self-reliant without boastfulness, prudent but not fearful, she was one of those persons whose characters are best described by saying they were well balanced. Her religious life expressed itself in traits similar to these; for grace, to which she yielded herself in the fifteenth year of her age, taking up and appropriating these natural elements, worked them into a Christian character of remarkable consistency and energy. Unless kept away unavoidably, she was never missed from her place at the meetings of the church. She loved God's house and people, was kind to the poor, good to the afflicted.

She was an active member of the Prattville Sunday school for twenty-three years, and delighted in the work of a teacher. Without much profession of either joyous or despondent feelings, she thus pursued her way, her light being one "that shineth brighter and brighter to the perfect day." The alternating experiences of trial, defeat and victory, of disappointment and realization, of sorrow and joy common to life, together with the Spirit and grace of Christ, worked in her a refinement of soul unconscious to herself, but clearly perceptible to others, and made her meet for the inheritance of the saints in light.

The scenes of her death-chamber were truly heavenly. Feeling assured that the time of her departure was at hand, she called her children and gave them her dying testimony to the power of the grace of God over death, and delivered her last charges and instructions to them as they stood related to each other by age and sex. Bro. Spigener was at the time in a distant State on business. This was a great trial to her soul, but she gained the victory, and left for him words of cheer and consolation. For a soul in such a frame to depart was an easy thing, for her "life was hid with Christ in God," and her true inheritance was awaiting her beyond the river. She "is not dead, but sleepeth."

"Asleep in Jesus! Oh, how sweet
To be for such a slumber meet!
With holy confidence to sing
That death hath lost his venomed sting."

J. W. RUSH.

MARY ELIZA GRAHAM, wife of W. W. Graham, and daughter of John Green, was born in East Feliciana parish, La., January 3, 1846, and departed this life October 29, 1875.

Left motherless when but a few days old, the deceased was reared by an aunt and stepmother, who bestowed upon her the care and affection of a loving mother, and who in return received every mark of filial devotion. The proof of this filial love was striking even in her last moments. A few hours before the angel of death called her, when asked if she had any request to make, she thought only of the aged stepmother, whose anguish she knew so well. She turned a look of tenderness upon the heart-crushed husband and said: "Take care of mother!" A devout, zealous member of the Methodist Church, her conduct in every respect was that of an exemplary Christian—kind, affable and charitable. Mrs. Graham had been a resident of Morehouse parish, La., about nine months. She came here a stranger, but in so short a space of time she had gathered around her many, many friends. Her genial manners, kindness of heart and many noble traits of character soon won for her the love and esteem of all who knew her; for truly: "To know was to love her." All who had the pleasure of an acquaintance with her feel that they have lost a friend. They will miss her genial companionship; but more particularly will she be missed by the loving group that once surrounded her home fireside. The devoted husband and fond father, when their cares and labors of the day are over, as they turn their steps homeward, will miss the bright smile, the words of welcome that made their home a haven of bliss. The loving mother too, as she sits in the lonely home that Mary Eliza adorned and beautified, will miss the gentle step, the low, musical laugh, and the words of affection that flowed so freely.

A FRIEND.

LAURA L., wife of Col. H. J. Reid, died on the seventh and was buried on the eighth of November, 1875, at Black Hawk, Miss., being the fifteenth anniversary of their marriage. Her maiden name was Spann. She was born in Georgia, February 6, 1840, reared in Mississippi, and was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1871. She was a quiet Christian; hence her exulting at the last seemed surprising. She had enjoyed but few church privileges for some time, living some distance from the church, and having five small children. She reminded me of one of Bunyan's personages—quiet through life, but exhibited great faith in the joyful exultation in crossing the Jordan. She suffered with consumption more than a year, and her mother-in-law and sisters-in-law bear testimony that they never saw more patience and resignation. She was "perfected through suffering." Her greatest trouble seemed her husband's grieving. She would frequently say: "Sister, don't, please don't weep—sing." And while they sang she would rejoice, though in a whisper, as her voice had failed. Then she was delighted to have them read hymns, and feasted upon the psalms and the discourses of Jesus in St. John. Her memory seemed remarkable. She had a word for every one. To some whom she had not seen for years she sent urgent messages of love. When it was evident that her end was nigh she bid them all farewell, and then said: "Sing, 'Father, I stretch my hands to thee,'" etc. While singing, among other things she said: "I see the angels;" and ere the hymn was ended she was gone. A lady who was present said: "I have heard of Christians dying—seen them pass away—but never anything like this." We have scarcely given an outline.

J. L. FUTRELL.

BENJAMIN F. FARGESON was born in Virginia, May 24, 1810, and died at his residence in DeSoto parish, Louisiana, September 3, 1875. Bro. Fargeson moved from Virginia to Holmes county, Miss., when a young man, where he with his wife soon after joined the Methodist Church, in which he lived an efficient and useful member until his death, though for the last few years of his life he was deprived of the privilege of attending on public worship on account of great affliction and suffering. He moved with his family to Louisiana in 1858, where his wife died during the late war, leaving him with five little children to care for. He lived to see them all grow up to man and womanhood, receiving from them at all times that tender care and sympathy that characterize all those who are raised up in the way they should go. Bro. Fargeson bore up under his afflictions with wonderful Christian fortitude, ever bowing in humble submission to the will of him who doeth all things well. Only a few weeks before his death, while on a visit to see him, he told me his troubles were all past—that he had nothing to do but to keep his house in order, and wait with patience the summons of death. He assured me that his hope was brightening every day. His whole conversation was about heaven and heavenly things. The summons has come, and he has crossed the flood, we believe and trust, to the enjoyment of that eternal rest that remaineth to the people of God.

J. B. CASSITY.

CARRIE VANDERHILT HAND was suddenly snatched from the loved embrace of devoted parents on the sixth of October, 1875, aged four years, less fourteen days.

Little Carrie was the youngest child of S. P. and M. A. Hand, of Sumter county, Ala., and was the light and joy of the household. On the fatal evening of her death she left the side of her mother, in perfect health and fine spirits, to take a ride in a wagon, and was very soon brought back in the arms of her father, crushed by a wheel, and lived only about two hours.

She was a child of unusual promise. Amiable in her disposition and ardent in her attachments, she ever rendered her little friends happy when present, and had a message of love to send them when absent. Although so young, she was fond of the Sunday school and church, and felt quite grieved when she could not attend. All the lovely traits which so much adorn female character seemed to be clustering and blooming in her heart; but these charms did not screen her little form from death. He came—came suddenly—and clipped the bud on earth, that it might bloom in heaven.

J. M. PATTON.

SARAH G. MOORE, consort of Dr. Samuel M. Grigsby, deceased, was born in North Carolina—time not known. She was the second wife of Dr. Grigsby, and was married to him in 1858. She joined the Methodist Protestant Church in 1855, and lived a consistent Christian till her death, faithful in her religious duties, and a regular attendant at church as long as she was able to get there; but age and infirmity had deprived her of that privilege for a year or two before her death. She fell quietly asleep in the arms of Jesus on the twenty-seventh of September, 1875, at the residence of Capt. J. Y. Webb, in Minden, La.

She had no well-developed disease. Her physical constitution just wore out, and sank under the weight of years. Another aged pilgrim has "crossed over the river, and rests under the shade of the tree of life." May we all be faithful and meet her there. God bless her relatives and friends.

BE THOU TRUE.

Care not what others say—
Be thou true!
If they gossip to betray,
Be thou true!
Be consistent and do right,
For the truth make a good fight;
Do what thou dost with all thy might;
Be thou true! Be thou true!

Let thy love be sincere—
Be thou true!
Only God hast thou to fear—
Be thou true!
Since our joys must pass away
Like the dew-drops or the spray,
Wherefore should our sorrows stay?
Be thou true! Be thou true!

Friendship's very hard to find—
Be thou true!
True love is not always blind—
Be thou true!
Time at last makes all things straight;
Let us not resent—just wait—
But not trust too much in fate,
Be thou true! Be thou true!

The Faculty of Impromptu Speech.

You are all convinced that the ability which we are considering must be a priceless possession for a minister. Did we hear a single heart whisper: "I wish I had it, for then I should have no need to study so arduously?" Ah! then you must not have it; you are unworthy of the boon, and unfit to be trusted with it. If you seek this gift as a pillow for an idle head you will be much mistaken; for the possession of this noble power will involve you in a vast amount of labor in order to increase and even to retain it. It is like the magic lamp in the fable, which would not shine except it was well rubbed, and became a mere dim globe as soon as the rubbing ceased. What the sluggard desires for the sake of ease, we may, however, covet for the best of reasons.

If a man would speak without any present study, he must usually study much. This is a paradox, perhaps, but its explanation lies upon the surface. If I am a miller, and I have a sack brought to my door, and am asked to fill that sack with good fine flour within the next five minutes, the only way in which I can do it is by keeping the flour-bin of my mill always full, so that I can at once open the sack, fill it and deliver it. I do not happen to be grinding at that time, and so far the delivery is extemporary; but I have been grinding, and so have the flour to serve out to the customer. So, brethren, you must have been grinding, or you will not have the flour. You will not be able to extemporize good thinking unless you have been in the habit of thinking and feeding your mind with abundant and nourishing food. Work hard at every available moment. Store your minds very richly, and then, like merchants with crowded warehouses, you will have goods ready for your customers, and, having arranged your good things upon the shelves of your mind, you will be able to hand them down at any time without the laborious process of going to market, sorting, folding and preparing. I do not believe that any man can be successful in continuously maintaining the gift of extemporaneous speech except by ordinarily using far more labor than is usual with those who write and commit their discourses to memory. Take it as a rule, without exception, that to be able to overflow spontaneously you must be full.

Good impromptu speech is just the utterance of a practiced thinker—a man of information, meditating on his legs, and allowing his thoughts to march through his mouth into the open air. Think aloud as much as you can when you are alone, and you will soon be on the high road to success in this matter.

If you are happy enough to acquire the power of extemporary speech, pray recollect that you may very readily lose it. I have been struck with this in my own experience, and I refer to that because it is the best evidence that I can give you. If for two successive Sundays I make my notes a little longer and fuller than usual, I find on the third occasion that I require them longer still; and I also observe that if on occasions I lean a little more to my recollection of my thoughts, and am not so extemporaneous as I have been accustomed to be, there is a direct craving and even an increased necessity for precomposition. If a man begins to walk with a stick merely for a whim, he will soon come to require a stick; if you indulge your eyes with spectacles they will speedily demand them as a permanent appendage; and if you were to walk with crutches for a month, at the end of the time they would be almost necessary to your movements, although naturally your limbs might be as sound and healthy as any man's. Ill uses create an ill nature. You must continually practice extemporizing; and if, to gain suitable opportunities, you should frequently speak the word in cottages, in the school-rooms of our hamlets, or to two or three by the wayside, your profiting shall be known unto all men.

Above all things beware of letting your tongue outrun your brains. Guard against a feeble fluency, a garrulous proiness, a facility of saying nothing. What a pleasure it is to hear of a brother breaking down who presumed upon his power to keep on when he really had nothing to say! May such a consummation come to all who err in that direction. My brethren, it is a hideous gift to possess, to be able to say nothing at extreme length.—Spurgeon's "Lectures to My Students."

Merchandise in Hair.

For one other prime natural product the emissaries of fashion must go to Mincing Lane. Judging from the quantities in which it is imported, this article must be in considerable demand. The "lot" with which we are more immediately concerned is lying in Cross Lane, and weighs some five thousand pounds—a tolerably large consignment of an article which is—well?—not necessary, perhaps, but apparently finds customers readily enough. It is human hair. The great bulk of it comes from China, is black as coal and coarse as cocoanut fiber, but of magnificent length. Many a Chinese head has been shorn to produce these tons of material, to be sold only in lots of two cases (of about four hundred pounds) each, and expected to realize about half a crown a pound in this wholesale transaction. Skilled experts are weighing and feeling the long tresses, but soon leave them to investigate the various shades and qualities of one bale of choice European, worth ten or eleven times as much as the Chinese. Whence comes this? From Germany mainly—from Russia and from France sometimes. Here lies a heap of samples culled from this valuable bale, with the weights of each color carefully attached. With what variety and richness of hues glow these long, fine, silky tresses, ringing from the deepest brown, through every shade of ruddy auburn and sunny chestnut, to the purest gold and fairest flaxen. What a monument of self-abnegation is here! what a picture of self-sacrifice! for when woman parts with her hair she performs an act far more trying than when she parts with her jewels. The maiden must be poor indeed who parts with her crowning charm for a few shillings. Legends to the contrary notwithstanding, how can she get more than a pitiful sum, when a choice bale, after passing through the hands of the shearer, the local merchant and the importer, and paying cost of transport, will fetch no more than seven-and-twenty shillings per pound? The blonde madchen, whose superb tresses I hold in my hand, did not, I apprehend, get much for them—perhaps a few florins; little enough, according to our estimate of money, but yet sufficient to keep the wolf from her mother's door for a little space. But this silken crown, which brought its original owner so little, must pass through many hands before it adorns the still handsome head of Lady Barepoles—who is not quite the woman she was when Barepoles became the captive of her bow and spear in her first season, but is yet a leader of fashion. Meanwhile we have no time to lose in the crowded auction-room in Mincing Lane. We have other things to sell—China hats and matting, Japanese arrows, coir yarn, cow hair (white and red,) everything, apparently, that the world ever produced—and must knock down our choice lot of imprisoned sunbeams and be gone.—All the Year Round.

Talmage's Cornet.

The New York Sun says: A clear-toned little bell, out of sight somewhere in the Rev. Dr. Talmage's pulpit, in the Brooklyn Tabernacle, was tapped once, at half-past ten o'clock yesterday morning. This was the usual signal for the appearance of the organist, and he at once entered through an opening panel in the immense organ. The broad, high front of this organ forms the back of the pulpit, and faces the people as they sit in the rising tiers of pews. There are seats for three thousand seven hundred persons, without crowding or filling the aisles, and none were vacant, although it was raining. The organist took his seat at the key-board under the front of the pulpit. After a brief pause the bell struck twice, and then he began to play a solo. A little later the bell rang three times, and another panel in the organ opened quickly, and Mr. Talmage stepped out on the platform. The panel shut behind him, and, as it could not be distinguished from the others, the effect of the pastor's entrance was that of a trick in a pantomime. He seated himself and bowed his head in silent prayer, the music of the organ continuing. Next Arbuckle, the cornet player, stood on a pedestal close in front of the pulpit, put his bright silver horn in his mouth, and waved his right hand after the manner of an orchestra leader. The congregation arose at the signal, and sang "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow." The Tabernacle has no choir. The blare of the cornet leads the congregational singing, and the powerful notes of the organ accompany it. The effect upon a stranger is repellant at first. The exhibition is theatrical, and unlike anything that he has previously seen in a house of prayer. The sound of the cornet rises loud, clear and melodious above the thousands of voices, keeping them together as perhaps they could be kept in no other way, and the great organ blends and expands the volume. The aggregate of sound is enormous, and the weakest-voiced worshiper, who would not attempt to hum "Yankee Doodle" by himself, opens his mouth as wide as anybody, and fancies he is rendering the doxology in deep accordant bass. It is only when his squeak inadvertently runs beyond the rear at the end of a line that he becomes conscious of his mistake.

A CURIOUS TREE.—The most singular freak of nature can be seen in a tree up near Eureka. It is half pine and half fir. It is a good-sized tree, perhaps seventy-five feet high. The body from the ground to a distance of thirty feet is pine. Then for a distance of twenty feet it is fir. The remaining twenty-five feet, like the lower portion, is pine. The fir portion of the tree is in a very flourishing condition. The foliage on that part is so dense that the trunk or limbs can hardly be seen through it. On the pine portion the leaves are rather scarce. The tree is near the road, and has been noticed by nearly all who ever passed that way. It is a rare curiosity, and well worth seeing.—Nevada Transcript.

REV. J. RICHARDSON, writing of the normal school in the capital of Madagascar, says: "The rush of pupils is very great indeed. I have three hundred and fifty on the books, and I could double that number if I wanted. The desire for education increases day by day. The Queen and government are thoroughly in earnest." In one district, he says, where six months before there were six schools, with an average of fifteen each, there are now fifty schools, with an average of eighty in a third of them, sixty in another third, and forty in the other.

French and American Women.

Albert Rhodes in his book, "The French at Home," says:

The face of the American woman is more beautiful than that of any other country. It has a delicacy of coloring and feature, and finesse and intellectuality in expression; but the body supporting the head, regarded from an artistic and hygienic point of view, is inferior. For breathing and digesting, the upper part is lacking depth. In a word, the American is more fragile; she is hardly a Diana, and the French is something more, although not the Hebe of Rubens.

The American has more intellect than her French sister, but the latter has softness where she has pertness. There is nervous excitability and cleverness in one, mellowness and equality of character in the other. The forced, brilliant vitality of woman in America is subject to fits of reaction, for nature has its limit. In the French woman the mind is more even and cheerful, and in the absence of exhaustive and irregular demands made upon it the uniform health is better.

In qualities of a purely mental character the equal of the American woman cannot perhaps be found in the world; but with all her knowledge and intellectual activity she lacks that which made the Greeks what they have been and the French what they are—organic cultivation. Entwined in these words are taste and art. A riper civilization, though not a purer, shall invest her with a knowledge of these things, and a harmony of character not now possessed; and with it will come, alas! that decadence in morals which always marches on the heels of the beautiful in every age and in every climate. It is sad that such heavy tribute should be exacted as the price of an added enjoyment, but art is inexorable.

HOW TO READ.—President Porter, of Yale College, lays down principles with regard to reading worthy of attention. Among other points he suggests that:

Reading should be followed in an earnest and reflecting spirit. If we are careful in the selection of books, we must be equally careful as to the way in which we read them. If a man has little time to read, he has no right to allow these golden hours of his life to be wasted or worse than wasted. If he reads a great deal, he has no right to allow influences which are silently but most powerfully affecting his whole character, to be what the chance or mood of the hour decides them, to bring disease or health, life or death to that which makes him a man.

Read with attention. This is the golden rule, and more important than all the rest. The great objection to omnivorous and indiscriminate reading is that it jades and wearies the power of attention. Edmund Burke always so read a book as to make it his own—a possession for life. Passive reading is to be carefully guarded against as a habit that will destroy all good in reading.

Read with interest. Find out what will interest you, ask yourself in what particulars your ignorance most disturbs or annoys you. With what class of thoughts, facts, principles or emotions would it please you best to be conversant. "Read what will satisfy your wants and appease your desires, and you will comply with the first condition to reading with interest and profit," is a direction that must be received, however, with caution, for you should see that your wishes and desires are correct before you attempt to satisfy them.—Christian Intelligencer.

A POOR MAN with an empty purse came one day to Michael Feneberg, the godly pastor of Seeg, in Bavaria, and begged three crowns, that he might finish his journey. It was all the money Feneberg had, but as he besought him so earnestly in the name of Jesus, in the name of Jesus he gave it. Immediately after he found himself in great outward need, and, seeing no way of relief, he prayed, saying: "Lord, I lent thee three crowns; thou hast not yet returned them, and thou knowest how I need them. Lord, I pray thee give them back." The same day a messenger brought a money-letter, which Gossner, his assistant, reached over to Feneberg, saying: "Here, father, is what you expended." The letter contained two hundred thalers (about $160,) which the poor traveler had begged from a rich man for the visit, and the child-like old man, in joyful amazement, cried out: "Ah, dear Lord, one dare ask nothing of thee, for straightway thou makest one feel so ashamed."

HEARING BY SIGHT.—A young American presented himself last July at the University of Heidelberg for examination, preparatory to receiving the degree of doctor of philosophy. The first inquiry he made was whether the examining professors had beards. But astonishment waxed higher still when it became known that the young American was utterly bereft of the power of hearing, but so expert had he became in reading men's countenances, and interpreting the motion of the facial and labial muscles, that he could understand every word spoken to him by one whose face was uncovered with hair. To the wonderment of all he went through his examination with perfect ease, and no one would have believed from his correct answers that he did not hear a word that was said. He got his degree.

THE French keep up their little jokes. An Alsatian woman goes to confess: "Father, I have committed a great sin." "Well?" "I dare not say it; it is too grievous." "Come, come, courage." "I have married a Prussian." "Keep him, daughter. That's your penance."

"HOW ODD IT IS," said Pat, as he trudged along on foot, one hot, sultry day, "that a man never meets a cart going the same way he is."

LIVE as long as you may, the first twenty years are the longest half of your life.—Southey.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Abbe Dubois, a Roman Catholic missionary at Mysore, said: "I have never yet beheld a Hindoo procession without its presenting me the image of hell."

—The Japanese convert, Osam Mugura, baptized in New Brunswick, N. J., by Dr. Tiffany, a few years ago, is now the attache to the charge d'affaires in Washington, representing the Japanese empire.

—We read of five girls who walked the most part of sixty miles to attend the girls' boarding school at Bitlis, Eastern Turkey. We also find mention of a Chinese woman, forty-eight years of age and mother of a family, who, with her crippled feet, walked eighty miles to Tungchow, in order to learn to read. Where a Christian education is thus prized it is the joy of the missionaries to bestow it.

—The London Spectator reports Dr. Manning, the general editor of the Religious Tract Society, as reporting, on the basis of a recent visit he has made to Utah, that the Mormons, weary of further contests with the United States authorities, had about determined to make a final removal to the valley of the Jordan, Palestine. There is some probability in this, for the Turks are very good Mormons, and a mutual sympathy between them and the followers of Brigham Young is not at all improbable.

—The voluntary system does not seem to be a success with the German Roman Catholics; since the contributions, intended to replace the government stipends which have been withdrawn, scarcely amount to fifty per cent. of the required amount. It may be that the long-taxed German has not grown used to paying for his religion out of his own pocket, and it may be that some good Catholics do not entirely approve of the way in which the priests have courted martyrdom by setting up against the laws of the land. Both hypotheses would amply explain the facts.

—The sixty-second annual meeting of the American Board of Foreign Missions was held in Chicago, commencing on Tuesday, the fifth of October, and continuing till Friday, the eighth. Rev. Mark Hopkins, D. D., presided. The report of the corresponding secretary showed that during the year nine of the corporate members of the board have died, and twenty-two persons have been sent out as missionaries. The total income was $446,004, and the disbursements $450,238. The year began with a debt of $6,352, and closed with a debt of $10,396. The total deficit of the old and the new work was stated to be $44,323. The annual sermon was preached by Rev. J. W. Andrews, president of Marietta College.

—The Methodists (South) have been holding a monster camp meeting in Greenville county, S. C. Both whites and blacks were present, and seemed to vie with each other "to see who would behave the best and give the greater attention to the word of life." The result was that "such good order, decorum, gentlemanly conduct and general good deportment has not, perhaps, for the past fifty years been known in this country." "Some of the white people," says the presiding elder, "told us after preaching on Sunday noon that they had a strong mind to join the church with the colored people, and worship with them until they got able to build a church of their own." That is in South Carolina, under a vigorous Republican administration.

—Mrs. Weitbrecht, in her recent volume, entitled "The Women of India and Christian Work in the Zenana," says: "The contrast between those zenanas where female education is progressing and those who will not have it is very remarkable. In the one you see the ladies sitting in the sun, with their knees drawn up to the chin, absolutely idle. In the other you go in and find the whole female part of the family with their books and work around, some learning their lessons; mothers and daughters together, some working, others, it may be, reading; those who are able to read well and easily reading a story-book, such as 'Faith and Victory,' 'The Dairyman's Daughter,' and other little books which have been translated into their language. But you seldom find them idle."

NORTHERN PRESBYTERIAN.—Additions Last Year.—The only church to which more than 200 members were added on profession of faith during the last year was the Central Presbyterian church, Brooklyn, N. Y. (Rev. Dr. Talmage's.) The additions to that church in the year 1874 were 238. The churches to which 100 or more were added during the year are as follows: Church in Chefoo, China (Rev. Hunter Corbett, pastor,) 110; Second church, Altoona, Pa. (Rev. Mr. Chichester's,) 113; Macomb, Ill. (Rev. Mr. Moore's,) 103; Chestnut Street church, Louisville, Ky. (Rev. Dr. Simpson's,) 101; University Place, New York (Rev. Dr. Booth's,) 108; Oxford church, Pa. (Rev. Mr. Lawson's,) 138; Mauch Chunk, Pa. (Rev. Mr. Ferrier's,) 106; Bethany, Philadelphia (Rev. Mr. Miller's,) 112. Twenty-nine churches received between 60 and 100 new members on profession of faith. A large number of churches have received accessions, varying from 40 to 60 persons during the year, but we cannot give the space necessary to enumerate them. The synod in which the largest number of persons have been added to the churches by profession of faith is the Synod of Philadelphia. The number is 3,202. The Synod of New Jersey comes next, the number there being 2,336. The presbytery in which the largest number of persons have been added to the churches by profession of faith is the Presbytery of Huntingdon, amounting to 859. The Presbytery of New York has gained 800 members, the Presbytery of Philadelphia 760, and the Presbytery of Brooklyn 748. The whole number added to all the churches on profession of faith in Christ is 32,059.—Philadelphia Presbyterian.

Our Young People.

THE GLEANER.

I am a little gleaner
Among the heaviest sheaves;
I follow in the reaping
For what the reaper leaves;
For haply by the wayside
Some handfuls may be tossed;
As said the careful Master,
That nothing shall be lost.

Drops fill the boundless ocean,
Sands pile the mountain high;
So all the bounteous garner
Must single grains supply.
And when to feed the hungry
The richer offering comes,
The full loaf on the table
May not disdain the crumbs.

I'm sorry 'tis so little
My little hands can do;
But Jesus will accept it
If but my heart is true.
And some time—'tis the promise
My heart in hope believes—
I'll bring the blessed Master
The full and joyful sheaves.

Advocate and Guardian.

From Our Little Friends.

DALLAS, TEXAS, Nov. 10, 1875.

MR. EDITOR: Every paper that I have picked up for the last twelve months is full of letters from the little children to Grandpa Goodale.

I am not acquainted with that grandpa, but I believe I can see far enough beyond my nose to find out what he is up to. I think he tells them such stories just to excite their curiosity enough to read the papers. I acknowledge that is very smart in him, though I have never been so anxious to find out how Barney, Susie or anybody else milked the boys' nest, for I am living away out here in Texas, where we have a plenty of cows to milk, and I am sure that is just as much about milking as I care to learn.

It seems that Mr. Tom thinks himself a very big man among the children, using such big words; but I think I can give him one, and it will be a little hard for him to pronounce without looking in the dictionary for it.

Respectfully, D. GATEWOOD.

How the Birds Go to Market.

BY C. L. H.

A story? Well, what shall it be? Perhaps you would like to hear how some of the birds go to market. Oh, but you think I am hoaxing you, and mean chickens and turkeys just about Thanksgiving-time. No, indeed; there are many little birds which have very curious ways of getting their living, and we may call it going to market if we like.

Even in early spring some of them may be seen visiting their markets in their different ways. Perhaps the first one that will particularly interest you is a rather dull-colored bird, with very bright eyes, a long bill and very sprightly air. You will see him jerking about the trunk of some old tree, poking his long nose into every crack and cranny of it. He is so spry that you will have to look sharp in order to see what the queer fellow is up to. By watching patiently, however, you may see him pick up a small pebble with his beak, and run along the trunk till he reaches some convenient crack in the bark; now watch closely—surely he has placed the pebble in the crack, and is pounding it in with might and main. He works as though he knew what he was about, though we may not just yet. This is repeated again and again. He must enjoy a strange kind of play, we think, by this time; but we determine to watch him further.

After some time we are rewarded. Back comes our bird, and, with a business-like air, pulls out the stopper to his dinner trap, for such it really is, and poor Mr. Worm is taken out of his snug home to make a meal for Mr. Nuthatch. This bird, not having the strong bill of some of his relatives, the woodpeckers, makes up for it in skill which the woodpeckers do not have.

Then, before long, if you live in the country, you may see a bird that has a very different way of going to market. Some morning, perhaps just after breakfast, a ringing sound, like that made by the striking of a mason's trowel upon stone, will come floating along in the still air. Now look toward some tall tree, and in the very top of it we shall see market bird number two talking in Chinese to some of his friends in this manner: "Ye lung." "Ye he lung." The men that know a great deal about birds are a little puzzled about the true name of this foreigner. Some say that he is the white-rumped shrike, and when he gets a little further south and changes his clothes slightly they have another name for him. But we need not bother our heads about his name if we know his dress and how he goes to market. He wears a neat drab or ash-colored coat, the tail of which is black, excepting the outer edge. His wings are black, with a white spot in the center, as are also his feet and bill, a black band surrounds his eyes, and a whitish vest completes his costume.

Now for the market; but wait till later in the year when he has got settled. Instead of setting upon the tops of the trees he finds a more sheltered position to wait for his dinner. A grasshopper who has started out to reconnoiter the wheat, just peeping up through the ground, may make the first course. The sharp eyes of our friend are not long in spying him out. He then immediately skims along the ground to the neighboring fence, and, as he flies, snatches up one grasshopper. If too large to suit, he is pounded in something the manner a cook serves the beefsteak, till sufficiently quiet, or in a more palatable state.

This bird has some very cruel cousins, who actually are cannibal enough to kill other birds to satisfy their appetite, and I have heard of one which, in a spirit of revenge, snapped off the head of a canary bird in a cage.

Now what this our friend might do if very hungry I dare not say, but I will say this much: that I never saw him do any more than pursue some of the small birds when he thought them intruders upon his own premises.

But I came very near forgetting to tell you the commonest name of this shrike; it is "Butcher Bird"—another thing which he has to bear on account of bad relatives, who earned the title by impaling small birds on thorns, as a butcher hangs his meat in the shop. I should like very well to tell you about some other very pretty and queer birds, but can speak of but one more.

The boys, who have no respect for any bird that is sharp enough to evade their stones and shot, call this friend of mine some hard names which you would not like to hear; but we know him as the grebe or diver; and so common are they that at this time every pond can furnish one or two. Very modest in appearance, and harmless as well, yet he is sadly abused. His flesh is not tender like the duck's, and quite unfit for food; still every boy, and many men that should know better, think themselves justified in peppering away at him while engaged in his marketing. Perhaps this is because he has such a decided desire to live that he artfully dodges every shot they fire at him. The feathers of the grebe are almost like hair, and are so thick and oily that no water can get through to wet his body. The color is mottled-gray from head to foot, except the bill and feet. Now you see he is nearly as well off under water as on it; and there is where he goes to market. All day long he keeps bobbing over in his odd way, only now and then pluming his feathers so as to keep them in order, or sunning himself in the heat of the day upon a log.—Christian Union.

How to Make Work Easy.

All the bright summer afternoon Mary sat busily sewing. Her companions were playing upon the lawn. Why did she not join them? She was making a dressing gown for papa, and wished to have it finished upon his return home. It was almost dark when the last stitch was taken, and Mary carried her work to her papa's room, where she placed it on a chair by his bedside, with a little slip of paper pinned upon it, on which was written: "For my dear papa, with the love of Mary."

"Mary, Mary!" called the girls.

"Yes, I am quite ready," she answered; and away she ran to join them.

"How happy you look—after sewing all the afternoon, too! Do you like to sew for so long a time?"

"No; but I have been working to-day for papa, and it has seemed very pleasant. I love him so much that nothing seems hard that I can do for him."

"That is what Miss Alice, our Sunday school teacher, told us," replied Annie. "She said love makes labor light."

"And she also said that it was just so in working for Jesus," added Fanny.

"Working for Jesus—what do you mean?" asked Carrie.

"That if we love Jesus we shall seek to please him; if we are kind and loving, and try to do good to others, this will be working for him."

"Will Jesus be pleased with us if we do so?"

"Yes," said Mary; "more pleased than papa will be when he sees the gown that I have made for him."

"I wish that I loved Jesus," said Carrie.

"You cannot help loving him if you will only think how much he loves you. He died for you," said Fanny.

"I think the more we do for those we love the better we love them," said Mary; "and, if we will try every day to work for Jesus in every way that we can, we need not fear but we shall love him."

"Let us begin now," said Fanny; "and let us ask Jesus to teach us the way that we can please him the best."

"Yes, let us all try—you and I—to live every day working for him."

"THEN YOU HAVE A FATHER."—Rev. Dr. John King once went to visit the children in an orphan asylum. The children were seated in a school-room, and Dr. King stood on a platform before them.

"So this is an orphan asylum," said he. "I suppose that many of you children would tell that you have no father or mother, were I to ask you."

"Yes, sir; yes, sir;" said some little voices.

"How many of you say you have no father? Hold up your hands."

A forest of hands were put up.

"So you say you have no father?"

"Yes, sir; yes, sir."

"Now," said Dr. King, "do you ever say the Lord's Prayer? Let me hear you."

The children began: "Our Father who art in heaven—"

"Stop, children," said Dr. King; "did you begin right?"

The children began again: "Our Father who art in heaven—"

"Stop again, children," said Dr. King. "What did you say? Our Father? Then you have a Father—a good, rich Father. I want to tell you about him. He owns all the gold in California; he owns all the world; he can give you as much of anything as he sees is best for you. Now, children, never forget that you have a Father. Go to him for all you want, as if you could see him. He is able and willing to do all that is for your good."

THE coming insane asylum keeper to visitor: "Do you mean that man with his head bowed, his eyes cast down and his lips moving? Oh, yes, he was spelled down, too, but he keeps right on practicing just the same; I believe his word is 'sy-zygy.'"

The Cry of the People.

A brother writing to us from his pastoral charge says: "But I fear we shall fail in our foreign missionary collection. The cry of the people is that missionaries are needed on the —— district as much as in Mexico."

This is a common objection to giving for foreign missions, and urged more or less in almost every section. We do not doubt there are destitute and neglected communities in the bounds of every district, and in proximity to almost every pastoral charge in the land. Had the Protestant churches waited to supply every nook at home before sending the gospel abroad, the grand missionary work of the past sixty years would not have been begun. There would not be a missionary in India, China, Japan, or anywhere else, if none were sent until the people at home were completely evangelized. If this had been the rule the apostles would never have left Judea, and Paul would have never set foot on Gentile soil. Certainly he would not have loosed from Troas at the bidding of the man in Macedonia.

Had Wesley withheld his missionaries from America, because there were destitute fields in England, Methodism would have stayed in the British isles till after his death; and if his successors had been of the same mind there would, perhaps, have been no such thing as American Methodism. England is not yet converted, and there is abundance of missionary ground in the very heart of London. If this plea of the demands of the home work be conceded, then we must put an end to all foreign missionary enterprises. If it had been admissible from the beginning, we should have remained pagans ourselves to the present day. There is not probably a large city in the United States that could not use, in its own bounds advantageously, far more than its churches give to foreign missions; and the same is true everywhere. Here in New Orleans our Methodist churches could expend tens of thousands in mission work. What, then, does this cry of the people mean but this: that Paul and the primitive evangelists made a mistake in pushing forward so long as there were people unconverted behind them, and that this grand effort of the past half century that has won entire nations to Christ, and laid the foundations of the world's conversion, has been altogether premature and indefensible?

The district mentioned by our correspondent embraces but a small portion of Louisiana. It has been traversed by itinerant preachers for forty years at least, and now has thirteen ministers of our church alone stationed within its limits. Taking all the Protestant ministers and churches in that region, they are probably more than the entire evangelical force now in the republic of Mexico. There are eighteen hundred Southern Methodists in that presiding elder's district, besides local preachers, and a considerable number of other Protestants. Admitting that the people are generally poor, still is it true that the —— district is as much missionary ground as Mexico?

Our foreign missions stand in shameful contrast to the numbers and resources of the church at home. We could point out two or three charges that spend more for their current demands than the whole of Southern Methodism, with its seven hundred thousand members, contributes to the China mission. The weak places at home should be helped by the strong, and there are communities exceptionally poor where little can be contributed to send the gospel abroad. But it is the order of Providence, and in accord with the economy of the gospel, at once and with equal strength to work at home and abroad. The home church is a mere base for aggressive operations in distant countries. This is our great and leading business. To neglect it, or to prosecute it feebly, is to furnish the occasion for the removing of our candlestick.

The poorest can give something, and without withholding from the support of religion at home. The very act of contributing statedly to foreign missions has a broadening and liberalizing influence, and is of vital importance to the religious education of the people. A dollar given for Mexico will multiply itself tenfold in the support of the pastor and in all generous devisings. One way to revive and strengthen weak churches is to cultivate and inspire the missionary spirit. Let them thus connect themselves with Christ and his work in the world, and there will be a wonderful increase of faith and devotion.

We hear this cry of the people on every hand. We know not the place, in which a collection can be taken, where it is not heard. Ever since we were old enough to know anything about missions it has been the same deprecating refrain: "The Greeks are at the door; charity begins at home; this is missionary ground." If this cry had been listened to, where would Christianity be to-day? What would have been the condition of the world? The voice of the people, in this case at least, is not the voice of God. We grant it is sometimes the utterance of mistaken conviction, of conscientious but narrow views. But does it not too often spring from selfish and covetous motives, and from the lack of that wide and liberalizing consecration which the love of Christ should inspire? As long as we live we shall insist that every woman who can wear a ribbon in her bonnet, and every man who can afford a button to his coat, can and ought to give something for foreign missions.

Even if ours be missionary ground, it should yield something for this distinctive phase of evangelical effort. No church, no individuals, should willingly separate themselves from this chiefest and most glorious exhibition of love to Christ. They should rather, not only as a duty but as a privilege, insist upon the opportunity of sharing in the achievement of the world's salvation. Preachers, whose place it is to lead in all great and noble duties, should not allow themselves to be shaken by the mistaken views of others. Whatever the people's cry may be, let them cry: Something for foreign missions from everybody.

Fraternal Criticisms.

SECOND PAPER.

Dr. Abbey tells us that "almost any pious, well-informed man, or two men, can settle all existing difficulties to the entire satisfaction of everybody, in a very few weeks, at an expense of certainly not over $2.50." And as if conscious of being himself the concrete embodiment of all ecclesiastical science, especially of the division of jurisprudence, intimates in the Nashville a willingness to undertake this "light work."

Well, now let us suppose the General Conference had appointed him with plenary power to do this little two-dollar-and-a-half job, and that the Methodist Episcopal Church had appointed the scholarly gentleman and true-hearted Christian, Dr. Wheeler, of New York. The commissioners meet at the place agreed upon, and after proper preliminaries of courtesy and religion demanded by the personal dignity of the gentlemen, and the nature of the business they are to perform, negotiations are formally opened. We will suppose Dr. Wheeler to begin conversation in his usual candid and conciliatory style:

Dr. W.—"There are unquestionably some things to be carefully provided for in any plans for closer fraternal relations between the two chief Methodisms. They are matters of first moment, that cannot be sacrificed. To barter them for fraternity would be to sell what is worth more than a fraternity procured by their sacrifice could ever be worth."—The Methodist, October 16, page 664, second column.

Dr. A.—Why, my dear sir, do I understand you to speak of "indispensable conditions precedent" to fraternity? "Did ever anybody, before these new teachings, hear of Christian fraternity meted out by bargain, stipulation, negotiation or contract? Is Christian fraternity a subject of litigation, of diplomacy and commerce? Did Paul and John treat in that way?"—New Orleans Advocate, October 28, page 2, column 2. "Is it not strange that the plain, broad question of fraternity is an open question among us? And has it come to this: that we are debating whether we will be fraternal, and how far we will be fraternal? Every man must see at a glance that in case of social breaches of this sort, or of any sort, there are but two possible courses to be pursued. The one is kindness, forbearance, fraternity; and the other 'the fist of wickedness,' revenge, retaliation. I will not debate questions that are not debatable."—New Orleans Advocate, November 4, page 2, column 1.

Dr. W.—But, my dear doctor, there are "indispensable conditions precedent," whether you will or not; and if you will only hear, let me say the North will insist: 1. That "the colored Christians of the South must have the aid and sympathy of the white Christians of the South."—Methodist, October 16. (Dr. Wheeler would not make such a condition if he knew as well as I do the almost universal sympathy of the Southern Methodists with the colored Christians, and their willingness to aid them.)

Dr. W. continues.—Another "indispensable condition precedent" is: "2. The self-respect of both churches must be preserved." "In 1844 the church was formally divided. The Church South was formed in 1845, in accordance with the action of the General Conference of 1844. The Church South was organized in good faith, under the division act of 1844, and that church has remained until this day." "The church which was by that act set off has a perfect moral claim to our recognition."—The Methodist, October 16.

Dr. A.—Why, doctor, are you talking about "that old ecclesiastical contract made by somebody thirty years ago?" "I have said before: 'A fig for the Plan of Separation;' and I wish I could repeat it with emphasis a thousand-fold, with willfulness of meaning. Whatever there ever was in it is superseded by and lost sight of in Christian fraternity. A fig for coercive measures among fraternal Christians."—Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, August 28, page 1, column 2. (At this speech Dr. Wheeler may be supposed to explode with amazement.)

Dr. W. continues.—Another "indispensable condition precedent" is: "3. The independent existence of each church." "For many reasons organic union is not desired, and it is not necessary to fraternity." "There are some reasons why a large party in the North would oppose organic union."—The Methodist, October 16, page 664, column 3.

Dr. A.—My dear brother, "let there be fraternity, high, full, apostolic, Christian fraternity—fraternity exactly as high and as broad as the Bible, and the unity will take care of itself. It results, or rather it is necessarily. It requires no making, no producing, no bringing about—it is." "And then, finding the church so united, so separated, so related, in unity, in severalty, as integral portions of separate denominations always are, and anybody chooses to call them two churches, the only harm done would be a violation of the settled idea and nomenclature of church status and existence the world over." "Presbyterians are separated from us by something; and so are Baptists and other denominations. But we (Northern and Southern Methodists) are separate by nothing save a thing Scripture says must not exist—an unchristian thing. Can churches thus related continue to coexist? I will not ask if it is desirable, for that cannot be. But I ask if it is possible. Will not disintegration and absorption sooner or later settle the anomalous warfare."—Baltimore Methodist, August 28, page 1, column 2.

Now, "gentle reader," this supposed colloquy might be extended further, but this is long enough to bring out the doctrines and logic of the parties. I appeal to your common sense to decide whether or not the doctrines and logic of the Southern gentleman would not surrender up the life of our church, and sink it out of sight as far as any church has gone since "Joshua crossed the Jordan." If Dr. Abbey "rises to explain," he need not put on airs of injured innocence, and sweetly play the persecuted, as others have done; for in quotation marks I have put into his lips the very words he has printed, without violating his great fundamental idea by the connection in which they stand in the dialogue.

You will observe he values the Plan of Separation at a fig; that fraternity absorbs it, and relates the churches in such a way that their coexistence is not desirable, if possible; and whoever should call them two churches after his fraternity were established would "violate the settled idea and nomenclature of church status and existence the world over."

And now, in bidding adieu to him and the rest of the Fraternity Manufacturing Company, I wish to say I hold them all personally in high esteem as gentlemen and ministers, but their fraternity, and way of accomplishing it, in company with my brethren, I most heartily condemn and deplore. ***

Memorial Discourse.

Bishop Doggett's memorial discourse on the occasion of the death of Bishop John Early, D. D., delivered before the Virginia Conference, December 2, 1873, has but recently appeared in print. It is a noble tribute to the deceased Bishop, and will be read with interest and profit. In delineating the elements of Bishop Early's character Bishop Doggett says:

One of those elements was the quickness of his apprehension. The activity of his perceptive faculty was positively wonderful. It anticipated the ordinary processes of reasoning and the judgment of most men. It was not due to any method of culture. It was a natural gift, the rapidity of which was as surprising as it was frequently accurate. It was a species of foresight which often placed him in advance of the decisions of others, if it occasionally hurried him into unseasonable positions. It gave him the advantage of reaching conclusions while others were marshalling their logic. Who of you do not recall the dexterity which it afforded him in debate, and the strategy for which he was celebrated in the movements. It imparted a sort of mystery and enigma to his conversation, which held the hearer in suspense as to his object, and perplexed as to its import.

The tenacity of his memory was equal to the rapidity of his ideas. He reminded me more of Cyrus, the Persian, in this respect, than of any other man—who is said to have known by name every soldier in his army. He seemed never to have forgotten a man, woman or child, black or white, whom he ever knew; and after long intervals of time he could, on sight, pronounce their names and recite their history, from grandsire to grandson. I have never met with such an instance of memory except in the records of intellectual science. It was also an astonishing repository of facts, grave and ludicrous, connected with his ministry; and in the company and freedom of friends it was one of the richest and most instructive magazines of anecdote to which the ear ever listened. What a pity that so illustrative a treasure of moral and religious incident has not been preserved for posterity.

Not the least distinguishing of his traits was the force of his will—that spontaneous self-assertion which shed its coloring over his entire life. There was nothing negative in him. It was a self-conscious power, which diffused itself through his entire being, and projected him into those attitudes which made him conspicuous. He felt that he was born to command, and that others were bound to obey. It was the secret of that ambition which he was alleged to possess; but in him it was not a calculating domination, so much as the instinctive suggestion of native energy. If it betrayed him into unpleasant collisions, sanctified by grace, it was the source of his success, and made him a man of mark in his own generation, and would have done it in any. He could have commanded an army or ruled a kingdom without ever debating the question of authority.

Another element of his character was the ardor of his temperament. His emotions were intense. He knew as little of insensibility as he did of indecision. The combustible materials of his nature were easily set on fire; and natural impulse was a prominent trait in him. A high sense of honor, a lofty bearing, quickness to resent an injury, and sympathy for suffering, were equally conspicuous. A gracious self-restraint gave him the victory, and many were the instances in which hasty excitements were followed by luxurious compensations of honorable amends.

His theological views were decided. Reared a predestinarian, he became an Arminian, according to the Wesleyan school. Unlearned in criticism, he was an adept in doctrine; and if his system was not recondite, he never forsook "the form of sound words." His testimony on the subjects of atonement, salvation by faith, the new birth and the witness of the Spirit were sound to the core. "The faith once delivered to the saints" was transmitted by him, without adulteration, and without equivocation.

The quality which characterized his preaching was impassioned earnestness. Without taking rank with great preachers, he was among the most zealous of them all. He was often eloquent, swaying vast multitudes with a magic power. It was the eloquence of a soul inflamed by the love of Christ, and bursting into an uncontrollable effusion of Christian tenderness, when his voice trembled and tears bedewed his cheeks. It was likewise the eloquence of felicitous illustration, drawn from that storehouse of memorable "cases" to which he always reverted to enforce the leading topic of discourse. Such was John Early in his prime; and great was the harvest of souls.

He was remarkable for the purity of his character. His sentiments were transparently chaste and elevated. His conversation was perfectly free from vulgarity and frivolity. His conduct was adorned by the moralities of the gospel, and his reputation has passed to posterity without a stain.

He was, in a high degree, possessed of the domestic affections. His personal attachments were strong and enduring, and the households that entertained him were the most devoted of his friends. Under that stern and austere countenance he carried as warm a heart as ever beat in a human bosom. In his own family, where one's personal qualities are subject to no disguise, he was equally the object of reverence and love, and laid the foundation for them in the propriety and gentleness of his own conduct. In the clamor of public duties, home never lost its charms, and he hailed his return to its peaceful shades as an asylum and refreshment from the conflict and corrosion of public duty. His domestic fidelity was repaid by the adoring reciprocities of one of the noblest of women, and by the delight of the fondest of children. No sternness, no austerity darkened that sacred inclosure, and a more attractive example of a Christian household was rarely to be seen. No preacher knew it better than myself. I was a member of it, two successive years, when first pastor of the church in Lynchburg, and can testify that the Bishop at home was a beautiful instance of those cherished endearments which constitute the family a type of heaven.

I feel it proper to add that his hospitality was profuse while he possessed the means to display it. He was heir to a considerable estate, and though he manumitted his slaves at an early period of his ministry, he retained, for a long time, an ample fortune. He never knew poverty until straitened by misfortune. When full-handed, the generosity of the Christian gentleman replenished his board, and strangers and friends were his numerous guests.

Severe on the Church Members.

The Independent, referring to the close of Mr. Moody's meetings in Brooklyn, charges what failure there was to the professing Christians who selfishly crowded out the non-church-goers and outside classes. We wonder whether these excitement-seeking Christians were equally zealous in attending their own prayer meetings, and in thronging their own churches? There is a great deal of selfishness in some people's religion, but we have never had occasion to notice this particular exhibition of it. The Independent says:

And yet the Brooklyn revival has been in certain features a sad disappointment to us who have taken an interest and part in it. Mr. Moody failed, it must be confessed, in his evening meetings at the rink to reach that outside class which he sought. The reason for his failure is so discreditable that we almost hesitate to give it. But it must be confessed that it was the dishonesty, the selfishness of excitement-seeking professed Christians that made these meetings a partial failure. Mr. Moody tried his best to open the door into his meetings to those who are not church-goers, and to shut it against church members. He begged these latter to stay at home. He plead with them, but they still would come. He then issued tickets that were offered only to the non-church-goers; but the conscience-hardened professors would rob their unconverted neighbors of their tickets and lie their way into the rink, and then have the face to stand up when all Christians were requested to rise, and thus flaunt their hypocrisy in the face of the evangelist. Our words are strong, but the responsibility of souls is on the head of these "Christians" who have yet to learn that Christianity means honor and truthfulness. We do not like to say these words, but we commend them now to the members of the Philadelphia churches. In a famine, that man or crowd of men were beneath all contempt who, with cellars stored with grain, and their cheeks standing out for fatness, should crowd the bureaus of public charity, and prevent the poor from receiving the dole that should save them from starvation. But nothing better, nay, worse has been the conduct of these greedy professors, very many of them from other cities, who have pushed the Brooklyn hungry, starving poor away from the gospel feast. May the Lord not have mercy on their souls until they repent.

THE Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, announcing the death of Rev. F. C. Tebbs, of the Baltimore Conference, says:

It is with the deepest sorrow we announce the death of our beloved brother, Rev. F. C. Tebbs, of the Baltimore Conference. The sad news of his sudden and unexpected demise was made known to his fellow-laborers in this city during the session of the Preachers' Association on Monday last. Thus in the very prime and vigor of his manhood has our brother been called from the toils of his life-work to his rest and reward. An affectionate husband, a true friend, a faithful minister and an earnest worker for Christ has gone to join the ranks of the redeemed.

THE New York Christian Advocate says: The question of changing the seat of the next session of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church from St. Louis to Baltimore has at last been decided in the affirmative. Subsequent to the correspondence on the subject already chronicled, between the book agents and the St. Louis churches, and the assent of the latter, and the concurrence of our friends in Baltimore, the question was presented by the Bishops to the several Annual Conferences held during the autumn. All the Conferences adopted resolutions approving of the change, and in nearly all cases the vote was unanimous.

At the session of the General Missionary Committee, on Saturday last, on motion of Dr. Curry, a similar and unanimous vote took place.

THE Ladies' Aid Society of the Prytania Presbyterian church give an entertainment at Odd Fellows' Hall, in this city, on the evenings of December 6 and 7. We are obliged for complimentary tickets. We wish the society the most gratifying success.

Hard to Tell the Truth.

It seems almost impossible for Northern preachers in the South to tell the truth about us. Even some of the best of them are the ready dupes of those who willfully misrepresent the South. The Western Methodist, referring to an instance of slander, says:

Bishop Bowman, in the Central Christian Advocate, writes of the Tennessee Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, recently attended by him, and says of the territory embraced by it (middle and west Tennessee:)

"There are large sections of country—in some cases, I think, whole counties—where there are no regular pastors, and where there are very few places in which even a passing stranger can preach to the people. It is not uncommon to find men and women who have never heard a sermon or prayer."

We fear the Bishop, for the truth of his statements, has relied upon ignorant or false witnesses. We want to know where are those "large sections of country," "whole counties," in middle or west Tennessee, without any "regular pastors." To say nothing of other religious bodies, some of which are very numerous, there are in middle and west Tennessee 210 charges, served by regular pastors of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, with about 65,000 members and about 557 local preachers. Other black lines Bishop Bowman draws across the good name of Tennessee for doing which also he is entitled to the explanation given above as to the probable character of his informants. It is a very easy matter to write evil things about any one State, the largest or the smallest, the best or the worst, and in doing so to keep within the bounds of truth and fact; and the wonder is why so many writers, even ministers of the gospel, and even Bishops too, in writing about the South, should so often fail to pay attention to those bounds—crediting the stories of witnesses not worthy of credit, because they are ignorant, or, if not, are controlled by prejudice.

Bishop Bowman, we do not believe, would intentionally misrepresent; but he owes it to himself and to the public to be more careful what he writes, when for the truth of his statements he is dependent upon his associates in the South.

LAST WEEK, says the New York Observer, we mentioned the sad state of things in the finances of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions. It was announced on the first of October as having a deficit of $195,000. Since that date the receipts have not only fallen behind the current expenses, but the October contributions were $4,000 short of those received in the same month last year. At the last meeting of the board the treasurer reported the total deficiency of the board on the first of November as $226,000.

With all the probable gains of the winter months there will be a disastrous debt in May next unless some special means of relief are found.

THE Evangelical Alliance has issued the usual programme for the week of prayer, beginning January 2, 1876. On Saturday, January 1, there will be sermons on "The Love of God Perfected in Him who Keepeth His Word." Monday is devoted to thanksgiving and confession; Tuesday to prayer for the church of Christ; Wednesday to prayer for families; Thursday to prayer for rulers, magistrates and statesmen; Friday to prayer for foreign missions; Saturday to prayer for all nations, the cessation of war, the removal of intemperance and immorality, and for plentiful harvests, and Sunday to sermons on "The Ultimate Triumph."

REV. ALLAN MCCORQUODALE, an old and revered member of the South Carolina Conference, died November 13. The editor of the Southern Christian Advocate says of him:

Entering the South Carolina Conference in 1830, he performed a most laborious ministry, preserved an immaculate reputation, was instrumental in winning multitudes to Christ, and has passed peacefully to a glorious reward, leaving a memory fragrant as "ointment poured forth."

PHILADELPHIA.—The first meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in Philadelphia were crowded in spite of a pouring rain. Ten thousand persons were in and around the building last Sabbath morning.

PERSONS expecting to attend the Mississippi Conference are requested to read the notice concerning railroad fares on our eighth page.

IN DECIDING questions of truth and duty, remember that the wrong side has a crafty and powerful advocate in your own heart.

VALUABLE TESTIMONY.—A general complaint, that spares neither class nor condition of person, is seated in the liver. It may be truly said this is our national disease, and it gives us great pleasure to hear or read the testimony of persons of well-known veracity and intelligence to prove the value of Simmons' Liver Regulator as a remedy. Although we have been fortunate enough never to have needed the use of this valuable and popular medicine ourself, yet the printed and verbal testimony of so many friends and acquaintances satisfies us that this is one of the exceptions to the general humbuggery of medical specialties. An acquaintance of many years with the proprietors of this medicine has confirmed our confidence and respect for them as gentlemen of honor and integrity. See advertisement of J. H. Zellin & Co. at top of column, fifth page.

WE ARE PLEASED to learn that Messrs. George Woods & Co., the manufacturers of the celebrated parlor organs, having greatly enlarged their factories, are now about to bring their remarkable instruments to the more extended notice of the Southern public.

Their instruments have acquired a most enviable reputation in this country and in Europe for the finest workmanship and the great variety of their musical effects. They are of such a character that all musicians of taste will be interested in them, and we are glad to call the attention of our readers to them. Messrs. Woods & Co. inform us that Prof. Turle, for more than fifty years organist of Westminister Abby, London, has lately purchased one of their organs for his own use, selecting their instrument over many others of English and American manufacture.

TEA AND COFFEE DEPOT.—One of the attractions as well as one of the novelties of Camp street is the great China and Japan Tea depot of J. J. Martin, Esq. His steel mills, run by a steam engine, grind coffee in such a manner that in dripping the pure extract is obtained, without the muddy sediment which is found when ground in mills which mash instead of cut the grains to pieces. We advise all who are fond of coffee to try some that has been browned in Mr Martin's apparatus for parching without evaporating the strength of the berry and injuring the delicacy of its flavor, and ground in his steel mills, and they will be surprised at the improvement. Mr. Martin is constantly receiving teas of all kinds, and his trade is found to increase as people become acquainted with him. See advertisement elsewhere.

FIRE INSURANCE.—The sixth annual statement of the Mechanics' and Traders' Insurance Company will be found among the insertions in our present issue. Considering the unfavorable financial condition of our business community during the entire six years of the existence of the company, we think its success is exceedingly creditable to the officers and trustees, and they deserve the gratitude of the stockholders and the confidence of the community. The company has steadily and rapidly gained in the confidence of business men, until no company possessing an equal amount of capital is so popular. To the close attention, superior financial skill and efficiency of the worthy president, Col Lloyd R. Coleman, the company is mostly if not unduly indebted for these results.

CANNABIS INDICA.—We are in receipt of a pamphlet containing extracts from testimonials given to Dr. H. Jannst' preparation of the Cannabis Indica, or East India Hemp, prepared and sold under the proprietorship of Craddock & Co., 1034 Race street, Philadelphia, whose advertisement will be found elsewhere. We have been assured that this firm is reliable and correct in its dealings.

VEGETABLE AND FLOWER SEEDS. C. F. Melville, Esq., 609 Magazine street, guarantees his seeds to be pure, fresh and reliable. Those who know Mr. Melville assure us that his word can be relied upon, and we take pleasure in directing attention to his advertisement.

BRASELMAN & ADAMS.—We call the attention of our readers to the extensive and thriving dry goods establishment of Messrs. Braselman & Adams, whose advertisement will be found in our columns, headed Nouveautes. It will pay to look in at 586 and 588 Magazine street.

PERIQUE TOBACCO.—Those who are fond of the genuine Perique tobacco should go directly to the establishment of E. Bourgeois, Esq., No. 19 Canal street, New Orleans. See his advertisement in another column.

BOOTS, SHOES AND TRUNKS AT LOW FIGURES FOR CASH.—See the card of H Mumme, Esq., 551 Magazine street. His customers speak in most flattering terms of him, as well as of his stock and prices.

THE China Palace of Messrs. Nivra & Oliver continues to be one of the attractions of Canal street. See advertisement and price list of sets in our advertising columns.

MILLINERY GOODS, fresh, attractive and of new styles, are imported direct by Mme. C. Samson, 605 Magazine street. Call and see her stock.

ADDRESS TO THE PUBLIC

BY THE

Louisiana Levee Company.

OFFICE LOUISIANA LEVEE COMPANY,
No. 21 Carondelet street,
New Orleans, November 13, 1875.

To the Public:

The undersigned, President of the Louisiana Levee Company, in behalf of the directors and stockholders of said company, deems it his duty to the public and to the stockholders to publish the following statements in correction and refutation of the persistent misstatements and false accusations made regarding us and our motives, and action through the press of New Orleans.

The parties, authorized, who formed the Levee Company, and originally contracted with the State of Louisiana for the building and maintenance of levees, in February, 1871, found themselves wholly unable to comply with their contract for want of capital. The State had previously issued more than $6,000,000 of bonds for levee construction purposes, under Boards of Commissioners; which bonds were much depreciated in value in the market, and the State was powerless to raise further means for continuing the work of levee maintenance. She had no money, and could no longer get the work done on credit. The levees were broken and gone in very many places, and unless something were done the whole alluvial portion of the state was certain to be inundated during the next floods of the river.

The State could not build the levees, and the new Levee Company, as then constituted, was equally powerless to proceed with the work if had undertaken, such was the situation in November, 1871.

At this juncture a few gentlemen, including among their number several bank presidents, large landed proprietors and capitalists, all resident citizens of long standing, who thought they would thereby render the State good service, joined together in the emergency and combined to invest a portion of their funds, and undertake to do what neither the State, the new Levee Company nor the riparian proprietors could do.

They acquired, as the only means of operating and of having the levees built (for the only possible instrumentality then was the newly-formed Levee Company,) the franchises and contract of said company. They then jointly contributed and paid in upward of $,000 in cash, for a capital, in December, 1871, and commenced to rebuild such levees as the State, through its Commission of Engineers, designated as most necessary, and ordered for construction. They built every levee so ordered, and complied with all the requirements of their contract stipulations as designated to them by the State as the proprietor of the levees, through her officials.

By the use of their whole capital, and straining their credit, they succeeded in tumbling upward of one hundred levees completely, with many others at the same time under process of construction, before receiving one dollar of compensation therefor from the State.

To October, 1872, they built levees amounting in the aggregate to 2,555,761 cubic yards, for which $1,534,657 was due, and on account of which only $292,000 had been paid to them by the State. The Levee Company has paid to its sub-contractors, on an average, from first to last, nearly thirty five cents per cubic yard on a cash basis, besides incurring all of its incidental and other necessary expenses. The company's loss, in interest alone, on the unpaid balances past due by the State, for work actually performed—say on about $1,500,000, at ten per cent for three and a half years—amounts to $525,000. The balance due the Levee Company on the first of November, 1875, after deducting all receipts from both the construction and repair funds, was over one and a half millions of dollars.

We have built 5,617,553 cubic yards of levees in all, and the amount charged to the State for construction and repairs is $3,256,947. It is said that the Levee Company is making large profits on its contract. If so, how is it that stock, the face value of which is fifteen dollars ($15) per share (on which no cash dividends have ever been paid) is now selling at prices varying from only two dollars to three dollars per share?

The facts are that the entire amount received from the State so far ($1,754,289) has been expended in levee construction and disbursements connected therewith. In addition to the amounts received from the State, we have advanced and expended out of our own means, obtained from other sources, $750,000, or about one-third of the cost of the levees built up to this time; for which we have received little else than abuse, coming from anonymous writers to the public, and which abuse was dictated, in some cases, by those whose venality had been disappointed by our refusal to submit to the exactions of "black mail," and in other cases emanating from the vindictive feelings of discharged employees.

How many business men in New Orleans, or anywhere else, would be willing to contract to build levees for the State of Louisiana at fifty cents per cubic yard, and wait a year or more to be reimbursed, without interest, after paying an average of thirty-five cents per cubic yard in cash, or its equivalent, to sub-contractors, interest on all loans, and other incidental expenses in addition? They would find the actual cost per cubic yard for levees at least forty cents—all expenses included.

Our company has complied with and kept its contract obligations faithfully from first to last, but the State from the very first has been and is still in default. The absurd impression prevails, even with those who should know better, that for some unexplained reason the Levee Company should build all the levees needed in Louisiana of its own volition, without orders and without compensation. For the amount of the balance due us we have rendered a full equivalent in work done, and yet we are denounced as seeking to rob the State for asking to be paid in depreciated State bonds the amount due us in cash, as per contract.

Large sums, in bonds and warrants, issued for no consideration whatever, as far as the public are informed, and even tainted with fraud from their first inception, have been funded, but our just claim is sought to be repudiated, and we ourselves held up for public execration for presuming to ask to be paid in bonds, instead of cash, for what is due us. By Act No. 4 of 1871 it was provided that the "State of Louisiana contracts and agrees with the Louisiana Levee Company in terms as follows:" "That the Auditor of Public Accounts shall be required to pay the Louisiana Levee Company at the rate of fifty cents per cubic yard for all levees constructed by said company after the first day of October, 1873," and for "all levees constructed by said company before the first day of October, 1873, * * * at the rate of sixty cents per cubic yard, as the existing contracts and laws provide." We seek but to obtain from the State the fulfillment of its contract stipulations.

It is said that the Levee Company has not the means to maintain the levee system, and therefore that its contract should be broken. The truth is that, if the State were in a condition to pay cash for all work done, our company could build any number of millions of yards annually for less than the present contract price. It is the State, and not our company, that is without the means to maintain the levee system. Our company is anxious that the United States should assume charge of levee construction and maintenance throughout the whole length of the Mississippi river, and is willing to yield all of its rights and privileges, so far as necessary to secure that end, to the General Government, if required to do so.

We entirely approve of the clause in the levee bill of the last Congress, which reads as follows:

"That the Secretary of War shall, after public advertisement, under the supervision of the said Chief of Engineers, let all work to be done by virtue of this act, and under this appropriation, to the lowest responsible bidder or bidders, and in no event shall the sum herein appropriated, or any part thereof, be applied to the payment of debts incurred by the local levee authorities, or to any other work than such as may be contracted for and constructed under the supervision of said Chief of Engineers."

We have no interests which are antagonistic to those of our fellow-citizens of Louisiana in this or any other respect. We claim that we have conferred a great benefit upon the public by maintaining the levees of Louisiana, so far as it was possible, with the means available to maintain them, and so far as the State, the proprietor, has required them to be built and maintained during the past five years, which, as is now evident, was much beyond the State's ability promptly to pay for.

We have in all respects faithfully complied with the terms of our contract, and performed much more than of right we could or should have been required to do as such contractor, and we claim that in no particular have we deservedly forfeited the confidence and esteem of the public. It has become the fashion to abuse the Levee Company—to vilify, misrepresent and slander it without right, cause or reason. Popular clamor and prejudice seem to demand it, but, so far as we know, every investigation of its affairs has failed to justify or furnish any grounds for such abuse.

Certain it is that, until the General Government comes to the relief of Louisiana, no other method so economical to the taxpayer, for securing even the partial protection which alone the State can provide for, can be devised. If the public think otherwise, we are willing to withdraw as soon as the indebtedness of the State to us for work done is liquidated.

I would now respectfully call public attention to the following resolution, unanimously adopted by the Board of Directors at their regular monthly meeting held November 9, 1875, as an expression of the views and purposes of this company:

"Whereas, The Louisiana Levee Company is unable to build all the levees of the State out of the taxes assessed and collected for that purpose, more particularly as large amounts have been deducted from said collection to meet the current wants of the State, and as commissions to assessors and tax collectors, under a construction of the law deemed by us erroneous, and even in direct conflict with the act incorporating this company;

"And whereas, It is the desire of this Board that the United States Government shall take entire charge and control of all the levees of the State; be it, therefore,

"Resolved, That this Board will use all its influence to induce the General Government to assume control of all the levees of the State of Louisiana, and, in case such action be taken by Congress, the Louisiana Levee Company will surrender all the rights, titles and franchises conferred upon it by the act incorporating said company, provided that the State of Louisiana makes a just and equitable settlement of the sums due said company at that date for repairs upon and construction of levees, as per contract."

JOHN HENDERSON,
President Louisiana Levee Company.

NOTE.—Inasmuch as our attention has been called to the fact that an impression exists in the minds of many that the series of bonds known as "Levee" and "Special Levee" bonds were issued to this company, we beg leave to add, in addition to what is stated above, that no bonds of any description have ever been issued to or in favor of the Louisiana Levee Company.

Neither has any portion of the proceeds of such bonds inured to the benefit of or been paid to the Levee Company.

The taxes annually levied and collected for the "Levee" and "Special Levee" tax funds are used to pay interest on bonds issued anterior to the existence of the Levee Company, for levees constructed under the old Boards of Levee Commissioners, and the present Levee Company has nothing to do with the disbursement of said funds. The interest alone on said bonds has about equaled the present assessment of three mills for the annual construction and repairs of levees, under the contract with the Levee Company.

The first cost of levees, paid for in bonds under the old system, was much higher than the price paid to our company, while the annual interest on the old bonds has been as much as is now paid to the company for levee work done. For instance, the State Treasurer, in his reports for 1874 and 1875, gives the amount of the annual assessment to pay interest on bonds issued for levee purposes anterior to the existence of the Levee company at $567,530 per annum, an amount far in excess of the three mill tax annually received by the company. no23 2t

MEDICAL.

I MUST OWN that your Simmons' Liver Regulator fully deserves the popularity it has attained. As a family medicine it has no equal. It cured my wife of a malady I had counted incurable—that wolf-bane of our American people, Dyspepsia. She desires that all nations and people might know the virtues of this God-given remedy. Hoping that the above will appear in your Almanac of 1876, and be of some use in extolling the virtues of your excellent medicine, is the wish of your humble servant,

A. E. P. ALBERT,
Professor in Nicholas Public School,
Parish of Terrebonne, La.

I have used Simmons' Liver Regulator for two years, and recommend it as a very superior medicine for Dyspepsia and Liver Disease.

GEORGE W. SMITH,
Kentucky Conference,
Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Your valuable medicine (Simmons' Regulator) has saved the doctors' bills often. I use it for everything that it is recommended for, and never know it to fail. I have used it in Colic and Grubs with my mules and horses, giving them about half a bottle at a time. I have not lost one that I gave it to. You can recommend it to every one that has stuck as being the best medicine known for all complaints that horse flesh is heir to.

E. T. TAYLOR,
Agent for Grangers of Georgia.

Wetumpka (Ala.) Banner.

Simmons' Liver Regulator doubtless is one of the best medicines ever compounded from the great botanic garden of nature, and contains no life-destroying component hidden under some technical name, but is a purifier, rejuvenator and regulator not only of the Liver, but of the whole system.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Bones for Poultry.

The various preparations of pure bones, selected and prepared, as crushed, granulated, bone meal, etc., for feeding to poultry, are becoming each year more popular, and deservedly so. The experience of nearly every one who has given them a faithful trial has been such as to make them constant patrons of the most reliable venders, it being invariably found that by a judicious use of broken or ground new bone the fowls are healthier, more prolific, stand confinement better, and acquire less bad habits by confinement. Chickens fed on these preparations to the proper extent will grow to a much better size, the use of the bone having the effect to postpone the time when the bones harden, or, in common phrase, set. Chicks are, therefore, such for a greater period, and may be kept growing for a longer time by the use of bone preparations.

To such as want authority on this point we would recommend a careful perusal of the valuable opinion of Louis Wright, as given in his celebrated Book of Poultry, where he speaks with the utmost assurance from positive experience. Mr. Wright was very much surprised at the result of his own experiments, but was perfectly satisfied therewith, and unhesitatingly recommends chicken fanciers to use the bone freely.

His opinion is corroborated by the experience of hundreds who have very materially improved the laying qualities and general health of their flocks by the use of such bones as were saved from the household cooking, and broken into fragments with an ax or stone.

It becomes, then, a matter of interest to many, a fancier: "How shall I obtain these preparations?" They are to be had, but not without the incurring of a large expense for transportation, if sent by express. In large quantities, by the sack, barrel or ton, the goods may be sent as freight, at a much less pro rata cost, but a greater time occupied in transit, and many dealers would not want more than fifty or one hundred pounds at once.

We advise the fanciers to club together to obviate these difficulties, to purchase in large quantities at minimum rates, and thus secure at regular intervals a fresh supply of this valuable help at a reasonable cost.—New York Poultry Journal.

CULTIVATING THE VEGETABLE GARDEN.—It formerly was more common than now, but the practice is not obsolete, of making a vigorous show in the spring of "making gardens," expending much care and labor in dividing the allotted space into small beds, and carefully smoothing out the passage way between. Unfortunately this vigorous commencement is sometimes followed by after neglect, which is made the more probable from the fact that in a garden thus divided all the work must be done by hand labor.

There is much gained by arranging the small fruits and many of the vegetables in long rows. In the first place, space is saved, but more important than this is the gain from being able to use the horse in cultivating and in plowing the ground. On this subject the New York Tribune says:

"A member of the Horticultural Society of Muskingum county, O., remarked at a recent meeting that 'if farmers would have their gardens large enough to cultivate with a horse they would be more successful than they are with spade and hoe.' Which suggests the practice of a distinguished farmer of our acquaintance, who, instead of surrounding his garden with a fence and a row of bushes, locates it in open space, with sufficient margin of turf to turn on. He finds that the labor of tillage is very much less with such a plot than under the ordinary system, while the vegetables and small fruits can be approached from the nearest point when a mess is desired for culinary use. He thus avoids also fence-corners, which in most farmers' gardens are very likely to be neglected, and are kept clear of weeds only at the cost of a good deal of eternal vigilance."—Western Rural.

SULPHURIC ACID AND WEEDS.—A correspondent of the Journal of Horticulture (England) writes: "Take an old blacking-bottle, with a wire around it to carry it by, and a stick to dip with. The stick should not be pointed, but should be notched round for an inch or two at the end, the better to hold the liquor. Just one drop quite in the heart of the plantain is sufficient to cause death, and the notched stick will contain at one dip enough to destroy three or four plants. If the acid is good the work of death can both be seen and heard, for the vitriol hisses, and it burns up the plantain in a moment. A row of plantains a foot wide sprang up on a lawn here where an iron fence formerly ran. The owner, seeing at a place he visited the good effect of vitriol, put the hint in practice. The plantains were killed in an hour, and have never appeared again. It is three years since, and it is impossible to recognize the line of the fence; it completely burns the roots out. I have tried it on large dandelions with the same result. One of the young men there amused himself by hunting the longest thistles he could find to experiment on. The vitriol completely killed them by eating the roots out. One drop will do. Care is required that it does not touch the skin, boots or clothes; it is not safe in the hands of children, but a man or woman, with ten minutes' practice, can kill plantains much more quickly than a lad can eat gooseberries."

OATMEAL BREAKFAST CAKE.—Take one pint of oatmeal, a pinch of salt, and just enough warm water to stir it as thick as rye griddle cakes. Pour it into a shallow baking-pan, and bake for twenty minutes in a hot oven. Or, if the oven cannot be heated in season for breakfast, turn the batter into a buttered frying-pan, and set it on the stove closely covered and bake for fifteen minutes; then brown in the oven. Break open the cake and spread it with butter, and you will prefer it to fried doughnuts or batter cakes. It can also be cooked as griddle cakes by adding a handful of wheat flour and a little more warm water.

GRIEVE not that men know not; you grieve that you know not men. Confucius.

MEDICAL.

DUCONGE'S

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP.

NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound. Its well-established virtues and its high reputation in all ailments of the Chest, Lungs, Throat and Bowels is so well known, and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage, that it would be superfluous, at this late day, to dwell at any length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Bowels, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial in all inflammatory disorders, such as Rheumatism, Diarrhea or Dysentery and Summer Complaint, and especially in those cases of Cholerine which, for want of proper care, so often degenerate into confirmed Cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, verging on Consumption, it has been found most efficacious in preventing that most awful scourge whenever timely resorted to.

Besides its acknowledged certainty of cure, this truly extraordinary medicine has, over most compounds of the same nature, the decided advantage that, owing to its agreeable flavor, it can be administered without the least difficulty to children, and it requires no particular diet. It is also the cheapest, not only because the bottles contain more syrup than any other, but owing to its peculiar composition this Syrup will keep for years without fermenting, and it can be used in families whenever required by simply keeping the bottle well corked.

Directions for Taking the Syrup.—Grown persons can take from four to six spoonfuls in the course of the day, either pure or diluted in a little water, or a less quantity at intervals of three or four hours.

Persons much troubled during the night may take two tablespoonfuls of the Syrup on going to bed, when it will stop the cough and procure a good night's rest.

Children from three to five years old may take from four to six teaspoonfuls during the day, in suitable quantities, at intervals of three to four hours. For sale by

D. M. HOLLINGSWORTH'S PATENT DOUBLE SCROLL

The greatest improvement of the age on the old Concord Buggy. Twelve Bolts, instead of four, to hold the Springs and raise them up, so they cannot strike the axles at the end.

I HAVE RECENTLY ACCEPTED THE AGENCY OF THE CELEBRATED

STUDEBAKER WAGON.

FROM ONE TO SIX HORSE.

THE MOST SUBSTANTIAL WAGONS MADE!

There are several reasons why all should buy the above Wagon: First. They are made of the BEST SELECTED TIMBER, the same being cut at the proper season of the year, piled under sheds, properly dried, and allowed to remain there from three to five years. Second. The wood-work is shaped by the latest improved machinery, put together by the BEST WAGON MECHANICS IN THE WORLD, and are the best ironed and painted Wagons in the market. Third. Their thimble skeins, made of select iron, are set by patent skein setters, and weigh from four to twenty-five pounds per set more than any other, thereby making a perfect running Wagon, which will not break. Fourth. They are the only Wagon in which the SLOPE-SHOULDER SPOKE is used; hence they have the best wheel, which is actually the foundation of the Wagon, and should be carefully examined by persons purchasing. Fifth. They are sold only by responsible parties, and every Wagon is warranted; while the Studebaker Bros. are practical workmen, and attend to their business personally; hence the superiority of their work over all others.

NEW PATENT TIDY FASTENER.—Seldom does it occur in the history of a new invention that the manufacturers do not experience great difficulty in convincing their patrons of its merits, but our new Tidy Fastener seems to have filled a vacancy, as it were, to be the article wanted to make up the comforts of a well-regulated home.

We have spared neither time, labor nor expense in making it a first-class article, feeling assured that in so doing we shall merit a continuance of the confidence so generously reposed in us by a discriminating public.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The river is 12 feet 7 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals for the three days ending November 30:

Mississippi river and bayous	bales...	16,044
Red river		1,068
Ouachita river		1,196
Railroads		7,794
Lake		109
Mobile		688
Texas		2,612
Total		30,310

On Saturday the market opened rather quiet, but there was, nevertheless, a fair inquiry, and 1,200 bales changed hands during the morning, after which the movement became more active, resulting in additional sales of 6,500 bales, making a total of 8,000 bales. On Monday the movement commenced under the unfavorable influence of a decline at New York of 1-16c. in spots (followed later by a further falling off to the same extent.) and 1-16@1-16c. in futures, while the movement was checked by dark and rainy weather. The business during the morning was of limited extent, but later in the day buyers came forward with a better spirit, and the entire sales summed up 6,350 bales. Sales of average middling were reported as low as 12½c., and of good ordinary, with good staple, at 10¾c. On Tuesday, although the weather continued dark and rainy, yet, as the demand was stimulated by an advance in foreign exchange and by factors evincing a disposition to meet it more freely, the movement was more active and resulted in sales of 10,100 bales. In several cases factors accepted offers which they had refused on Monday.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 24,450 bales, against 20,850 for the corresponding time last week and 22,550 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 383,417 bales, against 309,645 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 164,832 bales. The increase by the reports per telegraph is 170,678—1,534,818 against 1,364,140. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 54,643 bales to France, of 117,841 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 76,248 to Great Britain. We quote:

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

VOL. 21. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1875. NO. 50.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

BOSTON, Nov. 30.—This is an unprecedented season. In all sections of New England the thermometer stands four to twenty-two below zero.

The gale extended along the New England coast. The velocity here at one time was sixty-five miles an hour. A large school-house at Waterville was unroofed while the school was in session. The children escaped without serious injury.

NEW YORK, Dec. 1.—During the past thirty weeks there have been established 812 newspapers and periodicals in the United States and Canadas. The suspensions in the same period have been 484. This gives an average of 27 new publications weekly, and a death rate of 16 per week.

Intelligence from Toledo, Spain, says that the authorities have closed the Protestant church there, and expelled the pastor and schoolmaster.

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—At a meeting of the Board of Aldermen yesterday a petition was received from the United American Bricklayers' Association, asking for the passage of an ordinance authorizing their employment on public works. It recited that the association consisted of upward of five thousand members; that not more than one-fifth of their number were working; that they had passed through two seasons of idleness; that the present condition of business was such that capitalists could not or would not employ them; that they seek labor and not charity; that they will not be able to sustain their families during the present winter, and that the city must, therefore, choose between furnishing them with charity or labor. The petition closed with the following sentence: "We know that by becoming convicts we can be assured of labor by the State or city, and we hope we will not be driven to that extremity."

Henry C. Watson, editor of Watson's Art Journal, is dead.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—The Secretary of the Navy on Thursday reported to the President that to fit the vessels now ready for duty for immediate sea service would require one thousand men in excess of the number now allowed by law. The President to-day ordered the requisite number to be shipped, regardless of existing laws. This action has created a profound sensation.

The nomination of Kerr for speaker, which was made on the third ballot, is a victory for the hard-money Tilden Democrats. The caucus after this adjourned until twenty minutes past seven, when the nominations for the complete organization of the House will be made.

The indictment of Gen. Babcock at St. Louis is creating great excitement.

It is rumored that Bingham, a leading distiller of Indiana, who pleaded guilty, went before the grand jury and made some astonishing revelations inculpating men very high in position, including, it is said, leading men in New Orleans.

The town is alive with rumors, some of which can be verified. A very high official told me to-day that Jewell would certainly leave the cabinet soon.

Every officer of the navy now on leave has been ordered to report for immediate duty.

GALVESTON, Dec. 4.—Very heavy rains prevailed throughout the State. At Hempstead twelve inches of rain fell in seven hours. The entire country is flooded. Considerable damage was done to railroads. One passenger train is off near Courtney, on the Central. An engine and tender which was dispatched to its assistance was precipitated through a culvert which had been washed. One man, Mr. Fowler, of Hempstead, is reported killed, and two others seriously wounded. The through express trains are blocked up at Navasota and Hempstead, the Austin train at Chappel Hill. It is stated the breaks will be repaired by Monday, and trains will again be running regularly.

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—William M. Tweed has escaped.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 5.—The steamer Gaelic has arrived from Hong Kong, November 3, and Yokohama the eleventh. A Japanese frigate, commanded by Capt. Ito, has started on a cruise in American waters. She touches at San Francisco. No immediate action will be taken by Japan against Corea. The British minister in Yeddo is making strenuous efforts to prevent the selection of Americans for positions of trust under the Japanese government.

There is continued trouble between foreigners and Chinese. American missionaries and ladies are assailed by mobs in Nauking, and an English lady was attacked at Jakn. The telegraph builders have again been driven from their work near Fuehau, and the Amoy officials protest their inability to control the populace. The attempt of China to control the Formosa aborigines has been abandoned. An imperial decree conceding free intercourse on stated occasions between foreign ministers and heads of departments of Peking has been published in the official gazette.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The admission of Morey to a seat to-day is considered the final defeat of the opponents to the de facto government in Louisiana. Lamar said in his speech that the compromise had been kept by the opposite party, and there must be no charge of bad faith against the Democrats.

FOREIGN.

ALEXANDRIA, Nov. 28.—The Abyssinians surprised and killed twelve hundred Egyptians, including twelve officers.

MADRID, Nov. 30.—Mr. Cushing, the American minister, will to-morrow present to the minister of foreign affairs a telegraphic reply from his government to the last Spanish note. The tenor of the American dispatch is considered very satisfactory, and dissipates recent apprehensions.

The ministerial changes resolved upon in the cabinet council of Saturday, and already announced, will take place on Thursday.

The first day of February is appointed for the meeting of the Cortes.

The Cronista states that at a conference between Gens. Jovellar, Campes and Quesada, at which the King was present, a plan of campaign in the north was agreed upon. It was decided that there should be a short delay in the commencement of operations on account of the unfavorable weather.

The Epoca, in an editorial article to-day, demonstrates the pressing necessity of a treaty of commerce and navigation between Spain and the United States, especially with regard to the commercial interests of Cuba.

LONDON, Nov. 30.—Prof. Thomas Hewitt Key, the philologist, is dead. He was mathematical professor in the University of Virginia in 1824.

LONDON, Dec. 2.—A Daily News special from Madrid gives the contents of the recent Spanish note to the United States.

Spain promises the gradual emancipation of slavery in Cuba, increased freedom of commerce; besides, foreigners, when arrested, shall have an immediate hearing, and legal redress shall be obtainable for past injuries.

Another special to the same journal says that great anxiety exists in Madrid regarding the reception of the note at Washington, as it embodies Spain's ultimatum.

Yesterday was settling day at the Stock Exchange. There were rather more failures than usual; the largest was that of Braggiotti Bros., stock and share brokers. Their liabilities are estimated at $350,000. There were also five other failures of less importance.

LONDON, Dec. 4.—The Pall Mall Gazette this evening contains the following brief but startling news item: An awful explosion occurred to-day at the Swaithe Maine colliery, near Barnsly, in the West Riding of Yorkshire. It is feared that more than two hundred lives are lost.

MADRID, Dec. 5.—Mr. Cushing, the United States minister, has had a long conference with Senor Collantes, the new minister of foreign affairs. It is understood the negotiations continue to be satisfactory.

From the Work.

WARRINGTON, FLA.—Mr. Editor: It is with great pleasure that I write you these few lines to let you know that our little church is still progressing. Our circuit preacher, Bro. W. H. Morris, has preached his last sermon for us, and we had a good meeting. Bro. Morris preached an excellent sermon, and we all felt that it was good for us to be there.

I thank God that we all have our faces still Zionward. Oh, may we still press onward until we gain that pearl of great price? Hoping that you will allow this a small space in our weekly visitor—the dear old ADVOCATE—I remain your brother in Christ, THEODORE E. KELLY.

DECEMBER 4, 1875.

VIRGINIA CONFERENCE STATISTICS, REPORTED AT ITS LATE SESSION.—A. G. Brown, from the joint board of finance, reported the appropriations made by the board of the funds in hand to the various claimants, which were confirmed, and furnished answers as follows to Minute questions 27 and 28: Amount necessary for superannuated preachers, and widows and orphans of preachers, $5,920; collected on foregoing account, $5,920; applied to superannuated preachers, $1,745; applied to widows and orphans, $4,175; total, $5,920.

The statistics were reported as follows in answer to Minute questions 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26: Number of local preachers, 189; number of members, 48,082; number of baptisms, infants, 1,322; number of baptisms, adults, 2,474; number of Sunday schools, 595; number of Sunday school teachers, 6,084; number of Sunday school scholars, 33,687.

THE threatened hostilities between the republic of Liberia and the aborigines on its borders has arisen, it is said, out of a question of disputed boundaries, and also a question as to the right of the aborigines to trade with European nations on Liberian territory. A battle has been fought in which about fifty were killed and wounded. It is believed that the Liberians will be able to subdue the malcontents.

THE forty-fifth semi-annual Mormon Conference met at Salt Lake City on the sixth ultimo. Brigham Young presided, and announced that "instruction would be imparted to the saints as the Holy Spirit might direct the various speakers."

AMERICAN BROOMS, from their superior make and finish, have attracted attention in Europe, and heavy shipments of the article are now made to England and Germany. The business at present is remarkably good.

Alabama Conference,

COLORED M. E. CHURCH IN AMERICA.

MR. EDITOR: The Alabama Conference of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America closed a very harmonious and, I think, profitable session in this place (Gadsden, Ala.,) on Monday night, the twenty-second instant, after having been in session six days. Bishop Lane, of that church, presided.

The North Alabama Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South was in session at Birmingham, Ala., at the same time. Our preachers at this place, itinerant and local, except myself, were there attending Conference; and I only left here to witness the proceedings of this colored Conference. I am happy to say it was to me a season of pleasure and delight, and I hope of profit. I was not only surprised but greatly edified to witness the manifest improvement which the most of them had made over past years in point of preaching, education, a knowledge of the regular Conference business, and the rules laid down in the Discipline to govern such bodies. In that body I saw the hoary-haired veteran and the beardless youth mingling together, bringing up their reports from their different fields of labor. Here I heard accounts of hard circuits, large districts, hard work, little money, short pay, opposition and persecution, mostly, however, from those foreign elements which had been introduced among their people, and which had been the cause of dividing their class into parties in their church relations. But amidst all these discouragements and disadvantages there was no murmuring; saw no log-rolling for easy circuits and fat places, if they had such; no demands upon the Bishop to "send me to such a place or 'I'll stop—I'll locate,'" but a general submission of their destiny to the Bishop and his cabinet appeared to be manifest. Accounts of revivals, conversions, accessions, the building of new churches, and the opening up of some new fields of labor came in from many parts. I saw among them a general disposition to learn and improve themselves in knowledge. While their education, of course, was somewhat limited, yet many if not all could read, and some fluently; and I saw several good penmen, and I believe all, young and old, were striving to obtain as liberal an education as was in their power. Some of the reports submitted would have been creditable in any Conference—superior to some I have heard at some of our Annual Conferences.

We gave them the use of our church, which was occupied during the day with Conference business, and at night with preaching. They had also the use of the Baptist church on Sunday. From their minutes and from the statistical secretary I obtained the following items, which show their strength in this State so far as they could approximate correctness, as several of their preachers, and I believe some of their presiding elders, were absent, and their works not fully represented: Admitted on trial, 2; into full connection, 6; deacons ordained at this Conference, 13; elders, 5; remaining on trial, 17; died, 2; traveling preachers, 80; church members, 10,256; number of districts, 8; circuits and stations, 80; amount collected for Bishops, presiding elders and preachers in charge, $2,546.10; Sunday schools, 88; collected for missions, $17.25; value of church property, $17,070.95.

Now a few things in reference to Bishop Lane, the presiding officer of this Conference, and I close. His manly bearing, and the respectful attitude which he maintained toward both races, but especially to the whites; his loyalty to Southern Methodism, its principles, doctrines, usages, etc., together with the appropriate lectures and sermons which he delivered to both whites and colored; his apparent perfect acquaintance with the law and usages of Methodism in the Conference-room and in the pulpit; his manifest desire to improve his people in knowledge and religion, as was seen from his acts and associations with them; and his zealous labors to impress them with the idea that they must labor and study to elevate themselves, together with the clear, forcible manner that he preached the gospel, left upon the minds of this community the conviction that he was "the right man in the right place." On Sabbath morning before the ordination of deacons he delivered a very appropriate and impressive sermon to his people from Second Timothy, 4, v. At half-past three o'clock P. M., by request of the whites, he preached to a large and attentive congregation from the words of St. Paul: "All are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's;" after which, by the suggestion of a good Baptist brother, a collection was taken up for him, and although the amount received was not very large, yet it showed the high appreciation in which he was held by the white citizens of the place, who regard his visit here, and that of his Conference, as having produced a fine effect upon both races in bringing them nearer to each other, and in cementing them, at least in interest, more fully than before. After this he explained to the people the nature, origin and objects of their organization—who they were, and from whom they sprung, etc. Many of his congregation left that evening wiser than they were before on this subject. At night, after a discourse by one of his aged preachers, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered to a large number of communicants. He closed his Conference on Monday night by giving his preachers an impressive and instructive lecture, reading out the appointments, singing the parting hymn, and they dispersed to the east, west, north and south, carrying with them the good wishes, kind feelings and prayers of the people of Gadsden.

LIBRARIES OF THE UNITED STATES. There are in the United States more than 70 public libraries which contain over 25,000 volumes each. Of these, 9 possess more than 100,000 volumes, 7 more than 50,000 and less than 100,000, and 17 more than 35,000 and less than 50,000. The largest collection is the Congress Library, which has 261,000 volumes. The Public Library of Boston contains nearly the same number, and increases at the rate of 15,000 volumes a year. Harvard College has 200,000; the Astor and the Mercantile of New York, 148,000 each; the Mercantile and the Library Company of Philadelphia, 105,000 and 101,000 respectively; the Athenæum of Boston, 103,000; and Yale College, 100,000. The New York State Library, at Albany, has 67,500 volumes, not including the Law Library, which has 25,500. The Society Library of New York possesses 64,000 volumes; the Public of Cincinnati, 62,000; the Peabody Institute of Baltimore, 56,000; the Antiquarian Society of Worcester, 55,000; and the Apprentices' of New York and Dartmouth College, 50,000 each. HEROINES OF METHODISM. By Mrs. and Miss Martin. Edited by Atticus G. Haygood, D. D. Nashville, Tenn.: Published by A. H. Redford, agent, for the Methodist Episcopal Church South, 1875.

This little volume of 224 pages contains brief sketches of seven of the elect ladies of early Methodism, to wit: Susanna Wesley, Mrs. Fletcher, Mrs. Coke, Lady Huntingdon, Mrs. Hester Ann Rogers, Lady Maxwell, Grace Murray. The authors have done their work well, considering the condensed form in which these most interesting characters are portrayed. The style is clear, pure, sprightly. We commend the work most heartily. It should be placed at once in all of our homes and Sunday schools.

—Scholars' Hand-Book on the International Lessons, from January to July, 1876, is by Rev. Edwin W. Rice, and published by the American Sunday School Union, Philadelphia. It embraces studies in the life of David, and studies in the Acts. For those who use the International Lessons this little volume will be a great convenience.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE FOR 1876. In no other way can so much of the best work of the best minds of the time be obtained so cheaply or conveniently as through this standard eclectic weekly.

In 1876 it enters upon its thirty-third year, having met with continued and increasing success, and being now, since its absorption of Every Saturday, practically without a rival in its field. With its weekly issue, and its three and a quarter thousand large pages of reading matter a year, it is enabled to present with a freshness and satisfactory completeness, attempted by no other publication, the ablest essays and reviews, the choicest serial and short stories, the most interesting sketches of travel and discovery, the best poetry, and the most valuable biographical, historical, scientific and political information from the entire body of foreign periodical literature. It would be difficult, therefore, to overestimate its importance to American readers as the only thorough compilation of an indispensable current literature—indispensable because it embraces the productions of the foremost living writers in science, fiction, history, biography, theology, philosophy, politics, criticism and art.

Such distinguished authors as Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Max Muller, Prof. Huxley, Dr. W. B. Carpenter, Prof. Tyndall, R. A. Proctor, the Duke of Argyll, Edward A. Freeman, Francis Power Cobbe, James Anthony Froude, Mrs. Muloch, Mrs. Oliphaut, Miss Thackeray, Jean Ingelow, George MacDonald, Thomas Hardy, William Black, Anthony Trollope, R. D. Blackmore, Mrs. Parr, Julia Kavanagh, Mrs. Macquoid, Matt. Arnold, Henry Kingsley, Thomas Carlyle, F. W. Newman, W. W. Story, Robert Buchanan, Tennyson, Browning, etc., are represented in its pages; and during the coming year, besides the best fiction by the leading foreign novelists, it will give the usual amount, unapproached by any other periodical, of the most important literary and scientific matter of the day, from the pens of the above-named and many other able living contributors to current literature.

The Living Age has always stood "at the head of its class," not only as the best, but, all things considered, the cheapest of the eclectics; and in the multiplicity of quarterlies, monthlies and weeklies it has become almost a necessity to every person or family of intelligence and taste; for it alone furnishes such a compendium of whatever is of immediate interest or permanent value in the literary world as to render it an invaluable economizer of time, labor and money.

The subscription price ($8 a year) is cheap for the amount of reading furnished; or for those desiring the cream of both home and foreign literature the publishers make a still cheaper offer, viz.: to send (postage prepaid on both periodicals) the Living Age and either one of the American $4 monthlies or weeklies, a year, for $10.50. With the Living Age and one or other of our leading American monthlies a subscriber will, at remarkably small cost, be in possession of the best which the current literature of the world affords.

The volume begins January 1, and to new subscribers, remitting now, the publishers (Littell & Gay, Boston) offer to send the intervening numbers gratis.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1875.

THE NINETY-AND-NINE.

There were ninety-and-nine that safely lay
In the shelter of the fold;
But one was out on the hills away,
Far off from the gates of gold,
Away on the mountains wild and bare,
Away from the tender Shepherd's care.

"Lord, thou hast here thy ninety-and-nine;
Are they not enough for thee?"
But the Shepherd made answer: "This one of mine
Has wandered away from me;
And although the road be rough and steep,
I go to the desert to find my sheep."

But none of the ransomed ever knew
How deep were the waters crossed,
Nor how dark was the night that the Lord passed through,
Ere he found his sheep that was lost.
Out in the desert he heard its cry—
Sick and helpless, and ready to die.

"Lord, whence are these blood-drops all the way
That mark out the mountain's track?"
"They were shed for one who had gone astray Ere the Shepherd could bring him back!"
"Lord, whence are they so red and torn?"
"They are pierced to-night by many a thorn."

And all through the mountains, thunder-riven,
And up from the rocky steep,
There rose a cry to the gate of heaven:
"Rejoice! I have found my sheep!"
And the angels echoed around the throne:
"Rejoice, for the Lord brings back his own!"

Fraternity.

The General Conference of 1874 proposed to enter into fraternal relations with the Northern Church upon certain specified conditions, and through the Bishops appointed commissioners to treat with said church upon said conditions. Now the advocacy of unconditional fraternity by certain brethren, in opposition to the action of the General Conference, cannot further, but must, to the extent of their influence, embarrass negotiations. Of course these brethren cannot hope to influence the commissioners to ignore instructions. What, then, can be their purpose? Have they personal interests to further? Or do they wish to encourage the Northern Church to persist in wrong-doing? Or can they wish to weaken us by fomenting divisions? Or do they wish to make the impression, on the outside world, that they are the only ones in the Southern Church that have the sweet spirit of charity? We will not charge them with any such motives; for many of them are honorable brethren. But then we are greatly puzzled to understand why they should thrust themselves between the commissioners appointed by the General Conference and the Northern Church. If they crawl uninvited into the middle they must not complain if it should be too hot for comfortable resting. The three star brother thinks they are aiming at organic union, and I must confess that he gives some pretty stubborn facts in support of this hypothesis. But still I must think they have no well-defined object. They are just experimenting—like the Lincoln county man, in the "Georgia Scenes"—just trying to see how they could "a fought." Whatever may be their aim, they are exceedingly pugnacious—especially Bro. Abbey—for peace.

If you will take Bro. Abbey's papers, and so edit them as to cut off all redundancy, they would take the premium for containing more fallacies than any papers of the same length ever published in the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Take, then, a few instances at random:

1. He says: "Two parties, individuals, communities, nations or churches," can negotiate to better advantage if on "fraternal terms;" hence he concludes that it is best to "unite these churches in good, wholesome fraternity," and then to address ourselves to the settlement of the difficulties. He begs the question by assuming that unconditional fraternity would be "good, wholesome"—that is the question at issue. The doctrine he advocates is this: A town in a state of siege should surrender and then make terms with the besiegers. The nation that is fighting for the redress of wrongs should make peace and then enter into negotiations. Bro. Abbey's expedient has the merit of being original, unique. Whoever would put it afloat, however, might find it, like Crusoe's boat, too heavy for his strength. No statesman ever did or ever will venture upon an expedient so wild and reckless. Mr. Crawford, in the war of 1812, did advise Mr. Clay to propose terms that should ignore the question at issue—the impressment of American seamen—but Mr. Crawford distinctly states that he gave the advice because the battle of Waterloo had liberated Wellington's English forces, and these, if turned against us, might soon put us in the situation of France—at the mercy of the enemy. But Mr. Crawford would have been pronounced non-compos then had he advised peace without settling the question at issue, on the avowed principle that that was the best way for nations, and afterward they could resort to diplomacy with greater advantage.

Now the Northern Church began a war on us over thirty years ago:

"A war fit for Cain to be the leader of—
An abhorred, accursed, a fraternal war."

(If the reader will turn to Bro. Abbey's first paper he will see that I make a better application of his poetry than he does himself; and before I am done he will see that Bro. Abbey is more unfortunate in his application of Scripture than he is of poetry.) The same General Conference that sent fraternal messengers to us with honeyed words also sent Bishop Haven as a chosen representative and exponent of this "fraternal war." Their words were smoother than butter; but, if actions speak louder than words, we must conclude that war was in their hearts. Yet our brother advises us to surrender at discretion, and thus put ourselves upon their generosity. Suppose we heed this advice, and that our fraternal enemies turn on us and say: "We now have all we desire—unconditional fraternity." What would we then do? Hold on to this hollow fraternity, or retrace our steps? If you run the ship on these breakers it may take a real, bonafide miracle to rescue her.

2. He says: "There is one and but one thing in the world * * * calculated, above all other things, to heal breaches." Well, what is this wonderful panacea? He answers: "That thing is fraternity * * * or a religious regard for the opinions, views and feelings of others, though they may be in the wrong." A religious regard for the wrong opinions, wrong views and wrong feelings of others! If this be the only one thing in the world calculated to heal breaches, then let discord reign forever. If this be your idea of fraternity, brother, then write me down against it. Why, my dear brother, you would take into Christian fraternal relations all the heretics from Cain, the fratricidal murderer, to the Gnostics of every shade and hue, and from the Gnostics to our day; you would include all skeptics from Julian, the Apostate; if, indeed, your rule did not oblige you to Christian fraternity with the devil and his angels. If "a religious regard for wrong feelings" be Christian fraternity, as you declare, then I know no parties to whom it may be more appropriately extended than "the devil and his angels." He holds his premises firmly, and he marches boldly to the conclusion. If I felt myself bound to have a religious regard for wrong opinions, views and feelings, I should certainly go with Bro. Abbey for unconditional fraternity with the Northern Church.

3. Bro. Abbey quotes Scripture. His quotations are correct; his scripture is "good, wholesome;" but he fails in the most difficult part of a discourse—some of his applications are amazingly wide of the mark. He says: "From one end of the line to the other we are commanded to let brotherly love continue." He seems strangely to forget the facts of history. It will be needful for another General Conference to put them on record for his benefit. Can it be possible that Bro. Abbey does not remember that the Northern Church is wholly responsible for preventing the continuance of brotherly love—that, indeed, she would have no brotherhood at all with us? No! no! brother, not all along the line—only along the northern part of the line is that exhortation applicable. He quotes again: "Mark them which cause divisions and offenses contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned, and avoid them." Now the Northern Church did cause these divisions by deposing a Bishop without trial, and other unwarranted and lawless proceedings. The Southern Church did withdraw, in accordance with this scripture. The three star brother was not in this difficulty except by his representatives. Indeed he was not a member of the church at the time, was not old enough to form an opinion. And now, forsooth, because he will not rush back to the arms of these offenders, over the grave of his deposed Bishop and over the recorded acts of his General Conference, is he to be charged with causing divisions? Oh, no! Bro. Abbey. Your gun is good metal—a veritable war gun; it has range enough—rather too much; it is well loaded—but you are shooting at the wrong man. Turn it northward and you will bring them down by hundreds of thousands.

I perhaps ought to apologize to the three star brother for entering into his controversy. I know him well enough to believe that he needs no help. My apology is the one the boy made for knocking his father off the log. "Why did you do it?" asked the father. The son replied: "You lay so fair I could not help it."

WILLIAM A. MCCARTY.

AN Americanized citizen was called on as a witness in a case before one of the justices lately, and when the oath was administered he raised both hands and said: "I shall spoke nodding what ain't drew, if ever I hope to die so quick as a minute!"

Montgomery Male and Female Institute, Lower Peachtree, Ala.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me through the columns of the ADVOCATE to call attention to the Montgomery Male and Female Institute, a new school just sprung up on Lower Peachtree circuit.

Six months ago the idea that a high school calculated to prepare young men and girls to enter the first colleges and seminaries of the country could be established and put in successful operation in this section of country had never been conceived, much less entertained, by even, those so sensibly impressed with the necessity of such an enterprise; yet, through the indomitable energy and perseverance of a single community, generously aided by the merchants at Lower Peachtree, and a few others friendly to education, land was procured, lumber purchased, and hauled over twenty miles, a house built, and the school opened on the fourth of October last, under the supervision and control of Rev. W. A. Montgomery, of the Alabama Conference, and at present pastor of the circuit, with thirty-seven pupils, and has since steadily increased to between fifty-five and sixty, with very flattering prospects for a still greater increase.

The school is located in the country, not even a store or business house of any kind nearer than five miles, where there never has been a school of higher pretensions than those usually taught for a few months in the year by journeymen teachers, and in the midst of a people who deserve the more credit for their zeal from the fact that such were the only criterion for the hope of permanency, or the anticipation of wholesome and profitable results for the sacrifices they were necessitated to make in order to establish the one of which I write.

The trustees named the school for the principal, in token of their appreciation of him as a minister and teacher, and in order that his services as such might be retained; and, in accordance with the universal wishes of the community, the Quarterly Conference recognized the board of trustees, and resolved to petition the Bishop to appoint him to the school at the next session of the Annual Conference. In my opinion but few men can be found who could have accomplished so much in so short a time, and who would have aided a community to the extent that he has in the accomplishment of an enterprise so well calculated to advance both its educational and spiritual interests.

For the information of those who may desire to avail themselves of an opportunity to send to a first-class school, on the most liberal terms offered in Alabama, I would simply state that the location is healthy, and, as before intimated, free from those bad influences resulting from a close proximity to whisky shops. The society is by no means objectionable, with every prospect of rapid improvement as the school progresses and its influence is extended.

The church which is near the school, and which has been built since the war, speaks well for the community. It is an excellent building for the country, nicely painted and neatly kept, owned and used by the Methodists, but attended and supported by Presbyterians, Baptists and Methodists, where there is now in active operation a good Sunday school, and where there will be preaching every Sabbath during the next Conference year—once during the month by the pastor of the circuit, and three times by Bro. Montgomery, who will give his personal attention to the Sunday school three Sabbaths in the month. Boarding is furnished by families at $8 per month, exclusive of lights and washing, and the rates of tuition at $2.50, $3 and $4 per month, and the children of ministers in the regular work taken at reduced rates of tuition. As soon as the necessary arrangements can be perfected, music will be taught at a less rate than that advertised by any school in the country. Lessons in vocal music are given free of charge, and no incidental fees are connected with the terms of the school.

Respectfully yours, F.

YELLOW BLUFF, WILCOX CO., ALA., November 17, 1875.

THE Baptist Teacher, commending a cheerful, happy manner, makes the following good, practical applications:

"Try it on the superintendent. Gather round him, 'boost him,' make the most of him. Let him understand that you mean to stand by him; that you have faith in God, and faith in him, and faith in the future; and the next time he rises to address the school the radiance of his face and the cheery ring of his voice will make everybody wonder what on earth has happened to so transfigure the man."

AUNT TABITHA is worried by frequent changes in the French ministry. She says: "I never had much opinion of them French people anyhow. Nothing can save them but good, stated, regular preaching."

OBITUARIES.

DIED, in Madison county, Miss., September 1, 1875, Col. N. G. ROUSSEAU, in the sixty-first year of his age.

It is due to the men of activity in the church and in the enterprises of life that some tribute shall be paid to their memory when the Master removes them; and the death of Col. Rousseau makes so void a place once filled with generosity and usefulness, that we pause a moment to pay that tribute.

He was born in North Carolina, June 9, 1815. In 1825 the family removed to Tennessee, where he grew to manhood, accustomed to labor, and inured to a discipline which gave him strength and energy and self-reliance. In 1836 he came to Madison county and engaged in planting.

Although his education was limited, he possessed just the elements of character which could not fail of success, and he rose rapidly to the esteem of the community, and to an easy affluence. In 1841 he was married to Miss C. M. Watkins, of Jefferson county. The childless pair walked hand in hand along the years of wedded life, and the sad survivor is left to a solitude, all the more lonely in that her "house is desolate."

In that kind of generosity which enlists the heart and moves the hand few men have surpassed Col. Rousseau. He knew how to be hospitable, and he enjoyed the companionship of friends; he knew how to be liberal, and from his storehouse the poor were supplied; he knew how to sympathize with suffering, and his house was the home of the orphan; he comprehended the interests of the community, and was forward in every public enterprise; he was profoundly a Christian, and the church and its ministers shared his substance in no stinted measure. He had been educated by a pious mother—a woman of rare good sense and of eminent religious character; and, although he made no profession of religion until he joined the Methodist Church in 1867, the hallowed influence of that mother was felt by him as a power for good through all his life.

Not a little dejected by the havoc of the war, he strove to repair his broken fortune, and to provide for himself and his household the means of subsistence. In February last his health began to give way, and after seven months of suffering, almost more than mortal could endure, he sunk to rest. The writer of this memorial had known him when he stood strong in manhood's vigorous prime, and when the pressure of years had checked his haste, and he saw him prostrate, helpless, suffering, patient, submissive, meek, trustful, as he turned his sightless eyes toward her who seemed unconscious of weariness through all these anxious months—whose full heart groaned beneath its load of anguish, and bade her "farewell until we meet in heaven."

***

DIED, of swamp fever, at his residence in Morehouse parish, La., October 4, 1875, J. C. F. TAYLOR, in the fifty-second year of his age.

Mr. Taylor had been a resident of this parish for eighteen years. He was among the first who settled in that portion of Morehouse known as Gum Valley or Gum Swamp. Strictly adhering to the principles of the Methodist Church, of which he had long been a consistent member, ever kind, charitable and generous to others' faults, Mr. Taylor faithfully, as a Christian, discharged his duties to both God and man. In all just and good causes he was ever ready to lend a helping hand. Was a brother in need, was a pastor poorly supplied?—his purse was generously opened and their wants liberally attended to.

His lively, cheerful disposition was apparent to all. Never did he permit the troubles of out-door affairs to penetrate into the quiet and peace of his happy home, of which he constituted the light, the life and the sunshine. A kinder friend, a more indulgent father and a more devoted husband never lived. During his illness of two weeks he was truly an example of the greatest patience and forebearance. His sufferings were intense, yet he never complained. The attentions of his many friends, who gathered around him to offer their services—the last tokens of friendship—were not unnoticed by him. The simple "thank you" was never omitted after the performance of the smallest act. He seemed to have a presentiment, from the first of his illness, that the time had come when he must bow in submission before the throne of an all-wise God, when every link, every tie that bound him to this earth must be severed, and his soul, leaving the body, must appear before its God. And yet he shuddered not. On the contrary, he viewed not death as a grim monster, but rather as a release from suffering—a happy transformation from a world of sin and sorrow to one of purity and eternal felicity. He bade his friends and family all farewell, told them to meet him in heaven; then he called to his bedside some of his old servants, his former slaves, and, bidding them take care of his darling wife and poor little children, he shook hands with them.

He leaves a wife and four little children, who bitterly bemoan his loss. Many a day, many a month will roll into eternity, still leaving an aching void, a bleeding wound.

B. T.

BRO. THOMAS J. HOOD was born in Autauga county, February 2, 1828, and died of hemorrhagic fever, in Summerfield, Ala., October 29, 1875.

He professed religion and joined the church under the ministry of Rev. B. F. Blow in 1871. His repentance was deep and pungent, his struggle for spiritual life and freedom from the thralldom of sin bitter and intensely earnest, and his conversion correspondingly clear.

He was, very soon after his conversion, appointed steward of the church and superintendent of the Sabbath school, both of which offices he filled not only acceptably, but with great efficiency. He was a sincere friend, an upright citizen, a liberal supporter of the church, and the poor always found in him a kind friend. As a husband and father he was affectionate, tender, indulgent. There was in his nature a spirit of pleasant humor that always rendered his company agreeable alike to young and old. Although sedulously devoting his time to business pursuits, he possessed a taste for literature, science and biblical research.

About a year ago he moved from Autauga county to Summerfield for the purpose of educating his children. His last illness was so violent and brief as to allow no opportunity for religious conversation; but his wife informs me that his last days were marked by unusual devotion and religious interest. He was greatly impressed and delighted with a sermon preached by Rev. A. D. McVoy on the Sunday night previous to his death, and, returning home, expressed much regret that his wife had not shared its benefits. His death creates a wide chasm in the circle of his friends and relatives. To his heart-stricken wife and six children, to whom he was so much devoted, the loss seems irreparable; but the Lord will provide.

R. S. WOODWARD.

DIED, on the morning of the twenty-fourth of August, 1875, our dear friend, Miss LOU. MARKHAM. She was born in the city of Mobile in the year 1855, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in her early childhood, and remained a faithful Christian until her death. She was confined to her bed for nine long weeks, during which time she suffered very much, but bore her sufferings with much patience. She was nursed in her last illness by her beloved sisters, who watched over her day and night with much anxiety. Oh, what a blessing it is to have loved ones to lean on in the hour of sickness and death! How sweet to close the eyes of the loved ones on earth and open them spiritually upon the loved ones above, on Jesus, and on heaven itself! A father, a brother and four sisters comprise the living family of our deceased friend. She also leaves a large circle of friends, who will mourn her early death, for none knew her but to love her. Her home has lost one of its choicest jewels, society one of its brightest stars. But we believe that, though her body is now cold in death, her spirit is to-day rejoicing in heaven, in company with that of her mother and other loved ones, yea, with her Redeemer and all the blood-washed throng.

Our friend died when quite young, being just twenty on her birth-day, thus leaving the proof that the young may die. How mysterious is death!

"Leaves have their time to fall, and stars to set,
And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath
But thou, thou hast all seasons for thine own, O Death!"

Her friend,

LAURA A. MOORE.

LEON G., son of Mr. R. J. and Mrs. M. C. Thoms, was born June 22, 1872; was baptized by Rev. T. P. Howard in September, 1874, and entered upon his immortal career October 22, 1875. In this sad affliction our hearts are comforted to know that the gentle spirit of the loved little Leon has gone to live forever in the fair city of God.

THE Normal Class suggests the following admirable plan for Sunday school "tea meetings:"

"First, all the teachers and officers. Then, on another evening, all the senior scholars. Divide the other classes into about four sections, and have for each section a tea meeting, with readings, declamations, pictures, etc."

How the bills shall be met is not suggested, for "where there's a will there's a way."

CLOSING DAYS.

The plashing breakers on the beach seem to the listening ear
To wail a soft, sweet, plaintive dirge for the departing year;
The yellow leaves, whirl'd o'er the path by the sharp autumn breeze,
In eddying clouds are falling fast from all the rustling trees.

The frost-beads sparkle on the grass, bright in the chilly dawn;
The mateless thrush his lonely meal seeks on the rectory lawn.
The laurustinus 'gins to show her white and rose-ate flowers—
Sure tokens that have fled at last the summer's golden hours.

Blackberries on the privet hang, the ash shows clusters red,
Crowned with a scarlet diadem King Oak's majestic head;
The elms are orange, the queen beech is robed in russet brown,
And from the graceful, pendent birch dino leaves come showering down.

Close in the furze the linnet lies, the lark's shrill voice is mute,
No longer from the cherry-bough the blackbird tunes his flote;
The white-throat and the nightingale to sadder climes have flown,
And on the berried holly-bough the redbreast sings alone.

Ah, sweet and solemn are the days that mark the dying year,
Waking, like music, in the heart some slumbering memories dear—
Oftimes gone by, of friends long dead, of happy, fleeting hours,
When our fond youth was one long dream of love and joy and flowers. Belgravia.

The Fruits of Palestine.

The extent of Palestine is not in any way commensurate with the important place which it has occupied in sacred and profane history. Not larger in area than Wales, and diversified in like manner with mountains, lakes, rivers, and plains of great fertility, it formed a kind of neutral ground between Assyria and Egypt. The only road by which the two great rivals of the ancient world could approach one another—by which alone Egypt could get to Assyria, and Assyria to Egypt—lay along the broad, flat strip of coast which formed the maritime portion of the Holy Land, and thence by the plain of the Lebanon to the Euphrates. Thus it became the convenient arena on which, in succeeding ages, the hostile powers who disputed for the empire of the East fought their battles; and here the armies of France, England and Germany contended with the hosts of Saladin. But among the recesses of the many wooded hills and intricate valleys we may not unreasonably presume that there are villages whose inhabitants have lived on from age to age undisturbed by the invasions which have successively visited the more open and accessible parts of the country. The description given in the Scriptures as the "land flowing with milk and honey" leads at first glance to the supposition that if Moses wished to reconcile the Jews to the territory on which they were about to enter, and to extinguish any lurking desire on their part to return to the fleshpots of Egypt, he would represent the "promised land" under the most favorable colors. Upon the whole, however, in spite of statements made to the contrary, his description is substantially correct. In antiquity Judea was very carefully cultivated, and, notwithstanding the great density of the population under Solomon, it is said to have exported considerable quantities of corn. Nowhere upon a similar limited space are there a greater number of ruined cities to be seen, and the vestiges of terraces upon the declivities still remain which were covered with plantations of figs, vines and olives. On some of the hills the terraces have been repaired and reconstructed, and these contain plantations of olives or figs, sometimes with and sometimes without vineyards, surrounded by rough stone walls, and with the watch towers at the corners, so frequently mentioned in the parables. We have it upon the authority of Tacitus that in his time it was particularly celebrated for its palm-trees, which in fact were the emblem of the country, and the aromatic plants that grew in the uncultivated parts furnished the wild bees with the honey which they stored in the hollows of roots and trees. This great abundance is confirmed subsequently by Maundrell, who states that the smell from the honey and wax in many such places was as strong as if one had been in an apiary. The grape, fig, pomegranate, olive, date, apple and almond complete the list of recorded fruits, but there have been added oranges, lemons, citrons, pears, peaches, apricots, plums, quinces, bananas, prickly pears, and many smaller berries and fruits, none of which are once named in the Bible. It is not, however, possible to form any estimate of the state of the country in antiquity from the condition in which we find it at the present day, seeing that for centuries it has been subjected to every species of oppression.

The soil of the plains is exceedingly fertile, but these are mostly deserted, while the rocky ridges of the mountains, more particularly of the Lebanon, evince an excessive care in their cultivation that betokens the industrious character of the inhabitants, and shows what the country might become were it once rid of the baneful influence of the Turkish government. In the Lebanon almost every male inhabitant is a small proprietor, and in the neighborhood of Beyrout there are a great number of landholders, who for the most part cultivate the white mulberry-tree. Large proprietors are few, except among the Emirs, some of whom have extensive estates, which they either cultivate on their own account or let out to farming tenants. The mulberry-tree flourishes on the coast and through the more fertile parts of the Lebanon range, where attention to the culture under French supervision has made this an important article of export. The mulberry plants are set in rows six or eight feet apart; they are cut off at a corresponding height, and suffered to retain only the fresh twigs. The arrangement generally made with the peasantry is to allow them one-fourth part of the silk for taking care of the worms and reeling off the cocoons, the landowner providing the leaves, which are gathered by the peasantry. He also erects the sheds in which the cocoons are kept, which are simple reed inclosures without any roof. The oil harvest has of late years been considerably improved, and its quantity augmented by the introduction of oil presses from France.

The western or coast portion of Palestine is mountainous, while the more inland portion, or that to the east of the Orontes and Damascus, is mostly flat, the mountains running north and south parallel with the Mediterranean. Both the Lebanon and anti-Lebanon give out numerous lateral spurs, some of the former extending so as to project, like Mount Carmel, in bold headlands on the coasts. These subordinate ranges are for the most fertile portions of the mountain system. Coelo-Syria, though fertile itself, is inclosed between precipitous and barren heights. The mountains which surround the Dead sea, and those to the west of the Jordan, are arid, stony, and full of precipices and caverns, and have a melancholy, desolate appearance, harmonizing well with that of the desert with which they are bounded. The coast line is watered by numerous small streams falling into the Mediterranean, which contributes greatly to fertilize the land, but of these none are navigable. The largest lake, is the Dead sea; the next in size is that of Tiberias or Genesareth, the theater of some of the most remarkable miracles. This lake is said to be longer and finer than any of our own in Cumberland and Westmoreland, while in picturesque beauty it approaches nearest to the Lake of Lugano in Italy.

Owing to the great difference of elevation and exposure, the greatest dissimilarity prevails with regard to the temperature. Upon the whole, however, Palestine may be said to possess two climates; one very hot, which is that of the coast and the interior plains, such as those of Baalbec, Antioch, Tripoli, Gaza; and the other, or that of the mountains, at least at a certain height, temperate, and similar to that of France. In most parts the occurrence of the rainy seasons, as well as the quantity of rain which falls, are very variable. The winter in the plains is so moderate that the orange, date, banana and other delicate trees flourish in the open air, and it appears equally extraordinary and picturesque to the European at Tripoli to behold under his windows, in the month of January, orange-trees loaded with fruit, while the lofty summits of Lebanon are covered with ice and snow. In the descriptive language of the Arabian poets, Lebanon bears winter upon his head, spring upon his shoulders, and autumn on his brow, while summer lies sleeping at his feet.—Gardeners' Chronicle.

The Black Dog on the Back.

This is an old English proverb for a man or woman in a bad temper. And it is a very forcible expression, for such are really as great nuisances to society as if they actually led about with them an animal subject to indiscriminate biting. Still you will see that generally they are rather proud than otherwise of their failing—apt to plume themselves on their "quick tempers," and to expect innumerable impertinences and impositions will be forgiven them in consideration of it. "They lose their tempers so easily." That is true enough; but if their friends will observe they will see that they do not so much lose their temper as exchange it for whatever at the time they particularly happen to want. Are they at home, and desire to have everything ordered to their special likings and habits? Then they lose their temper in order that they may gain every other person's rights, and peculiar comforts and fancies. In the world, too, if they lose their temper, they contrive to gain far more than its equivalent. It is the good-natured man, not the bad one, who is imposed upon, and has to do all the disagreeable things. If a bitter norther is blowing, and the temperature below zero, the good-natured man of the firm will rather face the elements than the development of latent heat in his partner which a change from the cozy office to the freezing street would occasion. The extra hours, the disagreeable dunning, the humiliating asking for favors, are never assigned to the bad-tempered man. It may of course be his duty, but he has only to look black and mutter something about "seeing everybody blessed first," and he may go wheresoever and do whatsoever he chooses. It is the prerogative of such tempers not only to do ill-natured, selfish things, but also to scatter impertinences wherever they think it safe to do so. They are les hommes terribles of the social existence. It is their delight, if they do not like a thing, to say so in the most decided manner; to tell unpleasant truths that do no good, simply because they desire to do so; to send meek and inoffensive people out of their presence depressed and uncomfortable. The essential meanness of this disposition may be traced in the fact that it rarely or never shows itself to a superior. The hasty-tempered man knows very well how to control his temper in the presence of a man richer, more hasty or physically stronger than himself.

Now it must be admitted that the great nursery of such tempers is the domestic hearth. How overbearing brothers are to sisters! How provoking sisters are to brothers! They do not consider that the laws of polite restraint, which govern them perforce in the world, are necessary there. Each indulges his or her particular temper, until the disagreeable habit becomes "natural." The world has no just reason to excuse any man's injustice or intemperate speech because he has an uncontrollable temper. Such tempers are very much rarer than is imagined. The average hasty-tempered man never allows his temper to interfere with his pecuniary interests or his personal comforts; nor, however much he longs to do it, does he usually permit himself to strike, the object of his anger, because blows are actionable, and he might be made to suffer. Therefore, if for his own sake he can control his hands, he ought to be made to feel it a necessity, for others' sakes, to control his tongue, and his temper also.—Christian at Work.

How a Native Evangelist Works.

Our readers will remember the converted Brahmin, Rev. Narayn Sheshadri, who was in attendance at the convention of the Evangelical Alliance in New York and greatly interested the members by his earnest eloquence. He writes as follows of the methods he pursues in evangelizing his countrymen:

"I am thankful to say," he writes, "that I am busy at my own sphere of usefulness from four o'clock A. M. to nine o'clock P. M.—of course, meal hours, bathing-time, etc., excepted. Here is the way in which I spend my day: At five o'clock I go out with my evangelistic party, which is formed of the perfect number seven, to some one of our numerous villages in our neighborhood, within an area of ten miles. My evangelists take with them their musical instruments, viz.: a drum, a guitar and a pair of cymbals. As soon as we arrive at the appointed village our blind minstrel, Barthimens, sings a Christian hymn to the instrumental music, and as this goes on, men, women and children collect around us. After singing, one of our evangelists steps forward and tries to set forth the truths that have been sung, in as spirited an address as he can. Another hymn is then sung, and a second evangelist gives another address—and what does your humble servant do? His principal business is to supplement the addresses of our young evangelists, and close the whole with a concluding address. This lasts for nearly an hour and a half. We, on the whole, get very good congregations indeed—very orderly and attentive and respectful. While going to a village I try to give hints to our evangelists on the art of preaching. After preaching I ride home as fast as I can—that is about nine o'clock. After breakfast I have class with our medical catechists to read the word of God. This lasts for nearly an hour. At about one o'clock I go over to the Anglo-Vernacular school, and impart religious instruction to the whole school. After this (at about five o'clock P. M.) I have, twice a week, congregational meetings with our Christian people. At seven o'clock the advanced scholars from the Anglo-Vernacular school come to read Angus' 'Handbook of the English Tongue.' The last class I hear is that of our young unsons, who read the Old Testament from eight to nine P. M. I assure you I have as much pleasure in this way of working as I used to have when with you. However, with us it is still our sowing-time."

VAULTS OF THE INQUISITION AT ROME.—The Inquisition at Rome has recently been thrown open to the public, and men are engaged in digging into the vaults beneath. The correspondent of a London paper went down a flight of steps, which had just been cleared of old rubbish, and where the workmen were laying bare a series of dungeons beneath the vaults. In one place he saw five skeletons of people who had been walled up in masonry over a century and a half ago, but the most suggestive and terrible discovery was a vault full of skulls and scattered human remains. From this vault there was a shaft of about four feet square ascending perpendicularly to the first floor of the building, and ending in a passage off the hall of the chancery, where a trap-door lay between the tribunal and the way into a suite of rooms destined for one of the officials. The object of this shaft could admit of but one surmise: The ground of the vault was made up of decayed animal matter, a lump of which held imbedded in it a long silken lock of hair, as he found by personal examination as it was shoveled up from below. But that was not all; there were two large subterranean furnaces or vaults, shaped like a beehive in masonry, filled with layers of calcined bones, forming the substratum lying directly beneath two other chambers on the ground floor in the immediate vicinity of the very mysterious shaft above mentioned.

CARPETS IN 1810.—Seventy years ago carpets were rarely seen in American families of the middle classes, as they are now rarely found in Germany. Dr. Lyman Beecher gives an amusing account in his autobiography of his first carpet at East Hampton, Long Island. His wife spun a bale of cotton and had it woven. Then she fitted it to the floor, sized it, and painted in oils, with a bright border around it, and bunches of roses and other flowers in the center. She also took common wooden chairs and cut out figures of gilt paper, gluing them on and varnishing them. The general effect was very beautiful. The East Hampton people were quite startled by the novelty. One of the old deacons called at the house, but stopped at the parlor door, as if afraid to enter. "Walk in, deacon, walk in," said the minister. "Why I can't 'thout stepping on it," was the answer. Then, surveying it with evident admiration, he gasped out: "D'ye think ye can have all this and heaven too?"

YOUNG READER, think of the eyes of God. They are everywhere. In every house, in every field, in every room, in every company, alone or in a crowd, the eyes of God are always upon you. "The eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good, and they are eyes that read hearts as well as actions. Endeavor to remember this. Recollect that you have to do with an all-seeing God, a God who never slumbereth nor sleeps any, a God who understands your thoughts afar off, and with whom the night shines as the day.

IT HAS BEEN demonstrated that the weight of the earth is 5,855,000,000,000,000 tons, yet some people think they lift it up whenever they walk abroad.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Reformed Episcopalians have taken steps to establish a university. It will probably be located in Chicago.

—A Cherokee Indian, a Japanese, and a retired clergyman fifty years old, are among the students at Dartmouth College.

—The American Bible Society has received for its library a copy of the Gospel of Luke in Japanese, printed at Yokohama.

—The United Brethren in Christ have organized a Woman's Missionary Association. Its purpose is to aid in both the home and foreign work.

—A correspondent of the Advance reports nearly one-fifth of the Congregational churches vacant. Over one-ninth are home missionaries.

—The outbreak against the Jews in Persia, which led to the burning alive of a Jew named Jehuda at Hamadan, has been followed by the punishment of the persons who took part in the murder. The Persian government has promised to protect its Jewish subjects.

—Earl Shaftesbury stated, at a meeting of the Scottish Bible Society, last month, that full permission has been given in Russia for the circulation of the Bible throughout the empire, and that authority is also obtained to print the Bible in the Turkish language at Constantinople.

—The Presbyterian Woman's Foreign Missionary Society are about to begin a children's periodical to be called Children's Work for Children. At the last semi-annual meeting of the society twenty-nine new auxiliaries and fifteen boards were reported, and eleven new missionaries had been sent out.

—The Basel German Evangelical mission in South India is doing a great work for Christ. It employs 63 European missionaries, besides 36 females; there are 5 native preachers and 64 catechists; there are about 100 teachers, and 2,429 children under instruction; 5,957 persons claim to be Christians, and 2,714 are communicants.

—The Examiner and Chronicle (Baptist), speaking of the Baptists and Methodists in New York, both having started their work about 100 years ago, asks: "How do they now stand?" The Baptists are sadly, sadly behind. The census for 1870 gives the Baptists in that State 879 church edifices, with 333,086 sittings. It gives the Methodists 1,702 edifices, with 669,098 sittings.

—Sir Bartle Frere, in a recent letter, refers to the encouraging progress Egypt has made in education since the reign of Mohammed Ali. He says that when he was first in Egypt, in 1834, with the exception of a few Coptic Serbos and Moslem Moolahs, scarcely any of the common people, especially in Upper Egypt, could read or write. Now the government schools have been in operation for more than a generation, and it is rare to meet a company in which several of the middle-aged and younger ones cannot read their own Arabic. They are glad to receive and make use of printed tracts and portions of Scripture. In this way the missionary work is very widely extended.

—The Advance says: "The Japan home is just now the special object of the labors of the Woman's Board. The first estimate of its cost was $3,000, but later advices state that this sum must be multiplied by two—$3,000, of which $500 is from the floor of the Pacific, has already reached the treasury. There are pledges of $500 more, and the Japanese themselves have raised $800. This leaves but $1,500 to complete the $6,000 needed. This home is to be a school for the Japanese girls. It is to be under the management of Miss Talcott and Miss Dudley. The building is designed to accommodate thirty boarding pupils, a day school, and to afford a home for the young lady missionaries."

—Father Hyacinthe has just published a pamphlet explaining his sudden abandonment last year of the "National Catholic Church of Switzerland," which he had been mainly instrumental in founding. He avows that his act in accepting the office of cure was "a great wrong, for which he asks forgiveness of God and man." He defines his relation to the Roman Catholic Church as that of a loyal son, excommunicated for conscience' sake, and he clings to the hope that she may repudiate her error and thus allow him to return. The Swiss Catholic Church is no church, and is "neither Catholic in religion nor Liberal in politics." In this isolated position he is casting about for some kind of Christian fellowship, and knows not where to go. The traditions of his education, which lead him to look for a visible unity of the church, still hamper him. He cannot return to Rome, and he does not feel at home anywhere else.

FATHER HYACINTHE.—M. Loyson has just published a pamphlet entitled "The Catholic Church of Switzerland." This pamphlet contains two sermons of the reverend gentleman, delivered in the hall of the Casino where he now holds service; the subject of these discourses being further illustrated by notes. M. Loyson does not appear to be discouraged at the turn church reform matters have taken in Geneva. He believes that the church will yet arise and purify itself. It is said that M. Loyson has relations and holds correspondence with many eminent members of the Roman Catholic Church, and that many, of whom this world be little thought, are in sympathy with his ideas. A very well-known Bishop, described rather enigmatically as "occupying a high position in France, or at Rome, or perhaps in both," wrote to him recently in the following words: "Do not be discouraged. In 1870 the time was opportune for a great reform, but the episcopate could not comprehend it. What we did not do at the council events will yet accomplish—events terrible though salutary. Within fifteen or twenty years the Catholic Church throughout the world will be reformed."

TOM NOD.

BY GEORGE COOPER.

He pops in through the keyhole,
To make a friendly call.
When the evening firelight
Paints pictures on the wall.
He draws a drowsy ditty—
So quaint he is, and odd—
And pretty eyes begin to wink
Whene'er they see Tom Nod.

He goes to church on Sunday—
The parson knows him well;
In dowdy pews he lingers,
A lovely dream to tell.
In palaces and hovels
He enters, lightly shod;
And eyes grown dim with weeping,
Oh, how they bless Tom Nod!

He is a roguish fairy,
That haunts the poppy flower,
And all the wide world over
He visits hour by hour.
Bright eyes you soon will see him—
So quaint he is, and odd!
Then a good-night kiss, my darlings,
And one for old Tom Nod!

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I have been thinking a long time about writing you a little letter. I read letters in your good paper every week from little boys and girls who are not any older than I am. I cannot write very good—have not been going to school but a short time, and have not learned how to punctuate my letters correctly yet; but I know the names of most of the marks wherever I see them. My pa is a good Methodist, and always treats the preachers good and kind, and pays them well. I love the preachers, and so does my brother Melvin. We are both members of the church, and love to have the preacher come to our home and tell us of that home beyond the skies. This part of the district belongs to what is called the Clover Hill circuit; but the preacher never comes down here to preach, although we have a very nice little church. I have not seen a preacher for more than two years. When Bro. J. A. B. Jones was presiding elder he came to see us more than once, and it made us all feel good to have him with us; but this other presiding elder does not come in our neighborhood, and the preacher has never been down here. We live only twenty miles from Clover Hill. Now that looks strange to me. Does it not look so to you? I do wish that we could have preaching down here. Won't you try and send us one next year? Your little friend,

JOEL P. GILLIAM.

MR. EDITOR: I will write to you, as I see many other children are writing. My father takes the ADVOCATE. My father is a preacher. He had a sad affliction, in August, in having both legs broken; but we feel thankful to the Lord that he is now able to walk about some. Last Saturday and Sunday he had a quarterly meeting in this place. He preached on both days, but had to do so sitting. Mr. M. M. Graham is our preacher, and lives here. He has a great deal of preaching to do, as he has nine other appointments besides this. Over sixty have joined the church on his circuit this year. Our Annual Conference will meet December 8, in Greenville, which is fifteen miles from here. I want to go to it, as I once lived there, and have a great many schoolmates in the place. I would like to see the editor there and make his acquaintance. Your friend,

MY DEAR MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl six years old, and have not learned to write well enough to write to you myself; but I asked my papa to write for me. I love to read the letters in your paper from the little children, and I want to be able to write a letter myself for the Child's Corner. I want to be good. I ask my mamma every night, after I have said my prayers, if I have been good to-day. If she says "Yes," I can go to sleep easily, but if she says "No" I am so sorry that I can't go to sleep easily.

I go to Sunday school. Our Sunday school has been closed a long time, because the yellow fever was so bad; but the fever is over now, I hope, and I can go every Sunday.

Good for Evil.

"I shan't do it," and Danny raised his hand from the blocks with which they were playing, and struck his sister Nattie in the face.

The little girl started up in surprise. The blood rushed to her cheeks, and her eyes expressed all the indignation felt by her wounded heart.

She was about to return the blow. But last Sunday she stood up in the old country school-house, and when the teacher asked for her verse she stood up and repeated: "Be not overcome with evil, but overcome evil with good."

Nattie had not fully understood the meaning, but she kept thinking it over and over, when she ran out on Monday, merry with her pan of mixed bran and chives to feed the chickens, and when she lay in her little bed at night, with the moonlight kissing away the dark, and weaving wondrous spells through the grand old honeysuckle at the window, until at last she had it.

"Yes, that is it. It means, as Aunt Dolly told me last Christmas when I wanted to pull Danny's hair, because he pulled mine, that 'I must do good for evil.' And so I will the very next time Danny treats me bad," she added, as she threw back her curls and drew up her little form in the bed to go to sleep.

Nattie's resolution was a good one, and she bore it in mind for several days, but somehow Danny would be provoking. And now, when she was least expecting it, the temptation to evil came so strong that, before she could think, she was ready to strike Danny. But her better thoughts prevailed; so she leaned forward, and, putting her little white hand on Danny's cheek, she kissed him right in the mouth. It was Danny's turn to be surprised; so he looked on Nattie without speaking a word, his large gray eyes full of wonder. There she sat with her dark curls thrown back, her pearly teeth shining through her smiling lips, while tears trembled in her eyes. Danny gazed at her.

"This is good for evil," Nattie said, as she began again to build her block-house.

Danny has grown to be a man, kind, generous and respected. He often tells the little ones in Sunday school how he first learned to "do good for evil," and the tears come into his eyes, for his teacher, little Nattie, has gone away to that world where no evil comes, for all is good. Christian Repository.

An Exquisite Story by Lamartine.

In the tribe of Neggedeh there was a horse whose fame was spread far and near, and a Bedouin of another tribe, by name Daher, desired extremely to possess it. Having offered in vain for it his camels and his whole wealth, he hit at length upon the following device, by which he hoped to gain the object of his desire: He resolved to stain his face with the juice of an herb, to clothe himself in rags, to tie his legs and neck together, so as to appear like a lame beggar. Thus equipped, he went to wait for Naber, the owner of the horse, whom he knew was to pass that way. When he saw Naber approaching on his beautiful steed he cried out in a weak voice:

"I am a poor stranger; for three days I have been unable to move from this spot to seek for food. I am dying; help me, and Heaven will reward you."

The Bedouin kindly offered to take him upon his horse and carry him home, but the rogue replied:

"I cannot rise; I have no strength left."

Naber, touched with pity, dismounted, led his horse to the spot, and with great difficulty set the seeming beggar on its back. But no sooner did Daher feel himself in the saddle than he set spurs to the horse and galloped off, calling out as he did so:

"It is I, Daher. I have got the horse, and am off with him."

Naber called after him to stop and listen. Certain of not being pursued, he turned and hailed at a short distance from Naber, who was armed with a spear.

"Since Heaven has willed it, I wish you joy of it; but I do conjure you never to tell any one how you obtained it."

"And why not?" said Daher.

"Because," said the noble Arab, "another might be really ill, and men would fear to help him. You would be the cause of many refusing to perform an act of charity for fear of being duped, as I have been."

Struck with shame at these words, Daher was silent for a moment, then, springing from the horse, returned it to its owner, embracing him. Naber made him accompany him to his tent, where they spent a few days together, and became fast friends for life.

NOT TO BE SOLD.—A gentleman walking with his little boy past the cottage of a German laborer, the boy's attention was attracted by a little dog. Just then the master came home from his labors, and was met by the dog with every demonstration of joy. The gentleman said to the owner: "My little boy has taken a fancy to your dog, and I will buy him. What do you ask for him?" "I can't sell dat dog!" said the German. "Look here," said the gentleman, "that is a poor dog any way, but, as my boy wants him, I will give you $5 for him." "Yas," says the German, "I know he is a werry poor dog, and he ain't wort almost nuttin', but der ish you leetle ding mid dat dog vot I can't sell. I can't sell de vag of his tail ven I comes home at night."

Going A-Fishing.

The promise of Christ to go before his disciples into Galilee was very explicit: "But after I am risen again, I will go before you into Galilee." The angel at the tomb directed the women to carry this message to the disciples: "And behold, he goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see him; lo, I have told you." Christ charged them with the same announcement: "Go tell my brethren that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see me." According to Mark, the angel's words contained explicit mention of Peter: "Tell his disciples and Peter that he goeth before you into Galilee." The last chapter of John opens with the scene on the shore of Tiberias. Seven of the apostles were there in Galilee, and waiting for the promised appearance of their Lord. Is the conjecture of Samuel Cox without plausibility: that their patience and faith began at length to fail, and that in this frame of mind "Simon Peter saith unto them, I go a-fishing," and that the rest, as discouraged as himself, promptly respond: "We also go with thee?"

This view gives peculiar significance to their failure to catch anything through the long night, to the opportune appearance of Jesus on the shore, and to the question and answer: "Children, have ye any meat? They answered him, No." They had gone back to their nets, but their labor had been in vain. And there was their distrusted Master, with kindled fire, and food ready for their entertainment. The great draught of fishes, secured by obeying his word, was a lesson in the same direction. He was Lord of all, and could withhold or bestow. If, through doubt of him, they left their apostleship to take care of themselves, they might starve, while in following him, infinite power and goodness assured their support. Fishing was well enough when this business was their providential calling, but when duty bade them preach the gospel, this same fishing would end in disappointment and want.

The temptation, if such it was with Peter and his associates, to go a-fishing is not unknown to ministers of the gospel in these days. The Savior's presence has not been as promptly and fully realized as was expected. The young preacher, fresh from the upper room at Jerusalem, reaches his Galilean circuit. But the scene is changed—the surroundings are without the associations which he has left. His heart is chilled, the signs of his apostleship are not at once apparent, and the Savior, who had promised to go before him, is not specially manifested. In the hour of depression and impatience he turns to his old employment, he doubts his call to preach, and at last the determination is reached: "I go a-fishing."

How many severe trials there are all along the itinerant's path we need not tell. To keep steadily on, and never to yield to hinderances and discouragements, is more than many can do. It requires a consecration that embraces all, and a faith that sees "the invisible." The lack of fruit is a sore trial to some; not, perhaps, of all fruit, but of such results as the earnest laborer desires. The prophet's dissatisfied question is the burden of the weary messenger: "Who hath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?" A sense of unfitness, and the want of adequate qualifications, presses heavily upon the soul. The fearful responsibility, and the conscious inability to meet it, or the seeming failure to achieve all that we are entitled to look for, suggests the door of escape, and perhaps the duty of entering it. There is also an ordeal from which few are exempt in the precarious and stinted support. The annual and persistent agony of church finances, the strain upon sensibility, the doubtful and almost always meager results, and the same through hard times and good times, and ever. The specter of debt, of a destitute old age, or of a family left to struggle with hardship and want, is crossing his waking thoughts and flitting about his nightly dreams. Wrought up to the last degree of endurance, and pushed to desperation, the one expedient, however reluctantly taken, seems inevitable: "I go a-fishing."

If the necessity is very great, the step should not be taken without reflection. Those who get into that boat, and venture upon the secular sea, do not always find smooth waters and successful voyages. Hailed by the Master after a long night of effort, the history of Peter and his company is repeated: "Children, have you any meat? They answered him, No." There are hardships in other pursuits. The most of men in business die bankrupt. Insolvency and poverty overtake others as well as preachers. If it be God's will that a man shall preach the gospel, and if God has sent him, it is a perilous thing for him to yield to even the hardest pressure of want.

The still more subtle temptation of worldly-mindedness, and the desire of ease and wealth, is fraught with peculiar dangers. To give way to this is to be utterly unfaithful. He who puts his hands to the plow, and, for this cause, looks back, is not worthy of the kingdom. He is the most guilty of all. There is at least a shadow of extenuation for those who labor under a cloud of spiritual discouragement, and for those whose exhausted meal and oil almost shut them up to the abandonment of the pastoral work. There are cases of this sort where the secular craft seems to be an allowable refuge—where it is not for us to condemn. But where ambition, avarice and the pride of life incite to worldly pursuits, there can be no excuse. Men who fall away because they do not get the best places, because they are not supported in luxury, or because their self-esteem places them at a discount with their brethren, have an account to render.

It is a threat sometimes held in terrorem by the dissatisfied, by those who are ecclesiastically soured and sore-headed: "If my claims are not conceded, if my views are not adopted, 'I go a-fishing.'" So far as the church is concerned, it may be well to let them go, but for themselves they are launching upon troubled waters, and driving to shipwreck and destruction. Woe to that man who, from godless and selfish motives, cuts himself adrift, and seeks to take others with him. A sad experience, disastrous failure, and Christ's warnings and mercy may lead them back, in some instances, but, if not, empty-handed and disappointed, life ends in gloom and despair.

The Pastor and His Converts.

The tie is strong and tender that binds the pastor to those whom he has been instrumental in leading to Christ. For them he has a peculiar sympathy, and, however long and far he may be separated from them, they are likely to be much in his thoughts and prayers. His greatest earthly joy was occasioned by their conversion under his ministry, and they are associated with that kind of success which every true preacher most desires. They are his living epistles, the seals of his commission, and the divine attestation of his call.

We cannot read Paul's epistles without being impressed with his deep love and abiding interest toward those whom he had brought into the fold. "Therefore, my brethren dearly beloved and longed for, my joy and crown, so stand fast in the Lord, my dearly beloved. I beseech Enodias and beseech Syntyche, that they be of the same mind in the Lord." His concern for their perseverance in the faith is specially manifest: "For now we live, if ye stand fast in the Lord." This anxiety was not in Paul alone. The beloved disciple, John, writing in his old age, declares: "I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in truth." These devoted apostles felt a lively solicitude for their spiritual children, and their own lives and happiness were bound up in the welfare of those whom they had begotten in Christ. Mr. Spurgeon, speaking of his first convert, says: "How my heart leaped for joy when I heard the tidings of my first convert! I could never be satisfied with a full congregation and the kind expression of friends; I longed to hear that hearts had been broken, that tears had been seen streaming from the eyes of penitents. How did I rejoice, as one that findeth great spoil, over one poor laborer's wife who confessed that she felt the guilt of sin, and had found the Savior under my discourse on Sunday afternoon; I have the cottage in which she lived in my eye now; believe me, it always appears picturesque. I remember well her being received into the church, and her going home to heaven. She was the first seal to my ministry, and, I can assure you, a very precious one indeed. No mother was ever more full of happiness at the sight of her first-born son. Then could I have sung the song of the Virgin Mary, for my soul did magnify the Lord for remembering my low estate, and giving me the great honor to do a work for which all generations should call me blessed, for so I counted the conversion of one soul."

Thousands of preachers have rejoiced in the same way over the first fruits of their ministry, and they have followed those converts through their subsequent history as parents follow the career of their children. As years go by the pastor's company of precious souls grows larger, and as he moves from place to place he carries with him the names and memories of hundreds who have found the priceless pearl through his instruction. They are his glory and joy if they stand fast in the Lord. He watches their subsequent course, and rejoices in their stability, usefulness and fidelity to Christ. His prayers go up for them as fervently as for his own household, and when they die he triumphs with them over death and the grave. Many a depressed preacher, reading of the peaceful and happy death of some one whom in other years he had pointed to the Lamb of God, has thanked God and taken courage, and girded on his harness for fresh conflicts and toils. We imagine it must be one of the sweetest pleasures of the aged and worn-out veterans of the cross to recall those whose conversion they have witnessed, to breathe a prayer for the living, and in thought to follow the translated ones to the shining shore.

On the other hand, the convert has a tender regard for him who guided his trembling and penitent soul into the stronghold of mercy. The reverence and love felt for the man who has helped us to take hold on Christ, and to escape from the power of darkness, are among the best and deepest emotions of the heart. He can never be forgotten, and the grateful affection of which he is the object is in itself a rich reward. In social conversation, in love-feasts and on death-beds we often hear the expressions of thankful and loving remembrance. Everything associated with conversion is apt to remain green in the memory through life, but, above all, the man of God and the message that riveted conviction are vividly impressed. The converted heart fully responds to the deep and absorbing interest of the one who has sought to win it from death. The tie that binds is mutual, and from it spring a helpfulness and a delight to both pastor and convert. It is an element of sanctified friendship, of brotherly communion, and of sympathy in the ordeals and vicissitudes of life.

It is a relation that can hardly be severed if both are faithful to the end. Personal associations may be broken asunder, the pastoral term comes to an end, but between the preacher and his converts the bond is indissoluble. It grows firmer and brighter with the lapse of time, death does not destroy it, eternity will make it perpetual. The crown and the stars will be blended in the heavenly firmament.

Moody and Sankey in Philadelphia.

Thomas K. Cree, secretary of the executive committee, sends us a printed slip (November 30,) from which we make the following extract:

The meetings in Philadelphia began on Sunday morning, November 21, at eight o'clock. It was a cold winter morning, the rain pouring in torrents for an hour before the opening of the service. At eight o'clock, when the doors were closed, there were from eight to nine thousand persons in the audience. In the afternoon, at four o'clock, a damp, disagreeable day, an hour before the time of beginning the service, the hall was packed, there being fully twelve thousand people in the audience, and it is estimated twenty thousand persons were turned away unable to obtain admittance. The morning prayer meeting, from eight to nine o'clock, was opened in the Chambers Presbyterian church, accommodating some two thousand people, but after three days the number in attendance was so great that it had to be moved to the hall. The first morning in the hall some six thousand persons were present. After Thursday the morning meeting will be held daily at twelve o'clock, instead of eight o'clock. On Thanksgiving evening the service was announced for half-past seven o'clock. At two o'clock the people began to gather about the building, and by five o'clock thousands were waiting to obtain admission. At six o'clock the house was crowded, fully twelve thousand persons being present, and the doors were closed, shutting out most of the ministers, a large part of the choir, and many representatives of the press. On last Sunday the eight o'clock service was for Christian workers, admitted by ticket, which were given free to those applying for them. By noon on Saturday all the tickets were given out, and many were thus prevented from attending. This talk to Christians was the most impressive Mr. Moody had so far given. It was on "Love and Sympathy," and many times during the sermon there was hardly a person in the vast audience who was not affected to tears. This service closed the special sermons to Christians. For a week he preached, talked to and exhorted Christians to more consecration and earnestness, and the result of the first week's work will be felt during the continuance of the meetings.

On Sunday afternoon the services for the impenitent were begun. At three o'clock, an hour before the time of service, the doors were closed, shutting in eleven or twelve thousand women (no men being admitted,) and shutting out large numbers of women who vainly sought admittance. Such an assemblage was never before in this country gathered under one roof, and the sight of so vast an audience of women, as in rows they stretched from side to side away to the back end of the hall, was a scene hard to picture. Mr. Moody preached from John 3. vii: "Ye must be born again." It was his first sermon here to those out of Christ, and it was an earnest and effective sermon on regeneration—the necessity for a new birth. He refuted the various excuses, answered the false reasoning, and then boldly stated he could not reason out regeneration—that it was a revelation, and one could only understand it by accepting the new birth as a God-given gift, a new creation. The sermon was full of beautiful imagery, touching incidents, pathos and eloquence, and yet a statement of facts none could question, put in a terse, blunt way, that would make a lasting impression. Mr. Sankey never sang with more sweetness, and as the soft notes of the Ninety-and-Nine passed from row to row, penetrating in their fullness and sweetness every corner of the vast audience-room, multitudes wept, scarcely knowing why. Mr. Moody requested those not Christians, wishing to be prayed for, to rise. Fully five hundred accepted the invitation. Those who arose were requested to go to the inquiry-rooms before the audience was dismissed, and a wave of people moved toward them from all parts of the house. In the inquiry-rooms Messrs. Moody and Sankey, assisted by ministers and Christian workers, were engaged in pointing inquirers to Christ, and many who went in weeping penitents went away rejoicing in a sense of pardoned sins.

At half-past seven o'clock the service was for men only, and at that hour an audience of ten thousand men, mostly young men, were assembled. Mr. Moody repeated the sermon of the afternoon with increased earnestness and power.

He carried with him the hearts of the listeners, and a more attentive and quiet audience never sat listening to the gospel. Mr. Sankey sang the "Prodigal Child" and other most impressive pieces. When the invitation was given for those not Christians, wishing to be prayed for, to arise, hundreds stood up, and consequently went into the inquiry-rooms. A nine o'clock meeting for young men has been held every evening in the Arch street Methodist Episcopal church, and the house has been full. So many requests for prayer are presented every evening that all who wish cannot be heard, and large numbers—as many as forty in an evening—of those out of Christ have stood up to be prayed for. These are afterward talked with privately, and many have been hopefully converted. A woman's meeting is held every day at nine o'clock A. M., and a fathers' meeting each evening at nine P. M. On Monday morning prayer meeting was given to requests for prayer and reports of the work. Some fifty or more requests were presented, embracing a large number of all classes and conditions of people. Glowing reports were brought in from all the meetings, as well as by pastors from their churches and from the neighboring towns. The work is assuming proportions far beyond the expectations of the most sanguine, and we are in the midst of a great revival, which we hope will sweep over all the land. The class of people at the meetings yesterday afternoon and evening was largely those unaccustomed to church-going, and the impression made was on this account the more marked. The meetings for this week will be the same as last week, and as soon as Mr. Moody has recovered from the fatigue of his exhausting work in Brooklyn he will begin an afternoon service. Excursions are arranged for from all parts of the State, and ministers are coming in in large numbers to attend the meeting.

THE Shepherd of the Valley, a Catholic paper, published in St. Louis, says: "In the future, when we shall have gained the ascendency in this country, as we surely shall, then it will be true, even as our enemies now say, that there will be no more religious liberty, as there ought not to be."

MRS. MOODY, the mother of the lay preacher, is a member of the Unitarian Church, and was a delegate from Northfield, Mass., to the recent convention at Brattleboro, Vt.

Religious-Political.

Writing of the religious-political element, the New York Observer says:

Because religion is conservative it is slow in being roused to action. It suffers long and is kind. But it is thoughtful, deep, and has in it a power that overcomes. When it has patiently endured the wrong, until patience is a virtue no more, it rises in its might, with faith, energy and purpose inspired of God; and then—then the craft of cunning men, the combinations of thieves, the wiles of Jesuits, the schemes of selfish contractors and corrupt rings, are swept away as chaff on the wings of the storm.

Politicians are now blind to the fact that the religious element in the American people is coming up to a great fight for the overthrow of the Jesuit party in our church and educational matters. Politicians know that the Jesuit party holds in many States what is called the balance of power, and so they court it and trade with it. But there is another party and another power. It is hid in the religious Protestant population of this country. Its fundamental principle is equal rights for all. It is as jealous of the liberties of one church as of another, and would resist unto blood all legislation to disable or oppress the people of any faith or creed under heaven. And it sees that in many States, notably in this, the Legislatures (no matter what political party is in power) are swift to make laws giving special privileges to one sect and to no other; and this legislation is so much on the increase as to awaken the liveliest anxieties whereunto this thing will grow. Slowly, but with absolute certainty, the mind of the people will wake to the fact, and then the giant roused will do his duty in the premises.

What Jesuitism does in monarchical governments it must here do through the sovereign people. It is silently, steadily, and thus far very successfully, accomplishing its ends; but when the patient, long-suffering, conservative religious element of the enlightened people rises in its majesty it will sweep away this conspiracy against light and liberty, and the country will be safe for another hundred years.

It is statesmanship that estimates all forces in the State. Politicians are often blind to the most active powers that oppose them. And the principles and the facts we have named will be heeded or neglected, according to the capacity of the calculator, to take in the elements of success in the control of an intelligent Christian people.

Something Else.

We close out the fraternity articles this week. The article by Bro. McCarty, on our second page, reached us while three stars was in the hopper. It is much in the same line, and is enough for the present. Now let our able contributors give us something else—thoughtful, timely, short. When the stir and work of the Conference sessions are over our brethren will have time to mature their themes and put them in shape. We may say what we have often said: That personalities should be avoided, that serials are not much to our mind, and that there are few topics suited to a weekly religious journal that should occupy more than a column or a column and a half. There are exceptions to this rule, but we do not like to make them often. Another suggestion: Do not write on a subject because many others are doing so, but give your pen another course, and blaze out another track of thought. Especially give us religious news, and good, practical religious papers as much as possible. The cream of a good sermon, with the sermon left out, makes a capital article for the ADVOCATE sometimes.

WE sincerely sympathize with Dr. Hargrove in the deep affliction through which he has been called to pass. Dr. Summers, in the Nashville Christian Advocate of December 4, says:

Just as we returned from the funeral of Dr. Weakley—of which our readers may expect an account next week—we were met by a note from our beloved and afflicted brother, Dr. Hargrove, calling on us to perform the last sad rites, on Wednesday, December 1, for his son Battle. The dear boy died on Tuesday, November 30. He was one of the best students at the Vanderbilt University—a noble Christian young man. The faculty and students as a body attended his funeral at McKendree church, where we performed, last week, the obsequies of his sweet little Clifton. But they are safe in the heavenly fold! Let us rejoice for "the blessed hope" which the gospel affords.

THE MINIMUM CHRISTIAN.—The minimum Christian is not clear on a number of points. The opera and dancing, the theater and card-playing, and large fashionable parties, give him much trouble. He cannot see the harm in this or that, or the other popular amusement. There is nothing in the Bible against it. He does not see but that a man may be a Christian, and dance or go to the opera. He knows several excellent persons who do. Why should not he? He stands so close to the dividing line between the people of the world that it is hard to say on which side of it he is actually to be found.

Ah, my brother, are you making this attempt? Beware, lest you find at last that, in trying to get to heaven with a little religion, you miss it altogether.

NOT because I raise myself above something, but because I raise myself to something, do I approve myself.—Jacobi.

CHINESE BEARDS.—The Rev. C. E. Babb writes to the Cincinnati papers: "The Chinese gods all have long beards, and yet nearly all the Chinamen we meet are as beardless as our American Indians. I inquired about this of a missionary, and he told me that no Chinaman is permitted to wear a moustache until he is forty years old, or to wear a beard until he is sixty. The gods, being all of course more than sixty years old, are bearded. It is a sign of their age and claim to be venerated."

OUR BILLS.

We are sending our bills to subscribers. Many of them have desired us that they would remit as soon as crops were harvested. We have waited till now, hoping that by this time they could pay the small amounts they owe. Each subscriber may think his two dollars and fifty cents too small an amount to affect us; but if every subscriber should reason the same way, and withhold it, the sum total would be over twenty thousand dollars. We need every dollar due us—we need it badly. Will you send at once through your pastor, if convenient? If not, please remit directly to this office and greatly oblige the publisher.

THE GREAT JACKSON ROUTE.—The above route, with its ample equipments, its excellent officers, its grand connections, is bound to continue to be a line of vast importance to the city of New Orleans, as well as an increasing source of wealth to the country, and as such it deserves the hearty support of the business community. The time table of passenger trains arriving and departing will be found in our columns. Further information in reference to sleeping cars, passage, etc., may be obtained from A. D. Sheldon, Esq., the agent, at 31 Camp street, corner of Common, under the City Hotel—a courteous, obliging and well-informed officer.

BOOTS AND SHOES.—Our country friends visiting the city will find at 18 Camp street, under the City Hotel, the wholesale and retail establishment of R. F. W. Bachman, Esq., a gentleman thoroughly acquainted with the necessities of the trade, and full of enterprise. Mr. Bachman knows how to purchase to the best advantage, and we know of members of the most cautious buyers among commission merchants who go to him with all their bills. His place of business is convenient to the hotels and center of the city, and we take pleasure in referring to his business notice.

HOGAN PREPARING FOR THE HOLIDAYS.—The enterprising establishment of William Hogan, Esq., at 69 and 131 Canal street, begins to present a holiday appearance. He is evidently preparing for a run upon his establishment, and we feel assured that he can stand a heavy demand for fine stock before it will be depleted. Mr. Hogan is one of our worthiest and cleverest citizens, and we are glad to have an opportunity to call attention to his advertisement in another column.

SEEDSMAN AND FLORIST.—R. Maitre, Esq., 642 Magazine street, has an attractive catalogue of seeds, plants, roots, bulbs and ornamental shrubs. Those who wish to beautify their grounds, gardens or green-houses, as well as those who need seeds for field or garden vegetables, should read his advertisement.

THE Jackson Store is one of the attractions in the vicinity of Jackson square, corner of Chartres and St. Ann streets. We never pass it without being attracted by the display of fine goods, tastefully arranged for inspection, and we commend the advertisement in another column to the attention of our readers.

FANCY AND STAPLE FAMILY GROCERIES.—Mrs. A. C. Wilner, widow of the late Capt. Wilner, calls the attention of her friends to her fine stock of groceries, at 552 Magazine street, Fourth District, in the building formerly occupied by the Bank of Lafayette.

GARDENING FOR PLEASURE.—Many of our readers, no doubt, already have the works on gardening written by the senior member of the firm of Peter Henderson & Co., seeds' men and florists, 35 Cortlandt street, New York. We are glad to see that Mr. Henderson has just written a new book expressly to meet the wants of the novice in gardening, and which he calls Gardening for Pleasure; it is written so plain that any one, however ignorant in gardening matters, will have no difficulty in putting its teachings into successful practice. This book, as well as his former ones, is offered by Peter Henderson & Co. in their advertisement in another column.

IT IS not often that an opportunity so good is to be found of getting a really first-class portrait of a great man as is presented by the publishers of the Atlantic Monthly, who offer to send a life-size portrait of the poet Longfellow to their subscribers on payment of a dollar in addition to their regular subscription. Particulars are given in an advertisement in our columns. Longfellow is emphatically the poet of the American home, and it is a liberal education to look at his benignant face. All his old associates unite in pronouncing the likeness admirable.

NEW ORLEANS AND TEXAS RAILROAD.—Elsewhere will be found the card of the general manager of the above road, connecting this city with Donaldsonville, La. To the efficient management of C. H. Allen, Esq., the stockholders and the public are much indebted for the service which the road has been to the settlers along the route, as well as to this city.

CARPETS, UPHOLSTERY, ETC.—Messrs. Heath, Pippey & Lara, at 99 Camp street, can be fully relied upon for fair and honorable dealings with their customers. They have been our near neighbors for a number of years, and we take pleasure in commending their advertisement, to be found in our columns, to the favorable attention of our readers.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

It is so mild in its action as not to interfere with business or pleasure. de9 tt

MEDICAL.

I MUST OWN that your Simmons' Liver Regulator fully deserves the popularity it has obtained. As a family medicine it has no equal. It cured my wife of a malady I had counted incurable—that wolfsbane of our American people, dyspepsia. She desires that all nations and people might know the virtues of this God-given remedy. Hoping that the above will appear in your Almanac of 1876, and be of some use in extolling the virtues of your excellent medicine, is the wish of your humble servant.

A. E. P. ALBERT, Professor in Nicholas Public School, Parish of Terrebonne, La.

I have used Simmons' Liver Regulator for two years, and recommend it as a very superior medicine for Dyspepsia and Liver Disease.

GEORGE W. SMITH, Kentucky Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Your valuable medicine (Simmons' Regulator) has saved me doctors' bills often. I use it for everything that it is recommended for, and never knew it to fail. I have used it in Colic and Grubs with my mules and horses, giving them about half a bottle at a time. I have not lost one that I gave it to. You can recommend it to every one that has stock as being the best medicine known for all complaints that horse flesh is heir to.

E. T. TAYLOR, Agent for Druggists of Georgia.

Hernando (Miss.) Banner.

Simmons' Liver Regulator doubtless is one of the best medicines ever compounded from the great botanic garden of nature, and contains no life-destroying component hidden under some medicinal name, but is a purifier, rejuvenator and regulator not only of the Liver, but of the whole system.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Pruning Roses.

The climbing rose flowers upon the wood of the current year. The closer it is pruned the better it blooms at the latter end of the season, the more beautiful are the flowers, and the more numerous the shoots will be the following year. A rose-tree constantly long-pruned becomes deformed, and produces too many small flowers, while a close-pruned tree presents a head like that of a willow, and wears itself out quickly from the effects of the reflux of the sap, which induces the formation of suckers. By a combination of the two methods the advantages of both may be secured, for each will neutralize the injurious effects of the other. With the rose-tree, pruning to a medium length will be preferable to either the long or short system; but experience shows that in the majority of cases a combination of the two systems is still more advantageous. The following is our method of operating: The best-placed branches are subjected to long pruning, being cut to a length of from eight inches to a foot, while the others are cut back or spurred to two eyes. Badly-placed shoots are cut clean out; young wood better situated will be encouraged to take their place. The shoots pruned on the long system will bloom early, while the shoots produced by the short-pruned wood will push out vigorous growths that will be covered with flowers later in the season. The following year this process is reversed; the long-pruned will now be short-pruned, while the shoots that were previously cut short are now long-pruned, according to their size, and every year this alternation takes place. Sometimes vegetation is retarded, and, should the long wood after their blooming show signs of withering, medium pruning in the middle of the summer will be beneficial. This treatment is somewhat analogous to that bestowed upon the double-bearing raspberry. If at any time an over luxuriant branch is allowed to grow and bloom, which it will do profusely if properly managed, it should be cut down, and the young shoots may be then used as cuttings. Under any circumstances, however, medium-sized shoots, especially of the Hybrid Perpetual or Moss varieties, of which the buds are well formed, will, after having been pruned, blow during the first season, without becoming over-luxuriant. I dislike summer pruning. As soon as a rose has shed its blossoms it is best to leave the shoots uncut, as the terminal eyes are the most florliferous, and any pruning tends to exhaust the tree. This florliferous disposition of the top eyes shows that among the more productive kinds—Chromatella, for example—the rose cultivator should choose his scions from the upper extremity, and immediately below the flowers, if possible. These luxuriant branches should be kept back by pinching, at spring-time, to a length of twelve inches, and the laterals will become florliferous; it is upon these that the pruning of the following year should take place. The best time for pruning roses is April; autumn-pruning induces buds to burst too soon, which are thus rendered liable to injury from spring frosts. By operating while the sap is rising the dormant eyes, which have not yet commenced to push, are acted upon. As to non-climbing kinds of roses, it is better to leave them alone, or to long-prune a certain number of branches, without which they will become overcrowded. The branches should be thinned by removing some of the superfluous wood. The latter will produce shoots for long-pruning the following year, and the former will be covered with flowers. So soon as the blossoms have fallen they should be cut back to dormant eyes, or to a well-placed branch. Nothing else need be done to the others, except to restrain them by pinching in—too luxuriant growths.—Correspondent of London Garden.

BERMUDA GRASS.—This valuable grass has been too long neglected, and we wish to call the attention of all the people of the State, not farmers alone, to its great worth. Randall, in his "Sheep Husbandry of the South," and Mr. Affleck, of Mississippi, one of our highest authorities upon grasses, puts Bermuda down as most valuable for many purposes. One of its greatest qualities is that it will grow upon barren and worn-out ground, affording the very finest pasture for horses, cattle and sheep, and soon restoring these otherwise worthless lands to more than native fertility. It requires no cultivation, all the labor required to secure it being over with when the grass is once planted. No better pasture grass can be found. Bermuda is the very best grass to protect railway embankments, the roots making a perfect "mat" in the ground and preventing washes. The bare hillsides all over the State should be covered with Bermuda. Of all the people in the world, we most need grass, and none should be neglected that is valuable for any purpose. We would be glad to hear from any one familiar with this grass.—Spirit of Arkansas.

OATMEAL PORRIDGE.—Take one quart of boiling water in a pail, and stir into it one pint of oatmeal which has been soaked in one pint of warm water over night. Place the pail in a kettle of boiling water, and let it boil steadily for half an hour; then stir in one cupful of milk, and boil for ten or fifteen minutes. Season with salt, and eat with cream and sugar. This will warm over as good as when freshly boiled.

POTATOES.—The Rural New Yorker, while admitting that the price of potatoes will be doubled at the East on account of the ravages of the potato-bug, thinks farmers will make more money raising this farm product hereafter than ever before, since it will require more skill to raise potatoes, and the exercise of skill is more remunerative than that of mere brute force.

CROPS IN ORCHARDS.—Small grain or grass should never be in a young orchard. The best crops to grow there are root crops, peas, beans, squashes and small fruits. The land should be kept in good condition, free from weeds, and highest next the trees, so that water will not settle around them.

A Voice from the Clergy.

ST. MARY'S CHURCH, Allegheny City, Pa.

MESSRS. CRADDOCK & CO.: The East India Hemp has been taken by Rev. Matthias Binder, O. S. B. and Rev. Sebastian Arnold, O. S. B., both assistant pastors of this church, and has so far given relief to both. They suffered from affections of the Lungs and Bronchial Organs. We have recommended, through charity to sufferers, the Cannabis Indica to different persons, and continue the same in good conscience, knowing the effects by experience. Please find inclosed check for twelve bottles of sirup, pills and ointment. We shall inform you in due time what further success the medicine shall meet with. Yours truly,

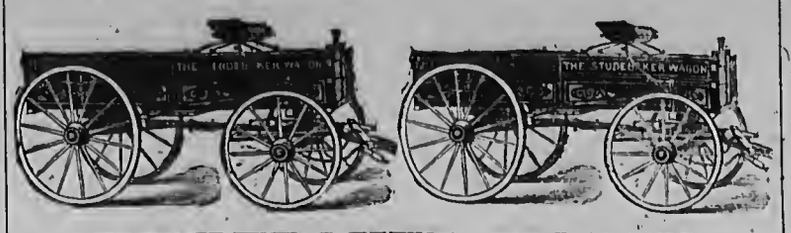
D. M. HOLLINGSWORTH'S PATENT DOUBLE SCROLL

The greatest improvement of the age on the old Concord Buggy. Twelve Bolts, instead of four, to hold the springs and raise them up, so they cannot strike the axles at the end.

I HAVE RECENTLY ACCEPTED THE AGENCY OF THE CELEBRATED



STUDEBAKER WAGON.

FROM ONE TO SIX HORSE.

THE MOST SUBSTANTIAL WAGONS MADE!

There are several reasons why all should buy the above Wagon: First. They are made of the BEST SELECTED TIMBER, the same being cut at the proper season of the year, piled under sheds, properly dated, and allowed to remain there from three to five years. Second. The wood-work is shaped by the latest improved machinery, put together by the BEST WAGON MECHANICS IN THE WORLD, and are the best ironed and painted Wagons in the market. Third. Their thimble skeins, made of select iron, are set by patent skein setters, and weigh from four to twenty-five pounds per set more than any other, thereby making a perfect running Wagon, which will not break. Fourth. They are the only Wagon in which the SLOPE SHOULDER SPOKE is used; hence they have the best wheel, which is actually the foundation of the Wagon, and should be carefully examined by persons purchasing. Fifth. They are sold only by responsible parties, and every Wagon is warranted; while the Studebaker Bros. are practical workmen, and attend to their business personally; hence the superiority of their work over all others.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals for the three days ending December 7:

Mississippi river and bayous	bales... 12,487
Red river	102
Ouachita river	1,645
Railroads	11,620
Lake	18
Mobile	1,124
Texas	3,621
Total	51,439

On Saturday the movement was partially suspended by a heavy rain storm, which commenced on Friday night, and continued with but little abatement throughout the day, prevailing with great violence during the morning, and flooding a large portion of the city. The sales were confined to 2,100 bales. On Monday, with a return of fine weather in the morning, and a slight improvement in foreign exchange, the market opened with a fair inquiry, and 1,500 bales changed hands before twelve M., after which the movement became more active, resulting in further sales of 5,900 bales, making a total of 10,400 bales. The better qualities were strong at previous rates, and desirable lots of the lower grades steady, but neglected lots were irregular and easy, it being impracticable to work them off unless at some concessions. Good ordinary sold at 10¾c., low middling at 11¾c., strict low middling at 12c., and strict middling at 12½c. On Tuesday there appeared to be but little movement during the morning, but later in the day it became quite active and resulted in sales of 8,750 bales. The lower grades showed no improvement, and when sales were pressed ruled at still more irregular and easier prices; but the better qualities, from low middling up, were manifestly stronger.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 21,250 bales, against 25,100 for the corresponding time last week and 20,856 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 433,501 bales, against 307,473 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 143,156 bales. The increase by the reports per telegraph is 162,123—1,703,379 against 1,541,256. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 57,215 bales to France, of 101,311 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 78,083 to Great Britain. We quote:

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

LIVER PILLS,

LIVER COMPLAINT,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increase on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder-blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for a rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant.

VOL. 21. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1875. NO. 51.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The expelled students from Prlueeton College were allowed to return on promising to have nothing to do with secret societies.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—Senate.—Senator Cooper presented a memorial from the book agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, asking compensatlou for losses at Richmond and Louisville during the war.

MEMPHIS, Dec. 10.—An eastward-bound passenger train on the Memphis and Charleston railroad, while wooding at White's station, this morning, was run into by a freight train going in the samo direction and several cars were wrecked. A number of passengers were bruised, two severely.

MACON, GA., Dec. 10.—An engine on the Macon and Brunswick railrosd exploded this morning, killing the engineer, George Horning, instantly. The baggage car was wrecked. A number of Florida tourists were on the train, but none were hurt.

VICKSBURG, Dec. 11.—A riot is reported at Rolling Point, thirty-five miles above here, growing out of an attempt of the negroes to rescue a black man under arrest. Seven negroes, including two of the leaders, were killed.

SALT LAKE, Dec. 12.—The meeting of the Methodist ministers in this city adopted resolutions protesting against the action of Bishop Haven and the Methodist preachers of Boston, in nominating Grant for a third term.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—Information has been received from Guatemala to the effect that representatives of the five Central American States will meet on the fifteenth of January, with a view of forming a federal union.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Dec. 7.—Lloyd's agent at Rochester reports this morning that a boat came ashore in that vicinity from the steamer Deutschland, of the North German Lloyd, from Bremen, December 4, for New York. The boat contained one man and the dead bodies of two others. The man reports that the Deutschland is aground somewhere in the North sea. Lloyd's agent at Sheerness, near the mouth of the Thames, confirms the news of the disaster to the Deutschland, but gives no further details. The two men perished from long exposure, having been in the boat for thirty-eight hours.

The agents have just received the following: "The Deutschland ran ashore on Long Sands. Fifty of the passengers and crew are reported drowned. A part of the passengers and crew landed at Harwooth on Tuesday afternoon."

The Advertiser reports the total number of persons rescued from the Deutschland as one hundred and fifty. Twenty-five mail bags were saved.

A private telegram from Pekin says arrangements for sending Chinese legations abroad are proceeding. Ministers have been appointed to the United States, Peru and Japan.

LONDON, Dec. 9.—The Times, commenting on the message, says: "If Spain cannot suppress the Cuban rebels; if the island must be half ruined while she holds it; if she will not put an end to that institution which is the main source of disturbance, it would be hard to expect the United States to let the work of devastation proceed unchecked, merely out of regard to the nominal sovereignty of Spain. Spain is on trial; the limits of her power to restore order will be the limits of her rights."

BERLIN, Dec. 10.—It is stated the recent conference between Prince Bismarck and Prince Gortschakoff resulted in an agreement for a peaceful solution of the Turkish difficulty. They will not raise the Eastern question, nor are they in favor of an international conference on the Suez canal question.

PARIS, Dec. 11.—The municipality of Paris voted a subscription of $2,000 to the fund for a centennial statue to Liberty in New York.

LONDON, Dec. 12.—A dispatch received from Bremerhaven to-night states that sixty-eight persons were killed and thirty-five wounded by the explosion yesterday on the quay of the Mosel, and eight are missing. A passenger on board the Mosel has since attempted to commit suicide, but was prevented from consummating the fatal act. He will be examined.

ONE of the Colorado cattle kings was recently visited by an old college friend who frequently overtaxed his host's memory by using Latin quotations long forgotten by reason of disuse. One day the Western man got even with his pedantic guest. Pointing to an immense herd of fine young cattle, in prime condition for the market, the visitor said: "You must have had good luck since you commenced stock-raising?" "Yes," replied the host, "it is due to my luck that I can say 'Hinc illæ lachrymæ' in looking at my herds." "What do you mean?" asked his astonished guest. "Why, don't you see?—'Hence these steers.'"

A VERMONT PAPER felicitates itself because "no convict has escaped from the Vermont State prison for eighteen years." It would be a better cause for congratulation to be able to say that "no convict had been sent" to the prison aforesaid in eighteen years, or even in one year.

A Clerical Club on Religious Newspapers.

The Boston Clerical Club, at one of its Monday meetings recently, had a free talk about religious newspapers. The following notes were published in the Independent:

S. observed, in opening, that personalities should be avoided, whether upon other editors, papers or denominations. All boasting should be excluded. News was the principal thing. The world should be reported to us as we question our paper: "What of the night?"

Nothing is so valuable as good correspondence. A family corner is well. Stories are useful. Now and then elaborate essays, such as Prof. Phelps writes, are most valuable.

M. demanded sound judgment in the editors. Their competency in religious matters was to be inferred from their treatment of secular subjects. A paper, e. g., which would admit advertisements of quacks was not to be trusted upon the doctrine of election or of the revision of the Scriptures. All flings at men and causes should be excluded. Wit should illuminate without scorching. Partisanship was declared unworthy.

Correspondence should be written in the countries from which it purported to come, not in the editorial office. It should not be gossipy or unreliable. Many newspaper letters were not worth printing. More space should be given to mission intelligence. It should be gleaned, at whatever cost, directly from the fields. The giving of an entire page to the discussion of some living subject was an excellent plan.

F. would have his paper denominational, but not sectarian. No digs should be given in it to the Baptists. The paper should not assume the authority of a theological chair. It should not presume to instruct ministers. Broadsides on the length of sermons were impertinent and mischievous. (Amen! from several.)

☞ A new paper was needed for ministers exclusively. A high tone should be maintained. There should be no catering to liberalism. The Christian Union style of catholicity was criticised as weak, overdone.

The ideal paper would be a daily. Stories are not good food, but might be admitted, with great judgment, for the hardness of women's and children's hearts. The editor must beware of dogmatism, one of his chief temptations. News should be the first aim. Adulatory matter should be excluded. A page should be devoted every week to missionary intelligence. The Congregationalist was an admirable newspaper.

Great topics should be thoroughly discussed—as the Advance once discussed them under Dr. Patton's vigorous administration, as the Independent has done from the beginning. Every week there should be ringing leaders on living subjects.

K.—I would start in defining my view from the basis of a secular paper like the Springfield Republican. The religious journal should give a wide and accurate view of the religious condition of the world. Its religious character should be well defined. It should be pious. There is too much Congregationalism in the Congregationalist. Our paper should be free from pettiness. The hunting of small game is small business. It disgusts. An independent paper—one, i. e., in which leading men of different denominations express their views—has great advantages. Articles should be short. Puffing one's self is bad. Good stories are as justifiable as the use of parables in the Bible. Newspaper scraps, short items, personals, facetiæ, are dissipating. Mostly, I would exclude them. Now and then there should be a full discussion of some great subject.

L. remarked first upon mechanical particulars. The paper stock should be clear, heavy, adapted to burn freely. The type like that of the Advance, the form a medium quarto, cut and pasted, like the Independent or the Boston Globe. Unimportant matter should be so distributed that cuttings can be taken out.

To describe the journal itself, he used the supposition of a religious friend entering the family. This friend should have personality. The editor might be impersonal. The paper should be a vigorous person. It should have unity. It should be a solvent for everything put into it. No news should be admitted which the paper could not digest. He wanted a paper whose secular matter could be read on Sunday.

Our friend should have consistency. He should not say one thing on page one and a contradictory thing on page four—on temperance or any subject. He should be large, to educate us in breadth of view and candor. He should be full of trustworthy knowledge, able to answer our questions concerning men and truths and things—an instructive friend. He should be lively, always witty, sometimes humorous. Gifted with Attic salt, but sparing of the Attic pepper and mustard. He should have power of inspiration—not simply of saying good things, but in a spirit to stir us to all desire of better life. He should have adaptation; be able to speak not only to thoughtful men and women, but to the children, the servants, the aged. He should have a tried and seasoned character.

The New York Primeval was referred to as a very readable paper. But it had kept such company in years past, had done such questionable, such wicked things, its character had been so bad that it could not now be safely trusted in the Christian household. It could be prayed for and encouraged in its efforts at reformation; but it wanted a tried character.

The Golden Rule suggested the question whether the chosen friend should be independent in religion. The answer was a negative, on the ground that no man or paper is large enough of mold to be earnest in the religious life, and at the same time be outside all denominational connections. Independence in religion meant indifference.

North Alabama Conference.

In the apostle's sense of the language we were "redeeming the time" to go to the North Alabama Conference; but we were, after all, denied the privilege. This we much regret, as we love to meet with our old friends in their annual gatherings. The session was held in Birmingham, November 17–23. We are obliged to the secretary for prompt returns of minutes, from which we learn that James W. Tucker, C. C. O'Neal, R. T. Bentley, J. M. Blanton, G. M. G. Dunkin, J. T. Morris, were admitted on trial; D. C. Strange, A. P. Taylor, discontinued; C. A. Allday, H. P. Berry, J. T. Miller, J. B. Gregory, M. L. White, H. D. Hill, were admitted into full connection—the first four elected and ordained deacons. E. A. Stevenson, readmitted. W. C. Hearn, B. J. Blackwell, received by transfer. F. A. Hewitt, C. C. O'Neal, C. W. Jacobs, P. A. J. Renfroe, D. J. McCleskey, M. J. Clearman, R. D. Bolin (local,) elected; and F. H. Hewitt, C. C. O'Neal, W. Hallman, ordained, elders. J. W. Newman, elected and ordained elder. J. M. Webster, T. A. Kerr, T. G. Cansler (local,) elected, and B. Harris, M. G. Foust, J. W. Jones, ordained, elders. R. G. Isbell, located at his own request. E. McMeans, J. N. Glover, R. J. Mason, O. W. Smith, F. P. Scruggs, W. D. Nicholson, C. S. D. Lassiter, superannuated. A. F. Driskill, died. White members, as we count, 31,650—increase, 349; colored, 16—decrease, 45; local preachers, 322—decrease, 22. Collected for claimants, $945.25; for missions, $2,308.45. Next session at Decatur.

IN old Greek times one was never too poor to be a student. Cleanthes, a philosopher of Zeno's school, was so poor that he used to write down all that he heard from Zeno, it is said, on oyster-shells and on the shoulder-blades of oxen, from want of money to buy any better writing material.

Virginia Conference.

This body met at Danville, November 17. We take the following items from the editorial correspondence of the Richmond Christian Advocate, written on November 19–22, and before adjournment:

The Virginia Conference met on the seventeenth instant, in the Main Street church. Bishop McTyeire was present, in fine health, and called the body to order. A large number of members was in attendance; others have been arriving by every train since, so that now the Conference is quite full. The preachers are looking healthy and vigorous, and are in fine spirits generally. Danville has, with her well-known hospitality, opened her homes among all denominations, and also those of no church, and so far as we know all are pleasantly domiciled.

Yesterday Rev. Mr. Ransom, of the Tennessee Conference, recently appointed missionary to Brazil, and on his way to New York, made a stirring address to the Conference. He appears to be a finely educated man, full of love and missionary zeal. He is the son of one of the most honored members of the Tennessee Conference. He will be our first regularly appointed missionary to the greatest country of South America.

Rev. J. E. Newman has been a settler in that country for a number of years, and on his own account has done much valuable mission work, and we believe has gathered an interesting congregation. At the conclusion of Bro. Ransom's remarks Rev. E. N. S. Blogg stated that a young man in Baltimore was preparing to go out as a missionary to the Germans in Brazil, of whom it is said there are fifteen thousand in two provinces of the empire, with but two Lutheran preachers to serve them. It is certainly a fine field for several earnest German laborers.

Dr. Munsey is here, and is looking better than he has for years. He is now decidedly fleshy, weighing probably one hundred and seventy-five pounds. In a pleasant interview with him he said that his health was better than it had been for many years, and that his great desire was to be heartily and exclusively engaged in the regular work of preaching.

He has been transferred to the Louisiana Conference, and will take charge of a beautiful new church recently erected in New Orleans by the liberality of a few of our members.

The doctor has delivered two lectures here to crowded houses, and the people are so much delighted with him that they have prevailed upon him to lecture again.

He will leave for his charge in New Orleans about the middle of December.

Dr. Bledsoe, the able and distinguished editor of the Southern Review, is here, looking as vigorous and determined as ever, with polemical claymore drawn ready for an opponent, whether he come from Geneva or Rotterdam.

The missionary meeting on Saturday night was poorly attended and the collection small. One hundred dollars were subscribed and paid to old Bro. Ransom in his Brazilian mission. The collections in the Conference for foreign missions will exceed the assessment by $400. For domestic missions we shall be able to pay only eighty per cent. This sadly disappoints us, but we are rapidly improving in our collections for missions. Last year, in all, we raised $8,682.62; this year we raise over $11,000. This is a large increase, considering the hard times and the scarcity of money. We shall yet work up to $20,000 annually for missions. The collections for the superannuated preachers, and widows and orphans, will be nearly enough to pay all the claims fully. This is a most gratifying fact.

RELICS OF PETER THE GREAT.—A curious circumstance is reported, namely: the discovery in a house in Great Peter street of a sideboard, a book-case and an iron chest which were made by Peter the Great when he was living as a workman in this country. The London Gazette of February 9, 1698, describes these articles, which are said to have remained where the Czar left them, and as he left them, since that time. Latterly they have been considered rather in the light of lumber, but, having been seen by M. Stanislaus, a Pole, they have now become the property of a Russian nobleman, Gregoire Tschertkoff, who intends presenting them to the Emperor of Russia, in order that they may be placed among other relics of Peter the Great at Moscow.—London Nonconformist.

I HAVE seen men whose reverence for religion was so morbid that they could hardly lift up their eyes to heaven, but who made it up by the way they looked down on their fellow-men—men who yielded to no master here, who were touched by no name of friend or brother; but the moment the name of God was pronounced they collapsed.

IN reply to a young writer who wished to know "what magazine will give me the highest position quickest," a cotemporary advises "a powder magazine, if you can contribute a fiery article."

PRECOCIOUS BOY, munching the fruit of the date-tree—"Mamma, if I eat dates enough will I grow up to be an almanac?"

Female Education.

MR. EDITOR: Your correspondent would not have the foolish presumption to imagine she could offer anything new on a subject which has been so successfully treated by many learned and able writers. She would only beg leave to hazard a few short remarks on that part of the subject which she would call "the education of the heart." She is well aware that this part also has not been less skillfully and forcibly discussed; though she cannot, at the same time, refrain from remarking that it does not appear to have been so much adopted into common practice.

Notwithstanding the great improvements that have been made in the process of female education, there is still a very material defect—namely: too little regard is paid to the disposition of the mind; the temper is not properly cultivated, nor the heart sufficiently regulated. Education is a composite process; it is not confined to books, but made up of the varied influence of home, early associations, etc.

One would imagine, judging from the common mode of female education, that life consisted of one universal holiday, and that the only contest was who should be best enabled to excel in the sports and games that were to be celebrated on it. Merely ornamental accomplishments will but indifferently qualify a woman to perform the duties of life; though it is highly important that she should possess them. But is it right to spend so large a portion of time without some preparation for the business of living?

A lady may speak French, Italian, play and sing in a theatrical tone, lace her threadbare ideas with the golden threads of Sallust, Cæsar, Horace and others, have her parlor hung with her own drawings, and yet be very indifferently educated. We are far from attempting to depreciate the value of these qualifications; the most of them are not only highly becoming, but often indispensably necessary, and an accomplished education cannot be perfected without them. But while all young ladies, if in their power, should study the classics, and all the books which constitute belles-lettres, together with music, and the various accomplishments of a polite education; yet the end of a good education is not that they may become splendid musicians or excellent artists; its real object is to make them good daughters, good wives, good members of society and good Christians. The above qualifications, therefore, are intended to adorn their leisure, not to employ their lives; for an amiable and wise person will always have something better to value herself on.

Let the graces be sedulously cultivated, but not at the expense of the virtues. Every event of life will be putting the heart into fresh situations, and making demands on its prudence, its firmness, its integrity and its piety. Those whose business it is to cultivate it can foresee none of these situations; yet, as far as human wisdom will allow, they must enable it to provide for them all with an humble dependence on divine assistance. A well-disciplined soldier must learn and practice all the evolutions, though he does not know on what service his leader may command him, by what foe he shall be attacked, nor what mode of combat the enemy may use. One great art of education consists in not suffering the feelings to become too acute by unnecessary awakening, nor too obtuse by want of exercise. The former renders them the source of calamity, and ruins the temper; while the latter blunts and debases them, and produces a dull, cold and selfish spirit; for the mind is an instrument which, if wound too high, will lose its sweetness, and if not enough strained will abate in vigor.

LINES ON THE DEATH OF JOHN EMORY PAINE.

AFFECTIONATELY INSCRIBED TO HIS MOTHER.

BY T. A. S. ADAMS.

"God wills it—all is well!"
How calm the words that fell
With "Good-by, darling," from the dying lips!
The mortal struggle o'er,
Upon the earthly shore
A morning sun had set in deep eclipse.

John Emory Paine! Alas!
Why should Death's angel pass,
Leaving his shadow on the happy home?
Why, ere the song had died,
Call him from blooming bride
And doting parents to the silent tomb?

Why, ere the morn of life
Had warmed in manhood's strife,
Should day descend, no more on earth to rise?
Why should a mother's heart,
A bride's, a father's, part
To see their treasure hidden from their eyes?

Why should the widow weep
O'er one whose dreamless sleep
To cease the earth for ages still must wait?
Till the green mound forgot,
And the bright spheres are not,
God wakes the dead and opens glory's gate?

Why should the world in vain
Call its friend back again—
Death-blotted name, but precious memory?
Why, oh! why should he go?
"God wills it"—he it so!
'Tis good, when God commands it, e'en to die!

"God wills it"—be it so!
How sweet it is to know
That, through the deepening night of woe and tears,
Light breaks beyond the tomb,
And o'er its deepest gloom
Streams the blest sunshine of eternal years!

"God wills it"—it is good;
And though beneath the flood
Of earthly sorrows sink our earthly hopes,
Still o'er the waves arise
Glimpses of brighter skies,
And day immortal on Faith's vision opes.

"God wills it"—it is Love,
Whose hand, concealed above,
Stretches beneath the shadows of the grave.
Hiding awhile in night
Our jewels from our sight,
But hiding only in the skies to save.

"God wills it"—be it so!
Dark are the clouds of woe,
But God the darkest cloud with gold has lined;
And as we look above
We read the line of love
"Too wise to err, too good to be unkind."

Women Preachers.

MR. EDITOR: Your correspondent, Mr. Angue Dowling, seems to be somewhat exercised on the subject of "women preachers." Is there any danger that the "bulwarks of Zion" will be battered down because a few women are preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ to sinners by the wayside? Will the cause of religion suffer thereby? St. John "saw one casting out devils in the name of Jesus, and forbade him." But Jesus said: "Forbid him not; for he that is not against us is for us."

Illustrative of Mrs. Van Cott's preaching, it is told that at one of her revival meetings, after preaching, she noticed a man with a gloomy countenance. She went to him and asked him about the state of his soul. To all her inquiries he said neither yes or no. As she turned to leave him she said: "May the Lord cast that dumb devil out of you." The next night he came to the altar a penitent. He told her that he had been an honorable man, but had in an evil moment fallen into ways of sin, whose wages were death—had lost his place in society. His wife had left him in consequence, and he had followed her with the intention of taking her life, his children's, and then his own. He was on his way, and, being detained there over night, he had strolled into the church, and her solemn words had stopped his wild career and changed his purpose. "Here," said he, handing her a loaded revolver, "is what I had in my pocket to do the deed." He fell on his knees and asked her to pray for him. With the pistol in her hand she prayed for that man, "with greater power," she said, "than she had ever felt before." The dumb devil did come out of him, and he was converted. A changed man, a new man, he went to his wife, was forgiven and restored to her confidence, and they were once more a happy family. Here we see a murderer turned from his evil course by the preaching of a woman. Who shall say, who dare say, she was out of her place?

But, says Mr. Dowling, the question "is forever fixed and settled," because the "infallible standard" has not authorized or commanded a woman to preach; and Christ chose twelve men, not women, to "preach the gospel to every creature." To preach is to take a text and deliver a discourse, to proclaim, to inculcate. Prophecy—preaching, public interpretation of Scripture. Prophesy—to preach, to instruct in religious doctrines. So says Webster; and so the words are synonymous, or nearly so. "The infallible standard" has authorized a woman to be a prophetess.

Mr. Dowling furthermore informs us that "when Christ led captivity captive he gave gifts unto men; but nothing is said of a woman. Therefore women preachers are not the gift of Christ to the church." There is logic for you, Mr. Editor!

When the morning stars sang together, and the "heavenly host, praising God," said, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men," nothing is said of a woman; therefore a woman has no part or inheritance in the blessed advent of the Babe of Bethlehem. Is that logic also? The noun men in both instances is used to designate the whole human race, without any reference to gender.

The whole chapter from which Mr. Dowling quotes is an exhortation to the Ephesians "to the unity of the Spirit, and to be holy." Were there any women at Ephesus? St. Paul was too much occupied with his theme to draw a line of distinction between the sexes, for he said: "To every one of us is given grace according to the gift of Christ." We are told again that there is no instance of a woman's preaching in the Old Testament. Begging leave to differ with your correspondent again, we hold that the first preacher was a woman, and the first woman a preacher. She took for her text an apple—she had for her audience a man. And he was converted by her argument. If it was a wrong one, more was the shame for him. Why did he not show his superiority then and there, and say: "Madam, you are out of your place; you must not stroll around this garden listening to other voices than mine; go to our bower and ask God to forgive your terrible sin?" Never a word like this did he utter. He believed all she told him, and when he saw the Lord God coming he sneaked behind some bushes. When questioned he said: "The woman thou didst give me," she told me to do so and so. A manly way to get out of a dilemma! Eve took her punishment without murmuring, and to this day her daughters, as a general thing, show more courage under trying circumstances than her sons.

Miriam is the first woman spoken of as a prophetess. The word prophetess here in Hebrew means also poetess. Her poetry was spontaneous, and she had more enthusiasm than zeal—more self-esteem than veneration or firmness; hence her downfall. Many preachers of the past and present day have been and are like her. She did not fall because she was a woman, but because of her presumption and jealousy.

Deborah is the next prophetess spoken of. The chosen people of God had become idolaters, yet not all, for there were "seven thousand that had not bowed the knee to Baal." "And Deborah, a prophetess, the wife of Lapidoth, she judged Israel at that time, and she dwelt under the palm-tree of Deborah;" and the children of Israel came unto her for judgment." Deborah was highly gifted. She did not inherit the office of judge. It was given to her for her spiritual and mental qualifications, which must have been of a very high order, or she would not have been chosen to fill the office when there were so many men, as eager, perhaps, as they are at the present day to hold offices. "Deborah, a prophetess, the wife of Lapidoth." Who was Lapidoth? His fame begins and ends with this announcement. To be the husband of such a woman as Deborah was fame enough for one man. Deborah sent for Barak, a great general, and took him to task about being idle when their enemies were active, and he told her that if she would go with him he would go and fight; if not, he would stay where he was. Barak must have believed in the power of that woman's preaching. "And she said, I will surely go with thee, notwithstanding the journey shall not be for thine honor, for the Lord will sell Sisera into the hand of a woman." What would the world think if some of our modern generals would do as Barak did? Poor Barak! He must have wondered where his laurels were to come from. So Deborah went with him. Why did she not stay at home, under her "palm-tree," with "Lapidoth," and cook his dinner, wash his clothes or darn his socks? And, pray, what right had she, a woman, to go away from home with this man Barak and his ten thousand men, to Mount Tabor, to meet Jabin and his army, his chariots, his multitudes, none of whom escaped save Sisera—and he fell by the hand of a woman? Then Deborah broke forth in a song of praise and thanksgiving to God, the beauty, simplicity and grandeur of which is not surpassed by any other specimen of Hebrew poetry, not even the Psalms of David, claiming no glory for herself but to be remembered a "mother in Israel," a mother of the people whom the Lord God had endowed her with power and wisdom to judge. Read this song, all ye men who think a woman has no "gifts." "And the land had rest forty years." If Deborah did not judge, prophesy or preach all that time, that "rest" was the fruit of her labors. Is there proof of any better results of preaching at the present day? The sacred word was written as much for woman as for man; and if she has talents to draw forth the truth from its inexhaustible resources, and apply them to the good of those less enlightened, all Christians should say: God speed her in the good work.

There is no call for women to lay aside the distaff or the sewing machine, or to leave the precious contents of the cradle and the binding duties of the household to "an hireling," and march into the pulpit. There is no danger that they will do so. But if a few Marys, who are not "cumbered about many things," should feel called of God to preach, shall some over-zealous "John" forbid them?

"The Master calls us to the harvest-field;
There's a work for us all to do;
The fields are white and the harvest great,
But the laborers are few."

Labor on, labor on,
For the crown you shall wear by and by.

With the kind editor's permission we will, in another paper, notice a few more "women preachers" of the Old and the New Testaments.

LORRETTA CRARY SADLER.

The Relation of Our Children to the Church.

For the promise is unto you, and to your children.—Acts ii, 39.

I.

The promises of salvation given us in the word of God are to all men, and are adapted to all conditions.

1. But at what age in life our children become responsible agents, and are brought under the obligation of faith and repentance for salvation through Christ, none have attempted to define, and we presume it impossible to specify any given period that would apply to all children; for, owing to the moral training of some, they are able to judge of good and evil at a much earlier age than others whose religious culture is neglected. Of one thing, however, all are agreed, viz.: All who die before they reach a state of accountability are saved.

Now there must be some well-defined system of grace in the economy of human redemption by which those dying at this age receive salvation; for Christ said (John iii, 6, 7:) "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the spirit is spirit. Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again." It is evident that our Lord predicates the necessity of the new birth of the state of those born in the flesh, and not of any act of transgression thereafter. So that, while the natural birth is made the prototype of the spiritual, the latter is set over against the former, as presenting the broadest possible antitheels between the two states.

2. From this and kindred Scripture we teach the doctrine of total depravity—that is to say, that we do by nature possess the germ of depravity to such a degree that it cannot be added to by any act of personal transgression. By this we would not be understood as saying that all the external fruits of an internal state of the heart are cogent in early childlife; but that the indwelling depravity is perfect in the first-life existence, and works outwardly in heart and practice, as capacity of mind and scope of influence expand. Thus: I hold in my hand a well-matured thistle seed. Yet I handle it without apprehension of danger or pain to my flesh; and just so long as it remains a seed it is perfectly harmless. But once it is planted where the heat and damp can reach it, the thistle-tree with the thorn will appear; not that the process of germination or growth added to the nature the tree received from the seed, but because the seed has an opportunity to develop its nature through the tree. So the infant lies upon its mother's bosom a perfect synonym of innocent purity; but permit its nature to develop without any moral restraint, and we too soon see the outcroppings of a perfect depravity. In connection with this thistle seed I also have a fig seed, which, if planted, will produce a tree harmless to the touch, and bearing fruit pleasant to the taste.

Now the doctrine taught by our Savior is that the natural birth gives to man the thistle seed nature, and that before he can "enter the kingdom of God" this nature must be so changed by the Holy Ghost as to become as the fig seed. No amount of effort on our part, nor of moral training on the part of parents, can work this radical change in our nature. No; it must be done by the personal power and influence of the Holy Ghost upon the heart. Then let us not marvel that it is said of us: "We must be born again."

J. M. WEEMS.

AN aged Highland divine having occasionally to avail himself of the assistance of probationers, a young man, very vain of his accomplishments as a preacher, once officiated. On descending the pulpit he was met by the old gentleman with extended hands. Expecting praise, the probationer said: "No compliments, I pray." "Na, na, my young friend," returned the minister; "nowadays I'm glad o' onybody."

OBITUARIES.

DIED, of hemitura, on the morning of the twenty-eighth of October, 1875, at about five o'clock, ENDORA VIRGINIA, daughter of Mrs. N. V. Chisholm, of Issaquena county, Miss. Little Virgie's approach to death was the most remarkable ever witnessed by the writer. She was about eleven years old, modest and retiring in her disposition, and possessed an intellect above the ordinary. For several hours before her death her mind could not be diverted from the subject. She gave directions in minutest detail concerning her burial. Her composure and resignation were perfect. She said she did not want to live, but desired to die. At one time, when she thought she was going, she called her friends to bid her good-by, and to kiss her for the last time. As her mother wept in sore distress by her side she bade her not to weep nor grieve after her, and said: "It will be like David, who said, 'My child cannot come to me, but I can go to him.' I am going before; we shall not be parted long. You will soon come after me." The writer interrogated her as to her brilliant hope, making this the last question: "Do you think you love the Lord Jesus?" "I know that," was the reply. Many things in connection with her illness and death are worthy to be put on record, and should be imbedded in the hearts and embalmed in the memories of all who witnessed them. Indeed it was more like inspiration than anything else.

Thus, after an illness of four days, she died in the faith and hope of the gospel, and sank to rest in the arms of the Savior, closing her eyes on the things of earth to open them spiritually on the scenes of paradise. She leaves a mother, four brothers and many friends to mourn her loss.

L. BALL.

MRS. LAURA M. J. MCCONNELL, wife of N. Julius McConnell, and daughter of Burrel and Algerina Kimbrough, was born in Wilcox county, Ala., September 30, 1843; joined the M. E. Church South September 28, 1857; was married to Bro. McConnell October 17, 1860; and died of pneumonia, at her home near Lower Peachtree, Ala., November 1, 1875, leaving to the care of her now bereaved and stricken husband eight children, most of whom are small, and one only a few days old. She was sick but a few days, and has been cut down in the midst of her days—in the very prime of life. How strange that one whose life seemed so necessary, one upon whom so much depended, should be thus snatched away! By this sad stroke a vacuum has been made in the family circle that can never be filled, and the church and community deprived of one whom none knew but to love. Sister McConnell was a quiet, gentle, modest, unassuming Christian. Her piety was not fitful and spasmodic, but shone with a soft, steady and ever-increasing brilliancy. As a wife she was faithful and devoted; as a mother, kind, indulgent and exceedingly patient; as a friend and neighbor, true, sincere, kind-hearted. I saw and conversed with her on the day of her death. She told me she had no fear of death, and that if it were left to her choice as to whether she should live or die she would have no preference, but would leave it entirely to the Lord. She was conscious to the last, and passed calmly and peacefully away to the rest that remaineth to the people of God.

W. A. MONTGOMERY.

MICHAEL QUINN entered into rest on the twelfth of June, 1875, at his residence near Columbiana, Shelby county, Ala., in the fifty-eighth year of his age. He was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in the year 1846, in which communion he lived and died, having been a useful, active and zealous member.

He was a man of extraordinary force of will, pride of character, decision, firmness, sobriety, courage and fortitude. So, too, was he a man of uncommon generosity, charity, modesty and tenderness of heart. He lived and labored for the church, taking apparently as much interest in its success and prosperity as in that of his own family. Consistency was "a jewel" which he conspicuously wore, and was never known to be double-minded in politics, indifferent to friendships or a backslider in religion.

His religion was a deep-seated principle, moving the man to an observance of: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them." In his community one feels that death or some other blighting visitor has passed through. His place at the communion and financial tables is vacant; it is felt by pastor and flock. He was a very industrious man, and very often overtaxed his physical powers, and no doubt but this hastened him to the chambers of death. May the Lord console and protect the widow and orphans, that they may be brought finally to everlasting life.

JOHN L. FERGUSON.

ELIZABETH L. DENHAM was born in East Baton Rouge parish, La., in 1803; was married to Capt. Harry Kean in 1819, and about this time was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Sister Kean was of a meek and quiet spirit, beloved by all who knew her. Her house and hands were ever anxious to minister to the need and comfort of the weary itinerant, and also to relieve the suffering poor. The children and youth, as well as the strong and aged, all delighted to be with Aunt Betsey, as she was familiarly called, for she had a good word for all. She loved to talk of religion, and of the privations and victories of the early preachers. Doubtless they have joined hands ere this. She was the mother of eight children. Six preceded her to the better land. One daughter, with her family, still remains in the church of her mother's choice. God help her to fill the vacant place. She left also a noble son, the pride of a mother's heart.

After a brief illness of a few days, feeling that her release was at hand, she called her children and friends and bade them farewell, saying: "Weep not for me, but meet me in heaven;" and thus fell on sleep on the twentieth of September, 1875.

J. NICHOLSON.

LITTLE DANIEL W. HENDERSON, youngest son of Daniel and Martha Henderson, was born on the Atchafalaya river, in the parish of Avoyelles, on the twenty-seventh of November, 1863, and died in the parish of St. Helena, La., on the twenty-seventh of September, 1875. Little Dan was noted for his quiet and affectionate disposition, and especially his affection for his widowed mother. He was always ready and willing to help her in any way he was able, was never known to utter a bad word, and would often reprove his elder brother and say: "Are you not ashamed to use such words before mother?" He said, when dying: "Mother, I don't want to go and leave you." So passed away little Dan to the Savior, who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

LEONARD MAGRUDER CAMPBELL, youngest son of the late Rev. Lewell Campbell, of the Mississippi Conference, was born January 2, 1852, and died on Sunday, November 7, 1875, at nine A. M.

Though raised in the very bosom of the church, and having been several times on the very point of joining it, he only attached himself to the Methodist Church and made a profession of religion about two weeks before his death.

His conversations with his mother and visiting friends gave comforting evidence of the genuineness of his faith. Among other things he said: "I have not the slightest ill feeling toward any human being." He was fond of repeating: "Let him that is athirst come." About daylight of the beautiful Sabbath on which he died he uttered his last words: "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit."

C. G. ANDREWS.

DIED, near Evergreen, La., September 23, 1875, Sister C. C. TOWNSEND, aged thirty-six years. She was a daughter of A. A. Boulton, of Mississippi. She leaves a husband and six children to mourn her loss. Though death was a sudden messenger to her and her friends, yet we believe, from her Christian life, that she was ready to go out to meet the bridegroom. Her life, we are told, from the time she professed religion to her death, was that of one of the wise virgins. Her death was calm and peaceful. Though her husband is now a stranger to that grace that gives joy and peace in the Holy Ghost, we hope that his severe affliction will bring him to the love of that Savior that has taken his loved companion to himself, that he and the little ones may follow on, to join in the song of the redeemed.

J. M. JOHNSTON.

WILLIE A., child of Thomas F. and Tabitha M. Owen, was born September 25, 1865, and died in Catahoula parish, November 2, 1875.

It can truthfully be said: Willie was a good child, with warm social and religious impulses. Her patience during severe suffering was very remarkable for a child, not even a murmur escaping her lips. Before dying she called her mother and said: "Ma, I love you so much; and ma, I love everybody; but oh, I do love the Savior more than all." A pleasant smile played upon her countenance, and she passed over the river to join the loved ones gone before.

IT IS THE LORD!

BY GEO. PAULIN.

"It is the Lord! I have waited for him,"
Sung the old martyr bound to the stake;
"Soon in his presence my soul shall adore him, Glory shall soon on my eyeballs break."

"It is the Lord! I have waited for him,"
Faintly whispered the Christian dying;
Low to the weeping friends bending o'er him:
"Soon I shall see him; then cease ye from sighing."

"It is the Lord! we have waited for him,"
Soon shall the raised and the rapt ones sing:
Seraphim, cherubim, ransomed, adore him—
Jesus, Immanuel, Savior and King."

German Farms.

The Germans pleasantly live in villages, called Doerfer. Only on very large farms are the farm buildings on the premises. The farm is then called a "Bauern Hof." The Dorf is a village of farmers. Around the town lie small farms, in fragments of from an eighth of an acre to an acre. These are scattered to the north and south, east and west, of the villages. Rarely does one find a farm of a hundred acres. Then it is a Hof. Indeed a farmer with ten acres is considered well off. And this quantity of land is most likely cut up into private patches of less than an acre, set in among other people's plots, like the parcels of a quilt. Some approach so near the line that they are forbidden to make them any smaller. Fences are unknown here. Not even along the highways are they found. Wood is too scarce, and the smallness of the fields would take too much of it, even if it were abundant. Over narrow footpaths, along the edges of the fields, the farmers reach their grounds. The most of them have to carry their produce out some distance to the wagon roads, and many carry all of it home. Not an inch of ground is wasted. Every little spot is made to tell, to produce something, if it is only a blade of grass. Even along the edge of the footpaths the busy women reapers carefully cut off the few scattered stems of grass.

The cattle are kept and fed in the stable all the year round, save when the herdsman or shepherd takes them to the Dorf Wald or village forest. To let them run at large in a grass-field would be too wasteful. They would tread many a good blade under foot. Besides, who could keep his cattle from running into other people's fields without fences? During the grass-growing time the women daily cut grass with the small German sickles, bind it in great bales larger than themselves, which they bear home on the head. Often they bring the feed a distance of one and two miles. Morning and evening the streets are alive with these women bearing heavy burdens. The men meanwhile are engaged in still heavier work.

Their stock of cattle, like their farms, is small. A few farms with horses, more with oxen, most with cows. In Belgium I saw donkeys struggling along laboriously in carts large enough to carry a dozen animals like themselves. In Holland four and six dogs, hitched to a wagon, dash through the streets with apparent ease, and in some of these German villages I have seen a cow hitched to a truck wagon, galloping along as if she had been specially created for that purpose. My cousin Yost has two large, sleek yellow cows, well fed and groomed, with which he works his ten-acre farm. Besides being good milkers, they perform his work in the plow and wagon as well as horses could do it.

A German Dorf usually contains from one hundred to fifteen hundred people.

How could from one hundred to three hundred American farmers, with their large dwellings, out-buildings, barns and stock of cattle, thus dwell together in unity? The home of a German village, like its farm, is confined to a small space. Usually it is on a square plot of ground. Both the house and the barn stand on the street. Between them is the yard—the barn-yard and the house-yard in one—the whole small. From it man and beast enter their respective abodes. The house and barn front and open on one and the same yard, not on the street. You seldom find a street entrance to the house. It is reached by passing through a front gateway into the yard. The village is built compactly. Few houses have two stories. Man and beast dwell in closer proximity than with us. They work harder, and get more out of an acre than American farmers. Many a German farmer raises more from ten acres than an American from fifty.

Every village has a forest, where the villagers get their fuel. The Förster assigns each his share of fuel. The forest is also the village pasture-ground.

Every village has its geese-herd, swine-herd and shepherd. Every morning these respective functionaries blow their horns along the street, when geese, swine and sheep come running out of every gateway and alley, each to join its kind, to be led on a common village pasture. Long lines of gabbling geese run through narrow, fenceless footpaths, without daring to touch a single blade not their own. The shepherds sometimes remain on the neighboring hills for whole weeks. At night they commit their flocks to their dogs. These animals, not very unlike sheep in color and hair, possess a remarkable intelligence and faithfulness. I have seen the shepherd walking carelessly ahead of his flock, while the dogs would run guard on each side. The hungry sheep were tempted to browse among the rank wayside grass, while the faithful dog would check the slightest attempt at depredation. Landed property is pretty equally distributed. With rare exceptions the poorest have a few patches upon which to raise their bread, and the richest have seldom more than twenty acres. In this valley good arable land sells at from five to eight hundred guilders an acre—just the bare land, for dwellings are distinct property altogether.—The Guardian.

Papyrus Ebers.

An Egyptian medical treatise, written in the sixteenth century B. C., and consequently more than 3,400 years old, was discovered by the archæologist, Ebers, during his visit to Egypt in 1872. He bought it from an Arab who brought to him for sale a wooden image of Osiris, and a papyrus of no especial value. "Suspecting that the Arab was holding in reserve objects of greater interest, Ebers offered him a considerable sum for any superior specimens in his possession. This induced the Arab to return on the following day, bringing with him a metallic case containing a papyrus roll enveloped in mummy cloths. Ebers immediately perceived he had a prize, but was unable to command the large sum of money demanded for it until provided with the means through the liberality of a German gentleman, Max Gunther, traveling in that vicinity. According to the Arab's account, the papyrus had been discovered fourteen years previously, by a man since dead, between the bones of a mummy in a tomb of the Theban Necropolis."

The papyrus consisted of a single, solidly-rolled sheet of yellow-brown papyrus of the finest quality (the inner bark of cyperus papyrus,) clearly and regularly written, partly with black and partly with red ink, the latter appearing at the heads of sections, and in the expression of weights and measures.

"The characters are a form of hieroglyphic writing known as the Hieratic, which was the written language of ancient Egyptian priests, while hieroglyphics were the written language of the people. The age of the manuscript, it is said, was determined by three points: 1. Paleographic studies of the form of the written characters. 2. Occurrences of names of kings. 3. Examination of a calendar which occurs on the back of the first page. These data enable Ebers to assign the writing to the middle of the sixteenth century, or, more precisely, 1552 B. C., and before the exodus of the Israelites.

"The authorship is not known, but internal evidence assigns it to the Egyptian priests, also physicians. It contains numerous prescriptions, some of which are copied from still more ancient works, written out with careful directions for administering. The headings of some selected chapters are as follows:

1. Of the preparation of medicines.
25. Of salves for removing the uhan.
47. Catalogue of the various uses of the Tequem-tree.
48. Medicines for alleviating the accumulation of urine and diseases of the abdomen.
55. The book of the eyes.
65. Medicaments for preventing the hair turning gray, and for the treatment of the hair.
66. Medicines for forcing the growth of the hair.
79. Salves for strengthening the nerves, and medicines for healing the nerves.
85. Medicines for curing diseases of the tongue.
89. Medicines for the removal of lice and fleas.
91. Medicines for ears hard of hearing.
99. The Secret Book of the Physician. The science of the beating of the heart, and the knowledge of the heart, as taught by a priestly physician, Nebsecht.

"The wonderful book Ebers has reproduced in fac simile, with a synopsis of the contents of the entire books, and a literal translation of the first two pages of the roll. A fuller translation, with commentary, will be published in the future. A copy of this rare and costly work has come into possession of the Astor Library, by the generosity of Mr. William B. Astor. The librarian says of it: "It is hardly possible to exaggerate the literary, scientific and historical importance of this remarkable document. It is the largest, best preserved and most legible text in the language of hieroglyphics, and does not speak vaguely of incomprehensible and fantastic ideas, but furnishes indubitable insight into different phases of the life of the ancient Egyptians."—Baptist Union.

The Wine Remedy.

Dr. Holland, editor of the Scribner, wrote the following when in Switzerland:

A large amount of land in this Canton of Vaud is surrendered to the cultivation of the grape; and, as the wine of Switzerland is never heard of out of Switzerland, it is plain that it is all drank here. Indeed I have been assured that the wine produced in this canton is drank mainly in the canton itself. Now, from near Villevenue to Morgee, a distance of twenty-five miles, as I guess, somewhat at random, the entire lake-side, averaging half a mile in width, is a vineyard. One can say almost with literal truth that throughout the entire territory I described to you no crop is grown but grapes. For the last three weeks the whole working population, men and women, have been in these vineyards gathering the crop. The teams are employed in transporting the immensely large casks of new wine from the presses to the cellars of their owners, to the vaults of the dealers who have purchased it, and to the railroad depot for transportation to the storehouses of speculators in other quarters. There is an endeavor on the part of these people to throw a romantic interest around their vintage. The casks go through the streets with gay bouquets of flowers in their bunholes; but, from what I have seen of the effect of wine here, the show is all a sorry farce. There is no question that the people would be better, healthier, happier and much more prosperous if there were not a vineyard in the canton. We have all been told in America, and I fully believed it, that if a people could be supplied with a cheap wine they would not get drunk—that the natural desire for some sort of stimulant would be gratified in a way that would be not only harmless to morals, but conducive to health. I am thoroughly undeceived. The people drink their cheap white wine here to drunkenness. A boozier set than haug around the multitudinous cafes here it would be hard to find in any American city. The grand difference in the drunkenness of an American and Swiss city is found in the fact that the man who has wine in him is good-natured, and the man who is equally charged with whisky is a demon. There is no murdering, no fighting, no wrangling. The excitement is worked off in singing, shouting, and all sorts of insane jabber. Then the steady old white wine topers come into blossom. If you can imagine a cauliflower of the color of the ordinary red cabbage you can achieve a very adequate conception of faces that are not uncommon in all this wine-growing region. So this question is settled in my mind. Cheap wine is not the cure of intemperance. The people here are just as intemperate as they are in America, and, what is more, there is no public sentiment that checks intemperance in the least. The wine is fed freely to children, and by all classes is regarded as a perfectly legitimate drink. I, with many others, have looked with hope to find a remedy for intemperance in a cheap and comparatively harmless wine; but, for one, I can look in this direction hopefully no longer. I firmly believe that the wines of Switzerland are of no use except to keep out whisky, and that the advantages of the wine over the whisky are not very obvious. It is the testimony of the best men in Switzerland—these who have the highest good of the people at heart—that the increased growth of the grape has been steadily and correspondingly attended by the growth of drunkenness. They lament the planting of a new vineyard as we ent home regret the opening of a new grog shop. They expect no good of it to anybody. They know and deeply feel that the whole wine-producing enterprise is charged with degradation for their country.

TELL-TALE LIPS.—I have observed that lips become more or less contracted in the course of years in proportion as they are accustomed to express good humor and generosity, or peevishness and a contracted mind. Remark the effect which a moment of ill temper and grudginguess has upon the lips, and judge what may be expected from an habitual series of such movements. Remark the reverse and make a similar judgment. The mouth is the frankest part of the face; it can't in the least conceal its sensations. We can neither hide ill temper with it, nor good; we may affect what we please, but affectation will not help us. In a wrong cause it will only make our observers resent the endeavor to impose on them. The mouth is the seat of one class of emotions, as the eyes are of another; or, rather, it expresses the same emotions, but in greater detail, and with a more irrepressible tendency to be in motion. It is the region of smiles and dimples, and of trembling tenderness, of a sharp sorrow, or a full-breathing joy, of candor, of reserve, of anxious care or liberal sympathy. The mouth, out of its many sensibilities, may be fancied throwing up one great expression into the eye—as many lights in a city reflect a broad luster into the heavens.—Leigh Hunt.

COLOR OF THE RED SEA.—In a communication to the Bombay Geographical Society a writer confirms the opinion hitherto expressed by scientific observers that the color of the Red sea is due to large portions being covered with patches, from a few yards to some miles square, composed of microscopic vegetables or animalculæ, particularly abundant in spring, and which dye the water an intense blood red; when not affected, however, by these organic beings, the deep waters are intensely blue, and the shoal waters shades of green. Contrary to the usual belief, the water of this sea is not remarkably salt, the saline matter being only about forty-one grains in one thousand. The evaporation is equal to eight feet annually, while not more than one inch of rain, or rain water, is added in the same time, for, although there are heavy rains on the shore, they are sucked up by the parched sand. The result of such enormous evaporation is, according to this author, to produce a constant descent of heavy salt water to the bottom of the sea, and when this heavy fluid rises to the level of the Mocha barrier it falls over in an outward current, and is replaced by an upper inflowing current—in this manner the whole of the water being changed once a year.

FLOATING.—Men are drowned by raising their arms above water, the unbuoyed weight of which depresses the head. Other animals have neither motion nor ability to act in a similar manner, and therefore swim naturally. When a man falls into deep water he will rise to the surface, and will continue there if he does not elevate his hands. If he moves his hands under water, in any way he pleases, his head will rise so high as to give him free liberty to breathe; and if he will use his legs, as in the act of walking (or rather walking up stairs,) his shoulders will rise above the water, so that he may use the less exertion with his hands, or apply them to other purposes. These plain directions are recommended to the recollection of those who have not learned to swim in their youth, as they may be found highly advantageous in many cases.—The Sanitarian.

THE great ocean is in a constant state of evaporation. It gives back what it receives, and sends its waters into mists, to gather into clouds, and so there is rain in the fields, and storm on the mountain, and beauty everywhere. But there are men who do not believe in evaporation. They get all they can and keep all they get, and so are not fertilizers, but only miasmatic pools.

—Rev. Ephraim Therun, recently a Catholic priest, has joined the Protestant Episcopal Church in Indiana as a deacon, his ordination being recognized.

—Copies of the medal struck by Pope Gregory the Thirteenth, in honor of the St. Bartholomew massacre, recently produced in England, leave no doubt of the attitude of the Roman Church about that horrible slaughter.

—The Rev. Thomas M. Westrup reports that a Mexican Baptist Mission Society has been organized at Monterey. It has sixty members, and held its first anniversary September 21. It wants money, and hopes soon to employ one missionary. Mr. Westrup is the missionary whom Miss Rankin accuses of having stolen some of her converts.

—The national association in behalf of the proposed religious amendment to the constitution of the United States, at its annual meeting, November 9, took steps to secure articles of incorporation under the name of the National Reform Association. The maintenance of Sabbath laws, the retention of the Bible in the common schools, the defense of the judicial oath and other Christian features of the government, and the securing of suitable religious acknowledgments in all new State constitutions, were expressly recognized as among the objects of the society.

—The Australasian Methodist Conference, through whom the Wesleyan missions in the South Sea Islands are carried on, is efficiently exploring portions of the Southern Archipelago, which are but little known to the civilized world, and where the gospel has never been preached. They have recently determined to establish a mission in an extensive group of islands, situated between the equator and the seventh degree of south latitude, and the western coast of New Guinea and the one hundred and sixty-fourth degree of east longitude. The islands are composed of the Admiralty Group, New Hanover, New Ireland, Duke of York Island and New Britain. The islands are inhabited by people of the Papuan and Malay races, who are accused of cannibalism and cruelty. They are probably in a state similar to that of the Fijians forty years ago. The population is large, so that the missionaries will have a populous, extensive and compact field of labor.

—The liberty of instruction in France turns out to be a liberty for Catholics, and not for Protestants. When Strasburg was taken the French Protestants in the faculty of the Strasburg University refused to accept service under the Prussian government and were driven out of the country. Some of them went to Paris, where they founded a "Free School of Religious Science," with Pressense at its head. This school now wishes to call itself the free faculty of theology; and lo! all kinds of difficulties arise. The law reads: "The higher instruction shall be free;" and theology is included in the higher instruction. The faculties of law, medicine, letters and science are all admitted to be free; but, without a shadow of warrant, either in the law or in fairness, the minister of public instruction suddenly appears with objection after objection, but the chief one appears to be that the proposed faculty is Protestant. At all events, the Bishops of Poitiers, d'Angers and Rheims announce the creation of Catholic faculties of theology, and no objections are made. The case is to be brought before the Assembly.—Independent.

—The Interior says: "We are glad to chronicle the inception of a Presbyterian university for the Northwest. For months and years there have been talk and planning for a school of the first grade at Lake Forest. A young ladies' seminary and a boys' academy have for some time been successfully at work in that flourishing and beautiful suburb. They were the first steps. The second is now announced. On the twenty-second of this month the collegiate department of Lake Forest University will open. It is announced as probable that Dr. R. W. Patterson will accept the presidency, to which he has been called. This, we suppose, will not interfere with the discharge of his duties in connection with our seminary. The Rev. J. H. Taylor has the chair of English language and literature, and Prof. J. H. Hewitt the professorship of ancient languages. We trust this is the beginning of the school we have so long needed. No lovelier spot could be selected. The management is in able hands. We look with large hope to its future. Hail to our Presbyterian university!"

—A Hong Kong paper contains the following item: "A Japanese priest has presented a memorial to the vice minister of the Department of Public Worship, stating that many Japanese have deserted the faith of their ancestors and adopted the tenets of Christianity, and inquiring whether he is permitted to oppose the spread of the foreign faith. His objections to this latter are that it 'inculcates neither respect to the sovereign nor the honor due to parents, and, as it involves laxity in the discharge of these civil and domestic duties, must prove injurious.' The vice minister's reply is: 'Memorial approved and permitted. But, excepting religion, nothing must be done to diminish the good understanding which exists between foreigners and the people of this country.' It is somewhat distressing to find that even at this time of day the Japanese government indorses a statement that the Christian religion 'inculcates neither respect to the sovereign nor the honor due to parents;' and the vice president of public worship would have done better had he directed the applicant to make himself better acquainted with the truth of Christianity before petitioning to be allowed to oppose its spread."

Our Young People.

IT NEVER PAYS.

It never pays to fret and grow!
When fortune seems our foe;
The better bred will look ahead,
And strike the braver blow;
For luck is work,
And those who shirk
Should not lament their doom,
But yield the play,
And clear the way,
That better men have room.

It never pays to wreck the health
In dredging after gain;
And he is sold who thinks that gold
Is cheapest bought with pain.
An humble lot,
A cozy cot,
Have tempted even kings;
For stations high,
That wealth will buy,
Not oft contentment brings.

It never pays!—a blunt refrain,
Well worthy of a song;
For age and youth must learn the truth,
That nothing pays that's wrong.
The good and pure
Alone are sure
To share prolonged success;
While what is right
In Heaven's sight
Is always sure to bless.

Where They Come From.

You'll be shocked (?) I fear, when I tell you that your doll came out of a rag-bag, the curls from the back of a goat, and her elegant China tea set out of a mud-hole.

But what will you say when I tell you that your jelly is made out of old boots, and your delightful perfumery from horrid-smelling coal-tar.

You don't know all the made-over things in the family either. Johnny's new beaver cloth overcoat was worn out on the back of a beggar, and perhaps even played the part of a scare-crow in some farm-yard before it went into the rag-bag and began to come up in the world again, and the "table gelatine," which every one of the family likes to eat, once did duty as skin on the back of a rat.

It is really wonderful to trace things back and see where they come from, and who has reason to boast of his ancestors. Queer stories you would hear if the things around you could tell their history. There's your tatting shuttle. It once made itself useful as a bone in a horse, while the ivory dice in the backgammon board adorned the jaws and crushed the oats of another of the race. The pearl of your paper knife lined the shell-house of a modest little creature at the bottom of the sea, while mamma's shell-comb was the comfortable roof over a tortoise.

Your guitar strings were indispensable to the internal comfort of some poor pussy or unfortunate sheep, and your piano would be but a dumb wooden box without some internal arrangements of a horse.

Your nice hair-brush first saw the light on the skin of a hog, and its pretty back of papier mache came out of the rag man's bag. The crinoline that stiffens the bottom of the ladies' dresses was used originally to switch the flies from the back of a horse, and the mattress on which you sleep so comfortably served the same use before it fell into the manufacturer's hands.

Your dainty toilet soap—dear me, how can I tell you!—was made of dead cats and dogs found in the streets, and the "bitter almonds," which so delightfully flavors your candy, came from the horrible-smelling coal-tar, while the choicest ale is deliciously flavored with putrid cheese.

The scent-bag of that offensive creature, the skunk, furnishes some desirable additions to the toilet table used for removing freckles and tan, and the dreadful stuff left in drains is changed into a fashionable toilet article, and adorns the face of ladies.

To be sure these disagreeable materials have some pretty rough handling before they come out in the new colors. The old boots, for instance—they do not step from the gutter into the jelly kettles by any means. They go through a long process of washing and soaking in lye, and smoking with sulphur, and steaming and boiling before they come out white and delicate, and fit for the table.

The coal-tar, to grow into perfumery, goes through the hands of chemists, who treat it so I don't know what dreadful chemical process; and the dead cats and dogs are boiled to extract the grease, purified, whitened and perfumed before we see them as soap.

The old, whose ancestors inhabited a rag man's den, endured unheard-of operations—washing, soaking, bleaching, chopping, molding, etc.—before she took her place in the nursery to amuse the little folks, and the clay from the mud-hole was washed and purified and whitened and kneaded and baked and glazed before it ventured to call itself China, and take its place on the tea table.

The horse tails that stiffen the dresses and stuff our mattresses are washed and soaked and boiled and baked before we use them, and the intestines, which make the voice of guitar and piano, went through a long process of scraping, soaking in lye and washing before they were drawn out into the fine, tough strings you are familiar with.

The rat skin, which we eat under the name of gelatine, first flourished as the thumb of a kid glove, and after being worn out in that capacity went through over so many purifying processes, somewhat as the old boots did, and ended on our table.

Nearly all the things that we throw away in the alleys, or even through our drains—the most disgusting thing that you can think of—are valuable, and after going through the hands of skillful workmen come out in new shapes, and have new fields of usefulness.

The feats of the old-fashioned fairies, who turned pumpkins into elegant robes, do not compare with the wonders performed in our workshops by rough-looking men in shirt sleeves and white aprons.—Olive Logan.

Maggie's Troubles.

The first real spring day had come, and Maggie felt as happy as a bird. Everybody was unusually pleasant at breakfast, as everybody is apt to be on the first clear morning after several days of rain. The older folks went to drive, leaving Maggie and her cousin in the back parlor, each busy in her own way. The sound of a carriage made them run to the window in time to see two ladies on the step.

"Oh, dear! dear! Mrs. Delaney and her daughter are at the door," exclaimed Maggie, putting the chairs straight, and pushing her scraps into the closet.

"There, all is in beautiful order," she cried.

"Except that closet," said her cousin, as out tumbled a work-basket, story-book, pair of stockings, and even an old calico apron.

"Nobody will see them," said Maggie, pushing them in pell-mell and turning the key. By this time the ladies were in the room. After a short chat Mrs. Delaney spoke of wishing to see an old family portrait that hung in Maggie's room. Maggie's heart beat quick at this, for she remembered that in her haste to get to a pleasant piece of work she had left her room in disorder. She excused Emily and herself a moment, so that the two ran up stairs to arrange things. Maggie threw her clothes into her wardrobe, big trunk, and under her bed, till really there was no telling where anything could be found when wanted.

"There!" she cried, looking pleased, "we have done wonders; Mrs. Delaney will see all neat." Emily said nothing, only pitied Maggie because she would have such a hard time to find her things.

"Your room is in perfect order," said Mrs. Delaney approvingly. Maggie looked pleased; but Emily thought: "What would she think if she could look into those closets?" When the visit was over Maggie couldn't find her patches.

"You put them in that closet," said Emily. After some trouble Maggie found them, but they were covered with ink. She remembered that she had left the ink in the closet, instead of returning it to its place on the study table. That was the end of the patch! Next she couldn't tell where she had put her worsted work; well, she would finish a certain story-book; but no, it couldn't be found. Finally she asked Emily to take a walk. Now the trouble was to get her hat and shawl out of the confused mass. The hat was ruined, and the shawl too much tumbled to wear that day.—Child's World.

Pull it Up by the Root.

"Father, here is a dock," said Thomas, as he was at work with his father in the garden; "shall I cut it off close to the root?"

"That will not do," replied his father; "I have cut it off many times, but it grows again stronger than ever. Pull it up by the root; nothing else will kill it."

Thomas pulled at the dock, but the root was very deep in the ground, and he could not stir it from its place, so he asked his father to come and help him; and his father went and soon pulled it up.

"This dock root, Thomas," said his father, "which is a fast-growing weed in a garden, puts me in mind of the evil things that grow so fast in the hearts of children. A bad passion is hard to be removed. It is of no use to trifle with it; there is no way to overcome and destroy it but to pull it up by the root.

"You have often seen in our garden, Thomas, that when the weeds are allowed to grow they spoil all the plants and flowers that grow near them. So it is with evil passions in the heart of a child. If a little boy is ill-tempered we must not expect to find in him good humor, cheerfulness, thankfulness, and a desire to make others happy. And a little girl who is idle we need not expect to be industrious, neat or careful. As weeds injure the flowers, so bad passions injure good qualities. If a child is undutiful to its parents, and despises the commandments of God, we might as well seek for a rose or a tulip in a bed of nettles as hope to find in its heart those graces and good desires that we love to see growing there.

"Now this is quite a sufficient reason why all bad passions should be pulled up by the root. Every bad habit, every evil passion which troubles you, you should try with all your might to overcome it; you should, if possible, tear it up. But you will find your own strength no better than weakness, and you must apply to that almighty Friend who alone is able to help you. He can take from your heart the love of sin, and this is the only way of destroying it; just as we have destroyed the dock, by pulling it up by the root."

THE KANGAROO.—That a kangaroo should be able to traverse the branches of a tree is so extraordinary a fact that many people refused to believe its possibility until positive proof was given of the animal by a living specimen at the Zoological Gardens. Its cage was fitted with a large tree branch, such as is supplied to the leopards, and it was a very curious sight to watch the animal skipping about the boughs as lightly and securely as if it had been a squirrel. It retained many of the habits of its wild state, notably that of sitting motionless for long periods as if asleep, but, when roused to action, leaping about with astonishing quickness. I imagine that these habits tend to its preservation. The dark-brown color of its fur bears so close a resemblance to the hue of the branches that, even when the animal is in a cage, and the observer knows where to look, he will not at once discriminate between the tree and the animal. Its habit of stillness will, therefore, account for its preservation from the eyes of enemies, while its exceeding quickness and agility when in motion will enable it to escape from almost any foe except man.—"Trespassers," by the Rev. J. G. Wood.

Complaints Against the Sunday School.

These break out afresh every few months in some of our religious exchangee. The main charge le that the schoole are eo managed as to lead the children to neglect the regular worehip and preaching. There is some complaint of this in our borders, though not a great deal that we are aware of. The schools with which we are personally acquainted make a considerable part of the congregation. The emaller children may go home, and some others, but the most remain. The abuse, however, which excites so much remark in other sections doubtless exists to a serious degree, and it is well to call the attention of pastors and Sunday school workers to the fact. Zion's Herald, referring to the subject, says:

From far and near, from east to west, we hear a cry of lamentation over the absence of our Sunday scholars from the house of the Lord. Go where you will, you find few children in the "great congregation." A painful feature of this fact is that they do not wish to be present. Many of them indeed seem to dislike it. And this aversion grows with their growth, so that when they quit the Sunday school, as in spite of all influence to the contrary multitudes do shortly after entering their teens, they go out into the world without any very strongly-developed sense of obligation to become habitual "hearers of the word." As the venerable Bishop Peck lately observed when addressing a company of Sunday school workers: "There is reason to fear that we are rearing in our Sunday schools a generation of church neglecters."

This is not a pleasant fact to contemplate, and for that reason some enthusiastic Sunday school workers refuse to look it in the face. They prefer to sing pæans over the ascertained successes of our Sunday schools, and to press on in voluntary blindness with respect to their failures. Such persons remind one of the Grecian fable which represents a countryman as saying to the shellfish he was roasting on the hot coals: "O foolish creatures! Ye yourselves are singing while your houses are burning."

This is a very grave charge: "that we are rearing in our Sunday schools a generation of church neglecters." If this be so it would be well either to disband the schools altogether or to reform the methods which produce such disastrous results.

For one thing we suspect that "Christ and him crucified" is not sufficiently the burden of the teaching. The lessons chosen are often very poor and of little practical moment, as we think a reference to the International Series will show. These International and other series have largely abolished the catechism, and have led to the exclusion of denominational text-books and instruction. The songs of our schools are often trashy, some of them filled with false doctrines and unhealthy sentiment, and not a few of them utterly without either literary or religious merit. The libraries need sifting. In the Northern Sunday schools, as we have been informed, in former days had Uncle Tom's Cabin, and works of like character, on their shelves. There are few large schools anywhere that have not in their libraries novels, tales, adventures and exciting works of fiction. Where they claim to be on the devout order the religion in them is as a grain of wheat to a bushel of chaff. Such books in a Sunday school cover may, of course, be read on Sunday, and the average boy or girl will choose to go home and read them rather than listen to a sermon.

Writing of Sunday school ultraism, the Western Christian Advocate says:

We were somewhat surprised the other day to see it stated in the report of a district Sunday school convention that one of our pastors attempted to prove, in an essay, "that the Sunday school had as good a claim for divine authority as any other religious service." The essayist intended to place Sunday school teaching as a divinely authorized means of grace upon an equal footing with the preaching of the gospel. The convention, we regret to add, indorsed this view when it resolved unanimously that one preaching service, one Bible service (a new-fangled name for Sunday school teaching,) and a prayer meeting, "is the best possible use of the Sabbath time."

From these and similar utterances made of late in various places we fear that the Sunday school is in danger of being wounded in the house of its friends. For nearly a century it has wrought a blessed work among the children. The church has generally recognized and supported it as a valuable auxiliary to the pulpit. She has even gloried in it as a precious nursery in which to prepare young souls to be acted upon by that public preaching of the word which is the divinely appointed method of saving the world. Standing in this subordinate relation to the pulpit, its career has been one of quiet success. Now and then some over-enthusiastic brother has tried to exalt it above measure by claiming for it all its apparent fruitage, overlooking the obvious fact that multitudes of converted Sunday scholars are not Sunday school converts. The Christian home, the pulpit and the prayer meeting have doubtless chiefly contributed to countless conversions which have been credited exclusively to the school by its too enthusiastic friends. This vain-glorying over the institution did little harm, because the common sense of the church readily recognized the real facts of the case, and felt that it could afford to dismiss such well-meant boasting with a good-humored smile.

But the assumptions referred to above have a more serious import. They indicate the rise of a class of ultraists who aim at a radical change in the relations of the Sunday school to the pulpit. Instead of regarding the institution as a wise human device for bringing children under the influence of the preached gospel, they would exalt it into a thing of divine appointment. Consistently carrying out this heresy, they demand for it the same proportion of Sabbath time as they are pleased to allow to the preaching of the gospel. That these views are revolutionary every one can see. That they are false and dangerous we conscientiously believe.

All of which ultraism, or the most of it, grows out of the separation of the school from the church. The Sunday school is often an independent society, electing its own officers and managing its own affairs. The pastor has no recognized authority over it, and the church exercises no direct control. We have done something toward removing this evil by making the office of superintendent elective by the Quarterly Conference on the nomination of the pastor, and by placing this work under the supervision and management of the Quarterly Conference. In its right place, and kept to its proper work, the Sunday school is of inestimable value, but when it becomes independent of the church—imperium in imperio—and is so managed as to interfere with other services, then we have confusion and trouble. Meddling, fanatical, restless and ambitious spirits may be the instruments of much mischief when let loose in a field where the restraining influences of church authority are either withdrawn or but feebly asserted.

The Sunday school is doing its most important work among the poor and neglected. The children of the church, with home training, pastoral oversight and regular preaching, have that which is far better than the Sunday school, although the institution is helpful and profitable to them. It is no substitute for family and parental training, nor for the preaching of the gospel, and, if permitted to interfere with these, it is evil rather than good. As an auxiliary it is worthy of all support, but if it comes in as a competitor or antagonist its mission is utterly perverted. The Sunday school has been instrumental, in connection with other agencies, in saving many souls. But they need not take all the credit. Most of the members of our churches have been children in the Sunday school, and the same may be said of a large class of people not in the church.

There is among us but little if any Sunday school ultraism. Our study should be to avoid the abuses which have sprung up elsewhere, and to increase and intensify their spiritual power. Make the school more decidedly and immediately soul-saving. Let it be directly and vitally connected with the preaching and the prayer meeting, and let superintendents and teachers use their position and influence to build up the congregation. The Sunday school is not an end in itself, but a means of bringing the young into the church of Christ.

HAVE the courage to act. Inertness has been the death of many a noble purpose.

Alabama Conference.

The forty-third session of the Alabama Conference opened in Greenville, Ala., on Wednesday, the eighth of December. Bishop Marvin called the Conference to order at the usual hour (nine o'clock,) and opened it with reading the Scriptures, singing and prayer. R. B. Crawford, the long-time efficient secretary, was re-elected, James M. Mason was elected assistant, and G. W. Briggs statistical secretary. The roll-call showed a pretty full attendance of clerical and lay members.

The names of E. V. LeVert, Jefferson Hamilton, W. C. Robinson, R. F. Perdue and J. Scaife were called for the last time. These are the dead of 1875.

The venerable Zacchens Dowling, probably the oldest man in the Conference, was present and in health. His more than fourscore years have dealt gently with him. He is now in his eighty-third year; has been a traveling preacher since 1816. Fifty-nine years is a good long term of service. Bro. Dowling is on the superannuated list, but preaches often and with unabated zeal.

The following were received on trial: Gilbert M. Roper, James B. Anderson, Joseph C. Johnson, Bascom C. Glenn, Walter P. Dickinson, Orion S. Perry, John W. Clark, Howell M. Moss, John R. Peavey, W. H. Hasty. Admitted into full connection: Ranson A. Mears, Preston G. Nash, Leander C. Calhoun, G. Waverly Briggs, William A. Rice, John A. Glenn, Thomas Y. Abernathy, Joshua S. Peavey.

The following statistics were obtained on Saturday, and may need revision: Assessed for widows, orphans and superannuated preachers, $6,500; collected, $4,279.70; deficiency, $2,220.30. Missionary assessment, $6,900; collected, $5,688.37. Collected for Bishops' fund, $1,193.20. Members, 26,040; adult baptisms, 1,326; infant baptisms, 854; number of Sunday schools, 307.

The collection at the missionary anniversary on Saturday night amounted to $250, $100 of which was given for our mission in Brazil. The speeches were by Bishop Marvin and Dr. Summers. The audience was large, and none left until the end. We hoped for a larger contribution, but they have had hard times in Alabama as well as elsewhere. The collections for missions in the Conference are considerably in advance of last year, rather more than half, however, for the domestic or home work. The support of the preachers has also been better than last year, though we heard of instances of hardship. Dr. Ellison reported, as the worst case on his district, that he found one preacher's family with only a peck of meal and a few pounds of bacon in the house. There have been revivals and many conversions in almost every part of the Conference. The preachers were, most of them, well dressed, in new store clothes generally, and looking healthy and cheerful. Rev. J. W. Shores, who met with a severe maiming some months ago, was at Conference with a crutch, and will soon be restored to his wonted health and efficiency.

Among the school men present were Dr. Smith, president of the Southern University; Dr. Summers, of the Conference and the Vanderbilt, genial, summery and helpful in affairs; President McVoy, of Summerfield; President Dyer, of Greenville Collegiate Institute, and President H. D. Moore, of the Alabama Female College at Tuskegee. President Moore terminates his connection with the college at this Conference, and returns to the pastoral work. This will be a loss to the educational force of the Conference, but a great gain to the pastorate. President Moore is an admirable preacher, and we have never heard him preach without feeling that he should be altogether devoted to the ministry. The institute at Greenville is flourishing. The literary, art and music departments are kept up efficiently by a competent corps of teachers. There are over 130 pupils in attendance. The prospects of the Southern University are brightening, and President Smith has entered upon his responsible work with good hope of bringing this noble institution up to its former prosperity.

On Sunday there were services in the Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian churches. Good attendance and good preaching at all. We heard Bishop Marvin at the Methodist church in the morning—one of his best. Dr. Summers discoursed at the same place in the afternoon, and President Smith at night, to the edification of their hearers. Seventeen deacons were ordained at the morning service; the number of elders ordained in the afternoon we did not learn.

President Dyer and his accomplished wife dispensed a bountiful hospitality at their very delightful home, and the editor was fortunate enough to be one of their guests. May a good Providence be over them and theirs alway. Greenville is a very pleasant town, indeed, of three thousand souls, a place of hills and valleys, of pleasant-looking homes, and inhabited by a refined and generous people. The Conference was well entertained. The Methodist church—the steeple excepted—does honor to our people there. It is a spacious brick edifice of handsome exterior, has a seating capacity for about five hundred, and is tastefully and elaborately frescoed. We are under special obligations to Mr. J. D. Porter, editor and proprietor of the South Alabamian, for appreciated favors and courtesies. Our attendance at the Conference terminated on Sunday night. The appointments and other matters will appear next week. It was expected that adjournment would be reached by Tuesday night.

North Georgia Conference.

MR. EDITOR: Nine years ago, at Americus, the old Georgia Conference became "two bands." Your correspondent was then in the minority, voting against division. But he has long ago acknowledged his mistake—the result vindicates the wisdom of the majority. The Conference then included all of Georgia except a tier of southern counties, then embraced in the Florida Conference. We then numbered 212 traveling preachers in full connection, 51,463 white and 14,993 colored members. Most of these last have gone into the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America. Now the North Georgia Conference (Minutes of 1874) numbers 51,463 white members; the South Georgia 28,147. This year's increase will swell the membership of the North Georgia Conference to about 53,500. There has also been great prosperity in spiritual things in the South Georgia Conference.

We have nine districts in our Conference, and our diocesan Bishops—the presiding elders—are among our best men. One of them, the Rev. D. J. Myrick, of the Dalton district, told me this morning that there had been during the year eleven hundred conversions on his district. Just as this sentence was written the Rev. R. W. Bigham, presiding elder of the Augusta district, says: "We have received this year about nine hundred new members." Several have done just as well. So we may run up to 54,000. We ought to be thankful, and we are. God has blessed us, and we praise him. It has been a hard year financially with our preachers, but they have labored so hard and with such devotion that their success in winning souls has brought them large compensation for the "hardness" that they have "endured as good soldiers." We have had a year of great peace and brotherly love—which is fraternity.

For two years now none of us have died. Instead of a memorial we should hold a thanksgiving service.

We should not glory in our numbers; we wish to avoid the sin of a vain-glorious "numbering of the people." But we should be grateful and we should realize our responsibilities. When Oglethorpe was Governor of the province of Georgia, over 130 years ago, there were no Methodists, but 1,000 members of the Church of England. Now there are nearly 90,000 Methodists, and not quite 5,000 Episcopalians. And yet a certain comely, well-dressed and cultivated gentleman signs his name "Bishop of Georgia." Outside of a few larger towns, and our three or four cities, Protestantism in Georgia, so far as the working power of the church in the State is concerned, is virtually divided between the Baptists and the Methodists. In our State our "Hard-Shell" Baptists have about "played out." But the Missionary Baptists are alive and at work. With us this is a grand church. In some directions the Baptists are outworking us. May they do better, and may we go beyond them! Counting all sorts of Baptists in Georgia, there must be 125,000. Counting all sorts of Methodists—regular and irregular, colored Methodists and Northern Methodists—we are fully as strong. For one, your correspondent is greatly concerned to see more fraternity between these two great churches, working side by side for the evangelization of Georgia.

The Rev. R. J. Corley gave us, in the Southern Christian Advocate of December 1, the following comparative tables of Baptist and Methodist statistics, taken from official sources, for 1874:

White and colored members belonging to Georgia Baptist State Convention	64,621
White and colored members not connected with Georgia Baptist Convention	17,389
Hard-Shell Baptists	13,624
Colored Baptists	54,623
Total Baptists	150,256
Methodist Episcopal Church South (North and South Georgia Conferences)	79,610
Methodist Episcopal Church (North)	16,180
African Methodist Episcopal Church	40,153
Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America	13,572
Protestant Methodists, about	25,000
Total Methodists in Georgia	152,015

Very great are the responsibilities of these two churches. May they be equal to their obligations—"attempting great things for God," and "expecting great things from God!"

Bishop Keener is with us. This is his first visit. We are all truly glad to see him. He began his work by preaching three times in Atlanta last Sunday. In the afternoon he dedicated a church for us—the sixth in Atlanta. He preached once too often on Sunday, and was unwell next day. We should not make our Bishops preach three times on one day. They have much to do besides preaching. We have heard Bishops make flat failures because they were tired down. Bishop Keener did not fail on Sunday, but he was tired down next day. It is not good economy to "light a candle at both ends and place a red-hot poker in the middle," as Dr. Clarke says, or "words to that effect."

Bishop Keener made a short and very appropriate address at the opening of the Conference this morning. He made a fine impression on the Conference. One remark struck us forcibly. He was contrasting our success as a church with our financial and other difficulties since the war. He added this remark: "Indeed we do not know what are the most favorable conditions for best advancing the kingdom of Christ." This is true, and it is important; for if God sees that we can do most when poor and distressed, we should not complain. More anon. H.

GRIFFIN, GA., Dec. 1, 1875.

How to Treat Your Pastor.

The Baptist, of Memphis, Tenn., contains an excellent address by Dr. Hatcher, delivered on the occasion of his retirement from the pastorate of the First Baptist church of Petersburg, Va. We quote as follows:

1. Encourage him. When transferring the leadership of Israel from himself to Joshua, Moses said to the people: "Encourage him." Toiling men, none more than pastors, need helping words. Cheer your pastor. In his successes congratulate him; when wrestling with difficulties speak comfortably to him; when he fails in his plans or his preaching don't count him a failure, but refresh him with sympathy.

2. Hear him—for his sake, as well as yours. Don't let him preach to your empty pew. When he preaches, be there; sit up erect, fix both eyes on him, open wide your ears, and let your knives and hymn-books and watches alone. Good listening makes good preachers. Drowsy, listless congregations will spoil the best of sermons.

3. Follow him—not blindly, not into error, if he should attempt (as I am sure he will not) to lead you astray. But when he brings in his enterprises, off with your critical spectacles, away with your objections, unroll your sleeves, come to the front, lay hold and help him.

4. Don't stand in his way. Never roll yourself up at home in a great knot of worthlessness, and whimper about his not visiting. Visit him if you wish to see him; but don't make the church a spiritual infirmary and detail him as a common nurse.

5. Pray for him. Oh, the pastor, the weary, weary pastor! His brain vexed with sermon-making; his feet sore with racing here and yonder and everywhere; his ears crowded with stories of sorrow and want; his soul burdened with the cares and failures of his people; shocked by the miscarriage of cherished schemes, sometimes crushed by the apathy of brethren, and now and then stung in spirit by the treachery of those he trusted only to find that they were false! No wonder that Paul, tossed on the Black sea, cried out: "Brethren, pray for us." Pray for your pastor. Pray daily. Pray that he may stand temptation. Pray that he may be full of grace. Pray that he may preach well, work well and prove a blessing to your church.

In almost every church a pastor finds three classes of people. First, those who hail his coming with immense parade. They suffocate him with attention and crown him with gifts. They love him with a fiery and consuming sort of affection. They are ready to eat him up, and before long they wish they had done it.

Next, those who show no enthusiasm or affection till he is going away, and then they can outmourn the entire eldership of Ephesus. Your pastor asks no resolutions when he leaves, nor monument when dead; but support and sympathy now.

Then there are some who greet him warmly when he comes, cheer and help him while he stays, and bless him and weep when he goes. In this church there are many of these. They are the church. The exceptions are few and unworthy of a fear. I know these First Church people, and there is not a nobler band on the earth. The men—Heaven bless them—are true, self-sacrificing, steadfast and ever studious of a pastor's wants. Better still, if possible, the women. Full of grace, loving and kind, they are a treasure to a pastor. Oh, what a church is this! War could not scatter it; fire could not dissolve it; panic could not alarm it; opposition could not overcome it. It stands to-night, after all its adversities and conflicts, stronger, more united and hopeful than ever before. Its membership, rank and file, constitute the pastor's body-guard. They will protect, uphold and sustain him. With such a host of saintly men and women to follow him, the incoming pastor must succeed. May grace and mercy rest upon you and guide you forward in a career of richest usefulness.

EVERY day love should be distinguished by at least one particular act of love.—Lavater.

Appropriating Missionary Funds.

The Christian Observer (Southern Presbyterian,) published at Louisville, Ky., under the above heading, very justly penetrates and exposes the animus of the Northern Methodist missionary operations in the South. It seems that the Northern Presbyterians have also put forth a standing bid for division among Southern Presbyterians. Our fraternal affairs seem to be much in the same condition, and beset with like difficulties. The Observer says:

The Methodist Episcopal (Northern Methodist) Board of Missions has been in session in New York city, and its doings have been telegraphed over the country. The following are the appropriations to Conferences voted on one day, arranged in two sections, one Northern, the other Southern, or where the emigration from Southern States is active:

Southern Illinois Conference	$ [illegible]
Upper Iowa Conference	1,000
Western New York Conference	700
Wyoming Conference	700
Troy Conference	700
Vermont Conference	1,000
Western Wisconsin Conference	1,500
Wisconsin Conference	2,000
Illinois Conference	2,500
Southern California Conference	[illegible]
California Conference	2,500
	3,500
Total for preaching the gospel	$17,500
Texas Conference	$5,500
Virginia Conference	7,500
Wilmington Conference	3,000
Kansas Conference	3,500
Southern Kansas Conference	4,000
Tennessee Conference	7,000
Western Texas Conference	6,000
Missouri Conference	3,500
Alabama Conference	7,000
Louisiana Conference	2,000
Total for propagating Northern Methodism	$49,000

In those sections where the Southern Methodist Church is working vigorously and successfully, as Virginia, Tennessee, etc., their appropriations are counted by thousands of dollars; in other sections, where they have undisputed possession, and where Methodism will never be preached unless they do it, as in New York, Illinois, etc., they are doled out by hundreds. The distribution of the missionary fund seems to indicate that the board thinks it ten times as important to dispute the field already cultivated by Southern Methodists as to occupy that which Providence has given them as peculiarly their own. Again, viewing the appropriations in the aggregate, nearly three times as much is appropriated to gain or secure a foothold for Northern Methodism in the Southern and border States as is appropriated to preach the gospel in the lumber camps in Wisconsin, on the frontiers, and among the destitutions of its own field.

The appropriations to the German work, made the same day, show the same animus:

German mission in California	$1,800
Chicago German Conference	3,000
East German Conference	6,000
Northwest German Conference	4,000
Total for the Germans of the North	$14,800
South German Conference	$10,000
Southwest German Conference	7,000
Total for the scattered Germans of the South	$17,000

It is well understood that any Presbyterians in the South who will make a division in favor of the Northern Presbyterian Church will promptly receive an appropriation from its missionary funds. We are sorry to see the Northern Methodists working on the same plan.

Periodicals.

—The American Agriculturist for December is, as usual, copiously illustrated, and brimful of useful and instructive articles for housekeepers and farmers. Holding fast to its old name, which it has carried successfully through the long period of thirty-four years, the American Agriculturist swings out its banner for the "centennial year" with the vigor of the prime of life, and with well-founded promises of still greater achievements in its appropriate sphere—that of a plain, practical, highly instructive and trustworthy family journal. Its name, adopted at the start for a special field of work, has become almost a misnomer, because it is now equally useful to city, village and country. The closing number of volume 34, now before us, like its usual issues, is full of good things, varied in contents, which are prepared with much labor, thought and care, and illustrated with over 60 well-executed and well-printed original sketches and engravings. This journal is a marvel of cheapness, beauty and utility, costing only $1.60 a year, postage included, for its more than 500 double pages of useful information, and 500 to 600 or more of fine engravings. Every family should have it. Orange Judd Company, publishers, 245 Broadway, New York city.

THE BEST FAMILY NEWSPAPER. This is the claim which the publishers of the New York Observer make in behalf of their paper. It is a bold claim to make in our day, when there are so many papers; but an undeviating course in sending out, for fifty-three years, a large, full, fresh, readable and pure newspaper, which is unsurpassed, justifies them in the claim. We can recommend the Observer. It has no hobbies, it is sound in doctrine, impartial and unbiased, reliable in its news, interesting and instructive in its various departments, and offers no clap-trap premiums or pictures. For specimen copies address S. I. Prime & Co., New York.

—Wide Awake for December has been received. It is, as usual, handsomely illustrated. A charming magazine for the young. One of the best Boston notions we know of.

The Rope of Faith.

"Brethren, I am now going to show you how a poor sinner is saved by grace; and I am sure many of you have been so saved. Let us take the case of a miserable man in the pains of conviction. He is, we will suppose, down at the bottom of the pit of despair. Now let us ask him how he got there, and how he means to get up." Then, leaning over the pulpit to the right hand, the preacher curved and hollowed his hand, and, applying his mouth to it, spoke aloud this imaginary colloquy, as if from the surface down through the pit shaft, after the manner of the "banksman" at the colliery:

"Hallo! hallo! Who's down there?"

"O minister, a poor sinner—a miserable sinner."

"How came you there, my poor brother? How came you there?"

"My load of sin weighed me down, and I fell deeper and deeper."

"O wretched man that you are, how do you mean to get up?"

"I shall never get up. I am lost! lost forever! I've been trying ever so long to climb up by the side of the shaft, but I cannot—I fall down again."

"You cannot succeed of yourself. I'll send you down the rope of faith. Lay hold of that, and you will be got out. Cling to it, cling to it. Here it is! (imitating the paying out of a rope.) Lay hold of the 'only hope set before you.' Have you got hold now?"

"I'm so feeble I can hardly grasp it; but I think I have got a good grip now."

"Then, pull ahoy! Let us help this poor sinner up. Oh, how heavy he is! Why, what have you got besides yourself hanging on the rope?"

"Only a few good works of my own."

"Good works! good works! Throw them down. Down with them or they'll break the rope."

"Well, if I must I must; but sure they would do me some good."

The preacher continued to represent the lifting, but suddenly stopped, as if his arm had received a check, exclaiming to the imaginary ascendant: "Why, what is the matter with you now? What are you struggling with?"

"Doubts and fears, sir. I am afraid I cannot hold on."

"Lay firmer hold of the rope. Doubts and fears are nothing to strong faith. But what now? Trembling again? What is it now?"

"A great fight of afflictions, master, and I cannot hold on."

"Hold on, sinner, hold on. You'll come out of the afflictions. But what is this? Shaking again? What can be the matter now?"

"Strong temptations, master. Oh, I shall fall! I'm falling! Oh, help me!—Oh, help me!"

"So we will. But ah! what dreadful thing has happened now? The weight is three times as great. What a horrible noise! What have you got there?"

"It's the devil himself has gripped me. He is gripping me hard. O minister, I'm lost! I'm lost!"

Hereupon the excitement in the congregation became intense. Women wept, men rose up, and the minister, seizing his opportunity, continued:

"Now, lads, let us all pray and pull together. This poor sinner is in great danger. But satan cannot long buffet him. The great Captain is with us, and he is too strong for demon and devil."

Straining with the lifting of the imaginary load, the preacher greatly excited himself as well as his hearers. Finally he appeared to succeed in bringing the imperiled and hard-gripped penitent to the surface. Then with great effort he uttered the words: "Lads, he's safe! He is saved! There he is! The rope of faith never broke yet, and I knew it wouldn't break now."—Dr. Guthrie.

Publisher's Department.

OUR BILLS.

We are sending our bills to subscribers. Many of them have assured us that they would remit as soon as crops were harvested. We have waited till now, hoping that by this time they could pay the small amounts they owe. Each subscriber may think his two dollars and fifty cents too small an amount to affect us; but if every subscriber should reason the same way, and withhold it, the sum total would be over twenty thousand dollars. We need every dollar due us—we need it badly. Will you send at once through your pastor, if convenient? If not, please remit directly to this office and greatly oblige the publisher.

GARDEN DISTRICT ENTERPRISE.—We are glad to witness the evidences of life and activity at the boot and shoe stand, No. 378 Magazine street, opposite the Magazine Market. Mr. Louis Gimbel deserves credit for the enterprise and energy which have accomplished so much. He advertises his fine assortment in another column at greatly reduced prices. See his card and give him a call.

SOUTHERN SHOE MANUFACTORY. It is to our interest to encourage every kind of useful home industry. The more we manufacture and produce at home the more independent we will be, and it is with pleasure that we call attention to the Southern Shoe Manufactory of John Hansen, and the card to be found in another column with the above heading.

CARPET WAREHOUSE.—Mr. A. Brousseau, at 17 Chartres street, keeps his warehouse well filled with the finest assortment of carpets, and everything in that line of business. His house is one of the oldest in the trade. His experience is extensive, and he thoroughly understands the wants of his customers. See advertisement in another column.

AN HONEST JEWELER.—We know of no man in any branch of business in whom we have more perfect confidence than in H. P. Buckley, at No. 8 Camp street. We have known him for more than twenty years, and we refer to his advertisement with perfect assurance that all who buy watches or jewelry from him will be fairly dealt with.

ORNAMENTAL IRON WORKS.—We direct the attention of our readers, who may need anything in the line of ornamental iron work, to the advertisement of William Ebert. Specimens of the work from his manufactory may be seen at his warerooms, 164 and 166 Magazine street, which are highly creditable to Southern manufacturing.

MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.—Mr. H. Fehsenfeld, at 194 Canal street, invites the attention of the ladies to his fine stock of millinery and fancy goods. We have known Mr. Fehsenfeld for some years, and have confidence in his entire reliability in filling orders. His advertisement will be found elsewhere.

DRESSMAKING.—Mme. A. Dagoret, successor to Mme. Maria Voisin, modes and dressmaking, 32 Chartres street, corner of Customhouse, continues the same business, and invites the patronage of the old friends of the former establishment, and others, in an advertisement to be found in our columns.

TOBACCO AND CIGAR MANUFACTORY.—We call attention to the advertisement of Mr. John P. Gaspard's tobacco and cigar manufactory, 135 Decatur street. He keeps on hand a large assortment of tobacco and cigars.

GUN STORE.—We advise our friends who need hunters' equipments, fishing tackle or ammunition to call at John's Gun Store, 59 St. Charles street, whose advertisement will be found in another column.

THOSE who are looking for dress goods should read the advertisement of Auguste Marx, and they will lose nothing, we think, by giving him a call at his establishment, 383 Dryades street.

DR. B. DEVILLENEUVE, homeopath, at 154 Canal street, near Baronne, offers his professional services to the public in a card to be found in our advertising columns.

SOUTHERN SHOE MANUFACTORY. We hope all will follow the example of our friend. We have just made another visit to the Shoe Manufactory of our esteemed and enterprising fellow-citizen, Mr. JOHN HANSEN, 33 and 35 Canal street, and, notwithstanding the hard times, we find that he is employing one hundred hands, and thereby supporting at least five hundred persons. His work is of the best quality, and is sold at the LOWEST PRICES, even below what the same goods can be bought for at the North. We advise all country merchants to call and see Mr. Hansen's stock before they purchase elsewhere, and thereby keep their money at home.

Ladies and gentlemen who wish to make Christmas and New Year presents of Boots and Shoes should call on Mr. Hansen before purchasing elsewhere, as they can have the goods at wholesale prices, and at the same time sustain home-manufactured articles.

MEDICAL.

I MUST OWN that your Simmons' Liver Regulator fully deserves the popularity it has attained. As a family medicine it has no equal. It cured my wife of a malady I had counted incurable—that wolfsbane of our American people, Dyspepsia. She desires that all nations and peoples might know the virtues of this God-given remedy. Hoping that the above will appear in your Almanac of 1876, and be of some use in extolling the virtues of your excellent medicine, is the wish of your humble servant,

A. E. P. ALBERT,
Professor in Nicholas Public School,
Parish of Terrebonne, La.

I have used Simmons' Liver Regulator for two years, and recommend it as a very superior medicine for Dyspepsia and Liver Disease.

GEORGE W. SMITH,
Kentucky Conference,
Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Your valuable medicine (Simmons' Regulator) has saved me doctors' bills often. I use it for everything that it is recommended for, and never knew it to fail. I have used it in Colic and Grubs with my mules and horses, giving them about half a bottle at a time. I have not lost one that I gave it to. You can recommend it in every one that has stock as being the best medicine known for all complaints that horse flesh is heir to.

E. T. TAYLOR,
Agent for Orangers of Georgia.

Wetumpka (Ala.) Banner.

Simmons' Liver Regulator doubtless is one of the best medicines ever compounded from the great botanic garden of nature, and contains no life-destroying component hidden under some technical name, but is a purifier, rejuvenator and regulator not only of the Liver, but of the whole system.

Hen and Chicken Rules.

The following ten rules applicable to setting hens and young chickens were contributed to the Mobile Register by a lady:

Never set a hen in a close box; give plenty of room to move about. She will not do well if cramped or crowded.

Always set her on the ground, if possible. The nest will hatch best with the nest directly on the ground.

Be careful to mark the eggs; for other hens are apt to lay in the nest with your setter, and unless the eggs are properly marked you may not be able to identify the new eggs. You understand that the eggs laid to a setting hen must be promptly removed.

Don't give a hen more than thirteen eggs for a setting. I know fifteen is the rule, but experience has taught me to consider fifteen just two too many.

Make a record of the time when you set your hen, in order that you may be looking out for the hatching.

Some eggs will invariably hatch sooner than others. Remove the young chicks at once, and keep them from the hen until all are hatched. If you do not the hen will be likely to quit the nest with the first comers, leaving the unhatched chicks to chill and die.

Don't pick at the hills of the little chicks in an effort to remove what some people call the "pip." It is all right, and will disappear as soon as nature requires.

Never undertake to feed your setting hens—it is a poor way. Let them come off for their food. They will not stay off too long. Nature knows what she is about. I am not sure but the eggs require the amount of airing while the hen is off for food.

See that the hens do not run about too much while the chickens are yet young. It will cause them to droop, and will sometimes give them a disease called the "spraddles."

Feed your chicks on corn meal mixed with pure water, and don't mix too wet. You want it so it will crumble.

DOUBLE BALSAM.—How to secure Double Balsam year after year, from our own seeds, is a question that has been well discussed, though by no means determined. Let our flowers bloom ever so double one season, the seeds saved from them or from those that mature seeds will, as a rule, prove single, or but semi-double, the succeeding year.

It is generally supposed that age in balsam seeds is conducive to the transformation of stamens into petals. A trial of our own during the present summer does not tend to corroborate this opinion. The seeds were saved five years ago from the strain known as Smith's Prize, and planted beside the same strain purchased last spring—the latter noticeably superior.

It is a common error, however, in collecting seeds, to select those pods which contain the greatest number. The fully double flowers, in which both pistils and stamens have expanded into petals, are of course sterile. But the nearly double flowers often form one and two seeds, usually small and shriveled, and these are the very ones we should collect, though by their imperfect appearance the very first to be rejected as worthless.

We have also noticed that a strong, healthy germination of the seeds, which would seem to favor a perfection of flowers, is not always conducive to that multiplication of the petals which in balsam is justly considered its chief beauty. On the contrary, drawn, sickly young plants, which we judged might better have been thrown away, produced the largest, fullest inflorescence.—E. S. C., in Rural New Yorker.

ANCIENT WHEAT.—I have before me, says a writer, heads of wheat grown on the eastern side of the Mississippi, within ten miles of Memphis, from grains taken from an ancient Egyptian sarcophagus, sent some years ago by the American consul at Alexandria to the Patent Office at Washington. The stalks and leaves are very much like those of Indian corn, though smaller, and the heads of grain like that of sorghum or broom corn. Strange but true it is that this wheat, degenerated but perfect in all its incidents, still grows among the weeds and grass that cover mounds in the lowlands eighteen miles west of Memphis. How many centuries since these kindred products of Egyptian agriculture were separated, the one to move slowly, perhaps with nomadic tribes, around the globe, crossing Asia and the Pacific, and the other moving west in our time, across the Atlantic, and both growing green even here in the year of our Lord 1875, beneath the shadows of another Memphis on the shores of another Nile? The same writer says that the same race of people cultivated the same crops, and garnered them in the same peculiar manner, many a century ago.

WASHING HOUSE PLANTS.—Have a large pail or tub filled with warm soapsuds; then spread the fingers and palm of the left hand over the soil in the pot; turn the branches topsy-turvy into the warm suds, swing the plant briskly in the water till every leaf has become completely saturated, then put it through a pail of clean water, and rub each leaf with the thumb and finger; give it a good shake, and when dry return it to its place in the window.

The leaves of a plant are its lungs, each leaf being furnished with hundreds of minute pores, whence the plants breathe in carbon and exhale oxygen. The perspiration of plants is said to be seventeen times that of human beings. Many plants never bloom on account of the accumulation of dust upon their leaves.—Land and Water.

COAL ASHES FOR PEAR-TREES.—Coal ashes have a wonderfully vitalizing effect upon pear-trees, especially those growing in light soil. Our ashes of last winter were used around these trees in liberal quantities, and those thus treated have outgrown anything else in the orchard. Some that were even sickly, and apparently ready to give up their hold on life, have been restored to perfect health by this remedy.—Peninsular News.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED

To sell the NEW BOOK BACKSHEESH or Life and Adventures in the Orient. By Thos. W. Knox. It reveals the Wonders, Marvels, and Mysteries of the Land of the Rising Sun, and portrays life as it really is in the old and sleepy East. It tells what the Author saw, heard, and did, in such inimitable style, that every one laughs to split of himself at its genuine humor and fun. It is Live, Racy, Spicy, brimfull of good things, and yet so "meaty" that 500 College Presidents, Professors, Governors, etc., pronounce it "irresistible." None can resist its 250 illustrations, mostly executed in Europe at a cost of $10,000. To YOU, reader, and every wide-awake person, it affords a splendid chance to earn BIG PAY. Only think, 700 pages, 250 superb illustrations. To live Agents, (for the present,) the Outfit is Free. Large Pamphlets, Specimen Pages, and Terms, free to all. Address, A. O. NETTLETON & CO., Cincinnati, Ohio. Chicago, Ill., or St. Louis, Mo.

MEDICAL.

DUCONGE'S

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP.

NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound. Its well-established virtue and its high reputation in all ailments of the Chest, Lungs, Breast and Bowels is so well known, and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage, that it would be superfluous, at this late day, to dwell at any length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Bowels, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial in all Inflammatory disorders, such as Rheumatism, Diarrhea or Dysentery and Summer Complaint, and especially in those cases of Cholerine which, for want of proper care, so often degenerate into confirmed Cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, verging on Consumption, it has been found most efficacious in preventing that most awful scourge whenever timely resorted to.

Besides its acknowledged certainty of cure, this truly extraordinary medicine has, over most compounds of the same nature, the decided advantage that, owing to its agreeable flavor, it can be administered without the least difficulty to children, and it requires no particular diet. It is also the cheapest, not only because the bottles contain more sirup than any other, but owing to its peculiar composition this Sirup will keep for years without fermenting, and it can be used in families whenever required by simply keeping the bottle well corked.

Directions for Taking the Sirup.—Grown persons can take from four to six spoonfuls in the course of the day, either pure or diluted in a little water, or a less quantity at intervals of three or four hours.

Persons much troubled during the night may take two tablespoonfuls of the Sirup on going to bed, when it will stop the cough and procure a good night's rest.

Children from three to five years old may take from four to six teaspoonfuls during the day, in suitable quantities, at intervals of three to four hours. For sale by

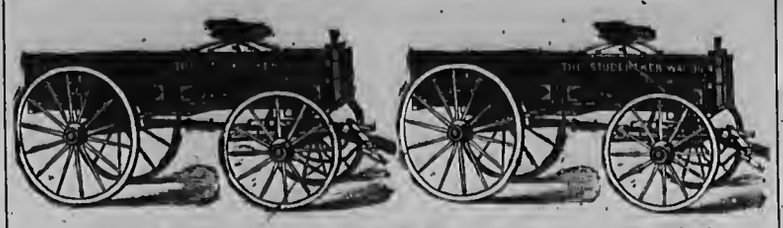
I HAVE RECENTLY ACCEPTED THE AGENCY OF THE CELEBRATED



STUDEBAKER WAGON.

FROM ONE TO SIX HORSE.

THE MOST SUBSTANTIAL WAGONS MADE!

There are several reasons why all should buy the above Wagon: First. They are made of the BEST SELECTED TIMBER, the same being cut at the proper season of the year, piled under sheds, properly dated, and allowed to remain there from three to five years. Second. The wood-work is shaped by the latest improved machinery, put together by the BEST WAGON MECHANICS IN THE WORLD, and are the best ironed and painted Wagons in the market. Third. Their thimble skeins, made of select iron, are set by patent skein setters, and weigh from four to twenty-five pounds per set more than any other, thereby making a perfect running Wagon, which will not break. Fourth. They are the only Wagon in which the SLOPE-SHOULDER SPOKE is used; hence they have the best wheel, which is actually the foundation of the Wagon, and should be carefully examined by persons purchasing. Fifth. They are sold only by responsible parties, and every Wagon is warranted; while the Studebaker Bros. are practical workmen, and attend to their business personally; hence the superiority of their work over all others.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals for the three days ending December 14:

Railroads.....	8,896

Mobile.....	1,179

Total.....	36,683

On Saturday the business during the morning was of limited extent, but later in the day, more samples having been opened, the movement became quite active, resulting in sales of 10,930 bales. Throughout the day the demand pressed upon the supply, and embraced, to a greater extent than for some time past, the lower grades as well as the medium and better qualities. On Monday only a moderate business was done during the morning, mostly at previous rates, but partly at an advance of ⅛c., and in some cases of ¼c., after which the movement became more active, and the business summed up 8,980 bales. On Tuesday, there being nothing in the dispatches to have much influence, and the receipts being liberal, factors evinced a disposition to meet the demand more freely, except for desirable lists, which were offered sparingly and were in special request, and although the movement was checked by light supplies of freight-room, especially for Liverpool, yet buyers came forward with a fair degree of spirit and took 7,950 bales, at prices showing no quotable variation. The better qualities continued steady, but other descriptions were manifestly easier, offers being accepted which were refused on Monday.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 27,220 bales, against 21,700 for the corresponding time last week and 25,108 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 492,691 bales, against 425,460 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 134,849 bales. The increase by the reports per telegraph is 145,590—1,881,961 against 1,736,271. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 74,641 bales to France, of 110,726 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 73,986 to Great Britain. NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. A CHRISTMAS CAROL.

BY REV. CHARLES KINGSLEY.

It chanced upon the merry, merry Christmas eve
I went sighing past the church, across the moorland dreary;
"Oh! never sin and want and woe this earth will leave,
And the bells but mock the wailing round, they sing so cheery.
How long, oh! Lord, how long, before thou come again?
Still in cellar, and in garret, and on moorland dreary
The orphans moan, and widows weep, and poor men toil in vain,
Till earth is sick of hope deferred, though Christmas bells be cheery."

Then arose a joyous clamor from the wild fowl on the mere,
Beneath the stars, across the snow, like clear bells ringing.
And a voice within cried: "Listen! Christmas carols even here!
Though thou be dumb, yet o'er their work the stars and snows are singing.
Blind! I live, I love, I reign: and all the nations through
With the thunder of my judgments even now are ringing;
Do thou fulfill thy work but as you wild fowl do,
Then wilt heed no less the wailing, yet hear through it angels singing!"

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 14.—A stupendous land swindle has just been unearthed in southeastern Missouri. It appears that deeds to land in northern Arkansas and southeastern Missouri have been forged for some years past, and that agencies for this work were established in Cincinnati, Pittsburg, Philadelphia, New York, and Manchester, England. It is estimated that deeds to over one million two hundred thousand acres of land have been disposed of.

The land was operated upon and owned by non-residents, and as the records were mostly destroyed during the war the ring had every facility to carry out the enormous swindle. Deeds have been sold all over the United States and England. The grand jury of Shannon county has indicted Dr. Thomas K. Harman, Davis S. Bingham and James L. Lawton for complicity in the fraud. Lawton seems to have been the leader of the swindlers, and operated extensively in England.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 14.—The Board of Public Education, at its meeting to-day, received a communication from the secretary of an organization styled the Liberal League, with a resolution adopted by the league, petitioning the board to prohibit the use of the Bible in the public schools. The reading of the communication and resolution created considerable stir, and after remarks by several members the subject was tabled, the vote being almost unanimous to dispose of it in that way.

NASHVILLE, Dec. 14.—Commodore Vanderbilt has given an additional $100,000 to the Vanderbilt University, making $700,000.

RICHMOND, Dec. 15.—The exciting contest for United States senator, which has occupied the time and attention of the Conservative legislators of Virginia for four days, was brought to a close this afternoon in the renomination of Hon. J. W. Johnston, the present incumbent, under the new rule adopted at the morning session of the caucus. To-morrow's session will result in the re-election of Senator Johnston.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 18.—Early this morning the United States express car on the St. Louis, Kansas City and Northern train, en route here, was entered between Ferguson and Jennings stations, some ten or twelve miles from here. The messenger, Charles Kincaid, was thrown into a large package chest, locked up, and the safe robbed of from $10,000 to $20,000 in bonds and money.

GALVESTON, December 18.—Advices from Fort Clark, Texas, of the seventeenth, state that Mexicans crossed the river below San Felipe, and stole eight hundred head of cattle and fifty horses from Strickland & Slaughter. Citizens are raising companies and threaten to cross the river. Great excitement prevails. The citizens of San Felipe to-day called on the military authorities at Fort Clark.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 19.—The Moody and Sankey meetings to-day were attended by immense crowds, including many prominent persons. At the evening meeting every seat was occupied fifteen minutes after the doors were open. This was caused by a rumor circulated through the day that President Grant would be present. Among those present were the President and wife, Ex-Senator Cattell, of New Jersey, Gov. Hartranft, A. E. Borie, Col. Fred Grant and wife, Postmaster General Jewell and wife, Ex-Speaker Blaine, Gov. Biddle, of New Jersey, and Senator Wallace, of Pennsylvania.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—House.—The committee on Mississippi levees is as follows: Ellis, of Louisiana, chairman; Hatcher, of Missouri; H. D. Money, of Mississippi; Roberts, of Maryland; Young, of Tennessee; Sheakley, of Pennsylvania; Dunnell, of Minnesota; Whiting, of Illinois; Morey, of Louisiana, and Wallace, of Pennsylvania.

GLENS FALLS, N. Y., Dec. 20.—The mercury registered here, at four o'clock this morning, 31° below zero.

FOREIGN.

BRUSSELS, Dec. 16.—A terrible explosion occurred to-day in a coal mine at Frameleres, near Mons. A full force of men were at work at the time. The loss of life is appalling. It is reported that one hundred and ten miners were killed. Eleven have been taken out injured. The accident was caused by fire damp.

MONTREAL, Dec. 17.—This morning between one thousand and fifteen hundred desperate laborers surrounded the City Hall, clamoring for bread. Alderman Monier, chairman of the police committee, addressed the people and quieted them, advising them to wait until to-morrow. If immediate aid is not given it is feared a riot will be the result.

EDINBURG, Dec. 18.—The Earl of Derby was formally installed as rector of the University of Edinburg and delivered his inaugural address. In the evening he made a speech before the Workingmen's Conservative Association, in the course of which he alluded to England's relations with Egypt; denied the Suez canal purchase signified a reversal of England's policy on the Eastern question, and disclaimed any desire on the part of the government to establish a protectorate over Egypt; declared the only object of the government was to obtain additional security and uninterrupted access to India.

RIO JANEIRO, Dec. 18.—The Emperor of Brazil will embark on board the Henelius on the twenty-sixth of March for New York, to begin his tour of North America and Europe.

HAVANA, Dec. 20.—Captain General Valmaseda, considering the new rules introduced into the administration of the island by the government incompatible with the power he ought to wield in view of his knowledge of the country and people, and his past and present services, has forwarded his resignation, which the King has accepted. The Captain General returned from the Interior yesterday. He will transfer the government to the hands of Gen. Carbo, next in rank, and will sail for Spain on the twenty-fifth.

There was an earthquake in Porto Rico on the night of December 8 and 9, which created great alarm. The capital, San Juan, was not damaged, but the town of Arecibo was almost destroyed. Two churches and only six houses remain, and they are so badly damaged they may fall at any moment.

From the Work.

LOUISVILLE CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: As the Conference year draws to a close I pause a moment to send you and your readers some encouraging notes. For a time the most of the circuit seemed to be under a cloud. The enthusiasm of the early and middle part of the year was dying out. Worldliness was creeping into the church, and mourners were beginning to be at ease in Zion. This sent us to our knees in humble prayer, and kept us there in one of those untold agonies of desperation, until, ere the morning broke, the angel of the covenant had asked our name and left us the blessing of assurance. At our next appointment the clouds were dispersed, light shone into darkened souls, the blessings of pardon and sanctification were entered into, and a succession of glorious triumphs followed. We set to work the possessors of the blessing of perfect love to hold prayer meetings from house to house. The sanctifying flame spread, pungent convictions ensued, and conversions became frequent. In one house a child lay dead. The watchers turned their watching into praying. The Spirit came down, souls were saved, shouts of victory filled the house, and before morning the parents had clasped hands over their dead child, and in God's strength vowed to meet it in heaven. In another house a child lay in the calm sleep of death. A prayer meeting was held. God owned it with his presence. Four were converted, among them the mother of the child.

"Ah those little ice-cold fingers,
How they point our memories back."

Various, indeed, are the avenues by which God enters the human soul. It would seem almost fictitious were I to recite the circumstances of these meetings. God is moving in a most mysterious way among the dry bones of this valley. Five weeks have passed since we took the fort, and we are still holding it by the grace of God. We number forty conversions. Twenty have entered into the rest of perfect love, all of them having a clear inward testimony of the Spirit, as in their conversion, witnessing that "the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin." Wesley's three steps are preached and enforced: "Expect by faith, expect it as you are, and expect it now." I thank God that some fifty more are earnestly seeking the blessing. Twenty-two have commenced family and public prayer. It will be gratifying for some of your readers to learn that a long-standing enmity that existed in the church has been healed by a plaster of perfect love. It was done by an open grave—hands were clasped that had not met for years, and sweet words of love and forgiveness exchanged. I pray God for its continuance. Some of the outsiders say that several of our people are going crazy! The people say: "They are only full of Jesus." I wish, Mr. Editor, more of our people were down with the same malady. Don't you? I am in the midst of my last meeting. Last night twenty souls were struggling around the altar for mercy. The new church echoed with shouts of triumph. We have had seventy-five accessions to date, and over one hundred conversions; and, best of all, God is now carrying on the work. "Alleluiah! God omnipotent reigneth."

Yours in Jesus, A. E. CLAY.

PAULDING CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: I am now closing up my fourth year on the Paulding circuit. We have had a good time spiritually in the past four years. The first year I erected a camp ground, and we have held four camp meetings, and all proved to be a great success. Besides, we have had good revivals of religion all round the circuit. Last year, I think, we had about one hundred accessions to the church, but this year not so many—about thirty. I have baptized about forty children this year. We have a great many good people on the Paulding circuit, and a great number of warm friends; but we must part soon. God bless the people of Paulding circuit. Our fourth quarterly meeting closed on the first day of December, and not more than half the assessment was paid; but I am looking for something more before Conference.

PAULDING, December 6, 1875.

MONTGOMERY CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Our fourth quarterly meeting was held at Wiuntield, where the Holy Spirit was powerfully poured out upon the people. There were twelve or fifteen conversions, and nine received into our church. Our beloved presiding elder, J. H. Stone, was at his post, and preached with power and success. His assessment on this circuit has been paid in full. There have been two camp meetings on this circuit this year. There have been about one hundred and fifty conversions; one hundred and twenty have joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Some have joined other churches. Upon the whole, the work is in good condition. I expect to bring with me to Conference several dollars for our ADVOCATE and the publisher.

Yours in Christ,

D. A. BODDIE, P. C.

M. VON HULLE, head gardener of the Botanical Garden at Ghent, has found by actual experiment that one of the leaves of a large Victoria Regia in the garden aquarium will bear up a weight of about seven hundred and sixty pounds avoirdupois. Noticing that one of them would support a man without submersion, he loaded the surface of one of the largest leaves with bricks, with the result stated.

WHAT is the difference between a hill and a pill? One is hard to get up, and the other is hard to get down.

Caddo Ct., Louisiana Conference.

MR. EDITOR: After a long silence we beg your indulgence for a few remarks in your excellent paper. We have had a prosperous year in many respects. Two churches have been built—one at Moorlingsport and another at Mount Zion. That at Moorlingsport is finished in every respect, and that at Mount Zion soon will be. Both are excellent houses, and are well suited to the use of the congregations, which are honored by having such churches. We have had nearly fifty accessions, which, however, owing to removals, will not appear so much on the minutes. However, we can say: "Of them thou gavest me have I lost none."

In August we held a meeting at Friendship, aided by Bro. J. B. Cassity, my right-eye local, and by Bros. Allen and Allison, excellent young ministers of the Baptist Church. The results of the meeting were beyond estimation.

In September Bro. A. M. Box, of the North Texas Conference, assisted me in a meeting at Moorlingsport. Bro. Box did lasting service, both spiritually and financially. We have heard of many "beggars doing well, but Box excelleth them all."

Our fourth quarterly meeting is just over. Bro. Scott was present, and on the Sabbath gave us a discourse of great power and appropriateness. Quite a full attendance of the Quarterly Conference was present, and much interest was manifested in Zion. We think the finances will, in spite of "the times," show an encouraging exhibit. Our missionary interests are improving, and we think people are becoming more of the opinion that the gospel is the property of the whole world than formerly. Mr. Editor, please speak to the preachers and the presiding elders kindly for Caddo circuit. Insist that they give it some attention. We have been here three years, and not the first preacher from the Louisiana Conference has visited us at one of our meetings, unless it was the presiding elder, who, of course, could not get around it.

Well, Mr. Editor, we hear a great deal of complaint about getting to Conference. No money, no river—that is, up this way. Suppose we hold Conference in June. It would be a good time. Conference would be easy to entertain, as the weather would be warm. Then the whole financial year would be spent on the circuit, and we would fare much better. Oh, for the good old horseback days, when steamboats and railroads existed only in the wild fancy of some enthusiastic adventurer!

We have had the pleasure of a visit to the East Texas Conference. Bishop Pierce was present, and held the reins with admirable ease and dignity. Twelve were admitted on trial. The Conference was full, and possesses much strength. Adams, Thompson, Woolam, Stovall, Finley, Bellamy, Morse, Mathis and others give great character to the Conference. Many distinguished visitors were present, among them three presidents—Wiley, of Emory and Henry, Virginia; Stuart, of Marshall, and Armstrong, of Mansfield. They were all smiling men. Bishop Pierce said they did not smile for nothing. President Stuart informed us that Louisiana girls could get a good education in Texas. President Armstrong admits it, but is rather inclined to the opinion that both Louisiana and Texas girls could do as well or better in Louisiana. President Wiley had the whole field to himself. The missionary anniversary was an interesting occasion. Eight hundred people gave $500 to send the gospel—the free, the everlasting gospel—to the heathen. The preachers gave $200 of it. It is wrong to get money that way, we think. Bishop Pierce preached a grand sermon on Sabbath, and caused many a preacher to resolve that, Archippus-like, he would fulfill his ministry from henceforth.

And now, Mr. Editor, we thank you for your indulgence, and bid you farewell until we meet again.

As ever, R. H. A.

A DELIBERATIVE BODY—A slow man.

Letter from Great Britain.

MR. EDITOR: Cardinal Manning has the implicit and thorough credulity of the faithful, and the most preposterous ghost stories which he relates about Protestantism are accepted by them with unquestioning faith. The other day he told his hearers in Manchester that to become a Protestant is to slide down an "inclined plane," which necessarily leads to infidelity. There was a brake in his descent when on that inclined plane, and instead of landing in unbelief he has gained promotion in popery. At Liverpool Monsignor Capel told the Romanists of that place that they were surrounded by "Protestants and heathens." The conjunction was one of design, and not inadvertence—made for an ulterior object, and not a lapse of the tongue. Capel is a worthy subordinate under Manning. Not long ago the cardinal surprised many by asserting that for the last three centuries the standard of religion and conduct had been steadily lowering, and that in these characteristics England was far below what it was in the days of Henry the Eighth. These utterances and others have set statisticians to work; and it is ascertained that since 1872 there were ten executions for murder in Liverpool, and of these seven were Romanists. Of 13,000 prisoners who passed through gaol, 9,000 were Romanists. In nearly every instance of brutality or stabbing the guilty parties are members of the Romish Church. The fruit of the tree which Dr. Manning lauds is certainly nothing to boast of.

Lichfield has a Congregationalist minister who was formerly a Romanist. He has been lecturing on "Why I Came Out from Rome." He is an able man, and describes his experiences when in a monastery with much vivid and graphic power. Of course his statements will be denounced as calumnies by the Romish press. An Anglican clergyman has just seceded from the Established Church, and become the pastor of a Congregational church in London.

The ministers of the Irish Presbyterian Church who favor temperance held a meeting the other day, presided over by the Rev. Dr. Knox, to devise means to promote temperance throughout their communion. Twenty years ago there were scarcely a dozen total abstainers in the Irish General Assembly. Now there are more than two hundred. All branches of the church of Christ are giving special and practical heed to the question, and it behooves them so to do, for the ravages of intemperance are great, and its stain past computation. It is high time that Christians should be aroused out of their lethargy in this matter, for they have been indifferent too long.

In London, Dublin and other large towns conventions for holiness have been held, and the influence of them appears to have been most beneficial. The Conference lasted three days in London. Dr. George Osborn presided at several meetings, and an admirable president he was. Great in administrative talent, great in debate and great in finance, the venerable doctor has long occupied a leading position in the Conference. He is equally great in experimental matters, and his soul appeared to be steeped in a divine and heavenly influence. The Rev. William Arthur was present, but he has lost his voice and could not speak. He prepared an address, which was read by the Rev. T. Bowman Stephenson. It intensified the feeling of the meeting. He referred to the conversion of children, and at the close said: "They will, they will be converted." The Rev. George Olver at once rose and said: "Oh, I do like that closing sentence: 'They will, they will be converted!'" Mr. Olver is not an impulsive man, but cool, cultured and argumentative. I mention this incident to show the great and almost irresistible nature of the influence that pervaded the convention. Many laymen were present and took part in the proceedings; but at none of the meetings was a layman permitted to preside. Such meetings will elevate the spiritual tone of Christian life, and will no doubt stimulate ministers and people to greater efforts in "spreading scriptural holiness through the land."

OBSERVER.

NOVEMBER 27, 1875.

MR. BENJAMIN GINNING some time since presented the poor of the city of Liverpool with £200, upon which a wag wrote: "A good B. Ginning."

Emory College, Georgia.

From the following it will be seen that Dr. O. L. Smith has resigned the presidency of Emory College, and that Dr. Haygood succeeds him:

At a meeting of the board of trustees of Emory College, held at Griffin, Dr. O. L. Smith tendered his resignation as president. This action on his part was voluntary, and induced by his great desire to occupy a different position in the institution. His resignation was accepted, and complimentary resolutions were adopted expressing the warmest regard for him as a teacher, officer and Christian gentleman. The board proceeded to the election of the following members of the faculty:

Rev. A. G. Haygood, D. D., president and professor of mental and moral philosophy.

Rev. O. L. Smith, D. D., professor of Latin literature.

Rev. M. Calloway, D. D., professor of English literature.

The other chairs are, as heretofore, filled by Profs. Stone, Doggett and Bonnell, and H. W. Smith, academic department. This action of the board was unanimous, and it is believed will give general satisfaction to all the friends of Emory College.

The following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That this board has received the resignation of Dr. O. L. Smith with sentiments of increased esteem, if that were possible, of his character as a Christian gentleman, and of that true greatness of nature which makes man akin to the meek and lowly Savior.

Resolved, That he has exhibited a nobility of soul of which few men are capable, and has practically exhibited the teaching of the great apostle: "Let each think the other better than himself."

Resolved, That this board was not only well satisfied, but highly approved of his entire administration as president, and had he remained in that high office would have received our continued and undivided support.

Resolved, That our admiration, love and prayers follow him into the humbler position he has voluntarily chosen, and that in our hearts and minds he has already realized the truth of the Lord's word: "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

DR. SMITH'S RESIGNATION.

To the Board of Trustees of Emory College:

Four years ago I accepted at your hands the presidency of Emory College. I did so reluctantly, because I had always preferred to occupy a more humble position. The peculiar burdens and cares and responsibilities of high places have always been to me specially onerous and distasteful, and with increasing years they are increasingly so. Under a sense of duty I have held the place, and endeavored to do the work assigned me, nor have I until now seen the way open to a resignation of the trust committed to me. The time has now come when I may not only without damage, but with positive benefit to all interests involved, consult my own preference. I now tender you my resignation as president of Emory College. I may be permitted to express my sense of obligation to the board for the kindness and courtesy shown me, both personally and officially, in all my intercourse with them, trusting that under wise counsels, divinely dictated, still greater and richer blessings may rest on the college in the future than ever in the past. I am, dear brethren, as ever,

Yours fraternally,

O. L. SMITH.

TEMPERANCE SOCIETIES are declared beneficial to the rum-sellers by Mr. Schade, the official representative of the late Brewers' Congress in Cincinnati. Mr. Schade says to the brewers: "I regard the so-called temperance question simply as a political one. The handful of real temperance fanatics have never alone been able to injure you. They have ever been of benefit to you and your customers by absorbing into their societies many an incorrigible drunkard, who so often proves a pest to every well-regulated tavern and hotel. If they would confine themselves to converting all the old whisky topers who cannot control their passions into temperance men they ought to have, and I have no doubt they will have, your most hearty support!"

DR. ROBINSON, the president of the Brown University, says: "I must admit that, after an acquaintance and observation somewhat extended, I have reached the conclusion that we, as a denomination, have furnished more sons and daughters for other sects than any other denomination in this land. We have furnished fewer clergymen for other churches than any other sect. And not all of even these few were educated men. But to educate a Baptist layman, it is said, is to educate him out of his sect."

FROM AN ANGEL BOY.—Mr. Editor: Inclosed please find $1 for the cause of missions. It is the little sum which belonged to our angel boy, Dougie, whom God took to himself two months ago to-day; and, being his, we feel that it is sacred, and should be used only in a sacred cause. It is not much, but we send it, praying that it may aid in bringing life and light to some heathen child.—Yours truly,

MARY J. PARKER.

CHRIST'S BIRTH.

BY SIR MATTHEW HALE.

When the great lamp of heaven, the glorious sun,
Had touch'd this southern period, and begun
To leave the winter tropic, and to climb
The zodiac's ascending signs—that time
The brighter Sun of Righteousness did choose
His beams of light and glory to diffuse
O'er our dark lower world, and by that ray
To chase the darkness, and to make it day.
And lest the glorious and resplendent light
Of his eternal beam might be too bright
For mortal eyes to gaze upon, he shrouds
And clothes his fiery pillar with the clouds
Of human flesh, that in that dress he may
Converse with men, acquaint them with the way
To life and glory; show his Father's mind
Concerning them, how bountiful and kind
His thoughts were to them; what they might expect
From him in the observance or neglect
Of what he did require; and then he seal'd,
With his dear blood, the truth he had reveal'd.

Rev. Thomas Clinton.

MR. EDITOR: The death of this venerable man of God, on the twenty-eighth of October last, has been editorially noticed by you, with the expression of a hope that a suitable memorial of him would be prepared. In compliance with that wish, and at the request of his family, I propose to give a brief sketch of his life, labors and character in a series of articles for the ADVOCATE. My fitness for this office consists solely in the fact that, owing to the intimacy and brotherhood which existed between him and my late father, for most of their common lives, I am perhaps better acquainted with the incidents of his early career, and the peculiarities of his character, than any living person outside of his immediate family circle.

The military leader who dies in the arms of victory, or while the memory of his achievements is yet fresh in the minds of men, is buried with all the pomp and circumstance of war; the death of the successful statesman, in the midst of his labors and triumph, fills the land with mourning and with eulogy; but the great captain, or the distinguished civilian, who has long survived his day of activity and power, dies and makes no sign—"on a lone barren isle, in the midst of the ocean," is consigned in silence to an unmarked grave, or in some comfortless garret breathes his last sigh, without stirring the current of passing events. To a great extent is this true of that nobler army of heroes who fight the battles of the cross—of those embassadors of peace whose negotiations concern the interests of two worlds. Laid aside by age and infirmity, the companions and witnesses of his struggles and sacrifices one by one called away from his side, the superannuated itinerant sits in the shadow of his own great life, and overhears the verdict of posterity on his works, while he himself is forgotten and unseen by the passing throng. Such was the lot of the subject of this sketch. After a long service of labor and eminent success, he has been, for a number of years, on the worn-out list, retired from active participation in the enterprises of the church; the comrades of his youth and manhood each in his turn have laid down their shields and taken up their crowns; another generation, that knew him not, fill up the ranks and lead the charge, and the forgotten veteran, almost unnoticed, glides through the open pearly portal, before which he has so long waited.

Thomas Clinton was born in Philadelphia on the second of January, 1793. During the summer of the same year a terrible scourge of yellow fever visited that city, enveloping all ranks and classes of society in its funeral pall, and carrying dismay and death into almost every household. Among its victims were both the parents of the child, then scarcely six months old. A good Samaritan, named James Brady, found the helpless orphaned infant trying to draw sustenance from the breast of his dead mother. But little is known of his parents, except that their names were George and Mary, and that they were Methodists: Their death, in the midst of the terror and confusion of the great epidemic, rendered it impossible to ascertain who were his relatives, and Brady took charge of him and adopted him into his family. In 1800 he removed with the child to New York city, where they resided until 1804, when his guardian died, and he was again, at the age of eleven, left alone in the world. In after life he often spoke with gratitude and love of this kind protector of his helpless childhood. After the death of Brady the friendless boy fell into the hands of a ship's cook, who carried him to Charleston, S. C. There the cook soon died, and left him again alone in the world. He sought employment in a brick-yard, and in time learned the trade of a brick mason, and became a skillful workman.

His associations up to this period seem to have been with the Roman Catholics, as he had become fully imbued with that faith, insomuch that when about eighteen years old, being induced by some of his young companions to attend a Methodist meeting, he was so conscience-stricken that he vowed if he could get forgiveness for this grievous sin he would never attend another Protestant service. But, despite his efforts not to listen, the sword of the Spirit had entered his heart, and then commenced the convictions which ultimately led to that consecration to the service of his Master and usefulness to his fellow-men that characterized his after life. He, however, passed through a long and severe mental struggle, protracted for nearly seven years, before he gave up to be and do what God required of him. He was an earnest and sincere seeker after the truth, but was led through many sloughs of despond and by many doubting castles before he reached the wicket gate. He admired and loved the Methodist people; but they were despised and persecuted Nazarines, and he had a presentiment that if he joined them he would be called to preach, and to share the hardships and contumelies he saw them endure. As a specimen of the treatment he might expect in that line of duty, he saw on one occasion a mob take a Methodist preacher from his open-air pulpit, carry him to the town pump, and deluge him with water until he was nearly drowned—probably would have been but for a compassionate woman, who, touched with feminine pity, rushed in and crammed her shawl into the spout of the pump. He said he would often walk behind these devoted men just for the honor of treading in their footsteps, but was not willing to shoulder their heavy burden.

At one time he had some idea of joining the Episcopal Church, and had saved money enough to buy a pew; but it struck him as rather incongruous for a journeyman brick mason to be owning a pew in a fine church, and he was too proud to attend unless he paid his way. He then consorted for awhile with the Presbyterians, but could not bring himself to subscribe to their peculiar doctrines. He was finally driven from a church he was beginning to love by seeing the minister take a drink with his landlord before service.

After years of praying, fasting and hearing the word he at last gave up, and said he was willing to be or to do whatever was his Father's will. Then light and joy immortal burst in on his soul so vividly that he thought the room where he had been praying illuminated. He saw a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun, shining round about him. The spiritual eye was so dazzled with the radiant flood poured in upon it that he confounded it with physical vision. After this revelation he did not tarry long, nor was he disobedient unto the heavenly vision. He did not wait to go to college and get a smattering at Latin and Greek, and then to the theological seminary and learn to split dogmatic hairs between north and northeast side, but went at once, in obedience to the Master's bidding. After the fashion of those days, he was put to work at prayer meetings and class meetings, and in three months after his conversion he was licensed to preach and recommended to the Annual Conference.

The friend and spiritual guide of this period of his life, to whom he oftenest referred with love and veneration, was the Rev. George Daugherty, of the South Carolina Conference, the great grandfather of our own beloved and honored Bro. C. W. Carter.

Thomas Clinton was admitted on trial into the traveling connection in 1819, at a session of the South Carolina Conference held in Augusta, Ga. When the appointments were read out, Thomas Clinton and Thos. McIntyre were assigned to Cocnaker mission, in Alabama. Clinton stepped over to his colleague and asked: "Where is Cocnaker?" The reply, "Just over yonder, about eight hundred or a thousand miles," discloses the magnificent distances of the Annual Conferences of the early day. The two pioneers were soon in the saddle, and had taken up their line of march for their distant field of labor, Clinton giving the Bishop a sort of verbal power of attorney to look after his little funds invested in Charleston.

Their journey lay, for the most part, through the wilderness. For hundreds of miles they plodded on their weary way, through the melancholy-sobbing pine, going out they wist not whither, only that they were about their Master's work. How new and strange the scene and the life to one who had always lived in a city! But it was God's world, and he was God's child, doing his Father's will, and the thought quickly harmonized the discord. As they journeyed they beguiled the way with sweet converse of God and duty, and by songs of rejoicing. One day they overtook a negro man, of whom they asked: "Where are you going?" "To Alabama." "What for?" "Master is moving into a new country to get rich land, so he can make more money. Where you going, master?" "We are going to Alabama too." "What for?" "We are Methodist preachers, and are going there to preach the gospel." "H!" exclaimed the negro, and trotted off down the road. After riding a short distance the travelers overtook some emigrant wagons. As they passed one of the men called out: "Old woman, what did I tell you? The Methodist preachers will be there as soon as we are." Ever thus has the brave itinerant, with equal tread, kept pace with the advance of population, and has made the wilderness and the solitary place glad with the sound of the gospel.

After several weeks of hard riding the travelers reached their destination—one of the outposts of the army of observation. It was quarterly meeting. The congregation was assembled in the log church in the woods, when Clinton and McIntyre, with saddlebags on their arms, walked into the assembly. Thomas Griffin, the presiding elder, was already in the pulpit, and, intuitively recognizing the outfit, exclaimed: "Brethren, the Lord has sent us help. One of you come up here and preach." After preaching he said to them, with his characteristic abruptness: "If you have come here with an eye single to the glory of God, well; but if you have come either land-jobbing or wife-hunting, go back. I have no use for you. The country already stinks with speculating preachers."

The name of this great man, Thos. Griffin, has now almost faded from the memory of the church; but in his day and generation he was a power in the land, and contributed as much as almost any one man to the planting of Methodism in the Southwest. He was chiefly celebrated for his keen wit and scathing sarcasm, and for the tremendous power and eloquence with which he rebuked the besetting sins of the people. His fierce denunciations would make the boldest quail, and the most obdurate writhe under his lash. He was the very leader to inspire the new recruit with energy and zeal, and to teach him the tactics of border warfare.

Our Sunday School Periodicals.

A new broom sweeps clean—especially a new editorial broom. The new broom has swept away the old vignettes and title pages, and we have brand new ones. Well, they are neat and nice and—new. The new secretary goes about his business as to the manner born. We have already published his reasons for adopting the International texts. His salutatory is very modest. Here it is:

JUST A WORD.

"We shall not trouble our readers with a lengthy salutatory. Our election to the position of Sunday school secretary and editor was as unexpected to us as it possibly could be to any one in the church. We accepted, after much hesitation and earnest prayer to God for direction. Its labors and responsibilities are now upon us, and we shall simply do the best we can. The present month's periodicals have been prepared amidst the pressure of pastoral duties and the confusion incident to a change of residence. We hope to improve as we advance. We ask the prayers and the active co-operation of all who love the good work in which we are engaged."

He makes a beautiful reference to his excellent predecessor:

DR. HAYGOOD.

"The resignation of Dr. Haygood as Sunday school secretary and editor caused regret throughout the church. Well and faithfully has he labored in the cause of Sunday schools for the last five years and a half. His friends hoped he would long remain in a field he had cultivated with so much diligence; but a providential necessity compelled him to remove his residence from Nashville to a more southern climate. His wife's health demanded the change, and he yielded, as any Christian man would under the circumstances, to what was obviously an imperative duty. We trust he will be blessed in all his labors wherever, in the providence of God, his lot may be cast.

"We have been happy, ever since our first acquaintance, to number Dr. Haygood among our personal friends, and one for whom we felt more than ordinary attachment. He is a brother beloved. His kind and brotherly advice had much to do in leading us to accept the position we now occupy. We are encouraged in our new and difficult task by his words of sympathy and his promise of assistance."

Here are some other editorial notes which deserve regard. We copy them, not only to indicate the character of the periodicals, as they will be edited by the new secretary, but also to excite all our friends throughout the connection to promote their circulation.

THE LESSON PAPERS.

"These will be issued as heretofore, one for each Sunday in the month. We will endeavor to furnish some assistance to the student in learning the lesson by a brief analysis of the subject. Our object is to seize the salient points in the Scripture text chosen for the lesson, and so explain and illustrate them that their meaning may be easily apprehended. In order to do this effectually we will combine the topical and textual methods, using the one or the other as the nature of the subject may require.

"Our effort at present is, of course, tentative. We shall change or modify our plan as experience may suggest. Much depends upon the teacher, and we propose simply to aid him in his work, and not to do his work for him.

"The questions are not numerous, and are as simple as we can make them. They have their answers in the texts upon which they are based. The design of the questions is to elicit the moral instruction of the lesson, and fix the attention of the class upon that principally. We avoid many textual references as tending to confuse the mind of the pupil. The Golden Text is usually the key of the leading thought of the lesson. This we endeavor to develop clearly.

"It will also be seen that the questions are printed in large, clear type, and so arranged as to be easily caught by the eye. We hope this will facilitate their use by the teacher.

"The Expository Notes and Illustrative Readings are designed to elucidate the language of the text, and bring out its general meaning, without 'critical perplexities.' We shall leave to more skillful hands the treatment of 'knotty questions.' To illustrate and make plain 'the truth as it is in Jesus' is our only aim.

"We will print the text of the lesson in our next, with the analysis and questions. It will add much, we think, to the convenience of using the papers, and will help the pupil in learning the lesson. We expect also to furnish 'Home Readings'—that is, a list of such passages of Scripture as will be suitable for daily readings in the family, and in connection with the lesson.

OUR LITTLE PEOPLE.

"To prepare the sheets of this juvenile periodical is not the least difficult of our labors. In its use, especially with infant classes, we must depend upon the tact of the teacher. We will furnish the matter in as simple a form as possible, with such suggestive aids as we can devise, leaving the rest to the teacher. The lesson will be the same as that of the advanced classes, viz.: The International texts.

"The first page will be devoted to pictorial illustrations and simple stories. We shall endeavor to make it attractive to the children.

OUR CONTRIBUTORS.

"The present number of the Magazine is enriched by another of Dr. Lipscomb's valuable papers on 'A Sabbath with Jesus.' We need not characterize these beautiful contributions to our religious literature. They speak for themselves, and will command the admiration of every intelligent reader.

"Our readers will also be glad to see the name of Dr. Granbery among our contributors to the Magazine for this month. No man in the church enjoys a more enviable reputation as a writer and preacher. The doctor is kind enough to promise us frequent contributions from his pen.

"'A Trip in a Stage Coach,' by the Rev. W. Martin, will be read with pleasure. We hope to have many contributions from his facile pen.

"In the Sunday School Visitor the young people will see, to their great delight, their old and popular friend, Mrs. Martin, again. She has not forgotten them. 'Uncle John' also reappears with his entertaining talks. His subject this month is a good one. He promises to 'sharpen his pen' and give us more. Long may he flourish!'

OUR NEW DRESS.

"We are indebted to the good taste and artistic skill of our friends, Messrs. Spillers and Kirby, of the Publishing House, for the new and elegant dress in which we make our debut. They are gentlemen of superior skill in their departments. They have our thanks for the style in which all our Sunday school periodicals have been brought out the present month. We are sure our readers will be pleased with the mechanical execution, whatever they may think of the matter in our first numbers.

SUNDAY SCHOOL MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.

"We call the special attention of pastors and Sunday school superintendents to the 'Constitution of Sunday School Missionary Societies,' as published in this number of the Magazine. It was prepared by our missionary secretaries, and ought to be adopted in every Sunday school throughout the church. We are far behind in the matter of missionary contributions. We are doing comparatively nothing, while the whole world is open to our efforts. We shall refer to this subject again."

OBITUARIES.

GLENNIE N. LUNSFORD was born July 7, 1871, in Elmore county, Ala., and departed this life August 10, 1875, in Ellis county, Texas.

Glennie was always one of the most affectionate children we ever saw, and most deeply devoted to his parents, and it was his greatest pleasure to be doing something that would add to their pleasure. To his mother, who has for some time been in bad health, he was a real source of happiness. His sympathy was shown whenever she was suffering more than usual, often asking if she were better, and if he could not do something to relieve her headache.

His sickness (that of pernicious fever) was very brief, not lasting twenty-four hours; and when the disease had almost overcome his physical structure, and his spirit was about leaving its mortal tenement, he commenced singing: "I am going home, I am going home, to die no more," in the sweetest strain that I ever heard in my life. All who were present were impressed that it sounded like the song of an angel. No one who could have witnessed his death could have any doubt about God's being with the sweet little boy. Those of us present could almost imagine that we could see the angels as they came to carry his spirit to his God.

A FRIEND.

AT THE fourth quarterly meeting for the Camden circuit, Alabama Conference, M. E. Church South, a committee was appointed to prepare resolutions in reference to the death of Bro. A. R. A. PURIFOY, who died October 2, 1875. They submitted the following:

Whereas, Our Father in heaven has been pleased to call our brother and fellow-laborer, A. R. A. Purifoy, from his field of work to the reward of the faithful; therefore,

Resolved, That we deem the death of so able and devoted a minister of the gospel as Bro. Purifoy a bereavement to the church, and a deep loss to those with whom he was laboring in the gospel.

Resolved, That we submissively bow to the will of him who does all things well, having strong faith in the promise that all things work together for good to them that love God.

Resolved, That we heartily sympathize with Sister Purifoy and her two little boys, and also his aged mother and her sons and daughter, in their bereavement, and offer our prayers to the widow's God and the orphan's Father in their behalf, that they may be kept unto everlasting life.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Sister Purifoy and his aged mother, and to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, and that they be spread upon the minutes of this Quarterly Conference.

DEPARTED this life, November 7, 1875, near Freemore, La., DAVID N. MITCHELL, aged forty-five years and two months. The subject of this memoir was a member of the Baptist Church for many years before his death. He was not sectarian, but liberal and generous, loved and esteemed by all. His outward actions showed an inward grace. The writer never witnessed a more calm and deliberate resignation. It seems he had a presentiment of his death previous to his illness. All bright and glorious, he crossed over in triumph to join his little Lockey, who preceded him but a few months to the heavenly rest. He leaves behind a wife, three children and many friends to mourn his loss. His voice is no longer heard in our church in behalf of Zion's prosperity. His absence makes us feel poor, but heaven is doubtless enriched by his presence.

G. M. L.

LOCKEY JANE, daughter of David N. Mitchell, departed this life August 8, 1875, aged nine years, nine months and fifteen days. Like many others, the favorite one is taken. Lockey was a sprightly child, loved by all, and was a punctual member of the Sabbath school. She is missed, but doubtless has gained a crown by the transition.

G. M. L.

MRS. CATHERINE HUMPHREYS was born in Jefferson county, Miss., February 18, 1838. Her maiden name was Scott. She was married to Dr. Humphreys December 15, 1858. Dr. Humphreys was an officer in the Confederate army during the late war between the States, and fell before Port Hudson in 1863. In her widowhood, with the care of a family upon her hands, Mrs. Humphreys became more serious on the subject of religion than she had been in the earlier part of her life. She attended church regularly, and often spoke of joining, but did not do so till last August. It transpired that she was converted several years ago, but, neglecting to make a profession of her faith, she lost the joys of salvation. Now, however, renewing her covenant with God and uniting with his people, she was restored to his favor. For several years her health had been precarious, and as she descended to the tomb she grew more heavenly-minded. On the twenty-fourth day of October, 1875—the fourth Sabbath of the month—she departed this life, in good hope of everlasting life in heaven, where Sabbaths never end.

W. B. LEWIS.

MARY WALLACE BARR, wife of R. A. Gray, died at Alexandria, La., on the seventeenth of November, 1875.

Sister Gray was born in Pike county, Miss., on the eighteenth of December, 1854. The date of her conversion is not known; but under severe trial she kept the oil of grace in her heart, and when the Bridegroom came her lamp was burning and there was oil in the vessel. Her condition, when I knew of her sickness, was such as to render converse of no avail. She told Sister Graham that her house was in order, and that the summons would be welcome. She has gone! May we who live be ready when our Master calls. A stranger among us, and hardly known, she is now with friends, and, best of all, with the Friend and Redeemer of sinners.

CHRISTMAS.

BY SIR WALTER SCOTT.

And well our Christian sires of old
Loved when the year its course had roll'd
And brought blithe Christmas back again,
With all its hospitable train.
Domestic and religious rite
Gave honor to the holy night;
On Christmas eve the bells were rung;
On Christmas eve the mass was sung;
That only night in all the year
Saw the stoled priest the chancel rear.
The lamps shone o'er fair beauty's sheen;
The hall was deck'd with holly green;
Forth to the wood did merry men go
To gather in the mistletoe,
Then opened wide the baron's hall
To vassal, tenant, serf, and all;
Power laid his rod of rule aside,
And Ceremony doff'd his pride.
The heir, with roses in his shoes,
That night might village partner choose;
The lord, underogating, share
The vulgar game of "post and pair."
All hail'd, with uncontroll'd delight,
And general voice, the happy night
That to the cottage, as the crown,
Brought tidings of salvation down.

How a Sermon Grew.

Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost.—St. John vi, 12.

"Father, what is your text for next Sunday?"

The speaker was Julia Russell, who, seated on a low ottoman near the fireplace in her father's study, was busily sewing, while her father, the Rev. Dr. Russell, was slowly pacing up and down as much of the room as follos, pamphlets and other literary lumber, profusely scattered in every direction, left free for such exercise.

"Part of St. John vi, 12, my child," answered Dr. Russell: "Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost."

"Oh, but, father, you cannot draw anything out of that; it always seems to me as if that were one of those sayings which were only meant for once."

"You are mistaken, Julia," answered her father earnestly; "it is one of the most blessed, most comforting sayings of our blessed Lord. Every Christian should take it as one of his rules of life, good for every day and every hour."

Julia shook her head very decidedly; she could not understand it.

Her father considered a few moments, then said: "Julia, I shall not write my sermon until Saturday morning. Now I wish you to think about those words, and if you can discover any deeper meaning in them, or if you see any case in which you think they would bring comfort, make a note of it, and put it on that file," pointing, as he spoke, to a letter file which happened to be empty.

Julia promised, and just then a call of "Sister!" summoned her away.

The next morning, as she was dusting her father's study, Julia's attention was attracted by a small book, bound in red cloth, which lay on the very edge of the table, and which she was sure she had never seen before. She took it up and looked at it. The book was Keble's "Christian Year," a work which Bishop Doane's loving labors had just begun to make known to American churchmen, and which has since become so familiar a friend and companion to many a heart and soul.

The book opened of itself at a poem, the first lines of which:

"Will God, indeed, with fragments bear
Smatched late from the decaying year" struck Julia forcibly. "It is true," she thought, "we do give God but the fragments of our time, and too often the fragments of our love and thoughts." Perhaps our Savior gave us this command in pity to our weakness, thus encouraging us to give him what we can. I will make a note of this for father."

Later in the day the rector, coming into the sitting-room, found Julia, with a flushed face, stooping to pick up the pieces of a glass vase.

"Gathering up the fragments, Julia?" said the rector quietly.

"Yes, sir," returned Julia. "See, this beautiful vase is broken into bits, and nobody has done it, of course. It is too provoking."

"I am afraid there are some other fragments that need gathering up, Julia," said her father.

"You mean of my temper," returned Julia, blushing. "I was angry, I know; it does vex me so to have things broken through pure carelessness."

"Suppose," said her father, smiling, "I was to get angry every time some one arranges my table for me; do you think that would mend matters?"

Julia laughed a little consciously at this, for her instinctive love of order could not resist the temptation occasionally to "arrange" her father's table, a proceeding which always caused the good rector great distress, as, like many literary men, he dearly loved the order of disorder, which accumulates books, letters and pamphlets one upon another, in order to have all "at hand."

That evening another slip found its way to the file in the study.

Now that the clew had been given, instances multiplied, and each one as it came to notice was duly recorded and placed on the file.

Sunday morning came and Julia listened with eager interest, as the preacher, beginning with the words, "Amid the sayings of our blessed Lord there are some which may be distinguished as 'counsels of perfection,' as they are applicable to the most trivial acts of our daily life; to such a saying, my brethren, I would call your attention to-day," went on to speak of the careful mistress, who, while she goes about her daily task of watching over careless and often inefficient helpers, and of preventing the waste of the substance of which she is the steward, may ennoble all her labor by the thought that she is obeying her Master's command, and who, as long as she forgets not "to do good and distribute" as well, may hope for his approval; of the faithful Christians who live in the world, and from whom the cares of this life claim their due; of the pastor whose task is to gather in the fragments of Christ's flock; of the student, of the merchant, showing what need each and all have of this precept. "And you, ye mourners," he said, "from whom that has been taken which was the light of your eyes and the joy of your existence, you too have need to gather up the fragments. Take care that your broken life be not a lost life. Your earthly joy is gone, the happiness that was yours but a little while ago has vanished like a dream; nevertheless, gather up what remains of your life and present it to him who gave you being, humbly praying that he who willeth that nothing be lost will graciously show you what he will have you to do." Julia noticed that at these words a lady in deep mourning, a stranger evidently, who sat in a pew near the rector's, suddenly drew her veil closer, and during the rest of the sermon, to which she listened with fixed attention, sat with head bowed.

After the service there was found among the offerings a bill of more value than had ever before been seen in the alms-basin of St. John's in the Wilderness, and folded within a slip of paper on which was written: "From a mourner who asks the prayers of those whom this may aid, that she may receive aid to 'gather up the fragments' of her life."—M. D., in the Churchman.

Unaccomplished Purposes.

The unfinished works of builders of another kind—the monuments of which they never could write "Ex egi"—the grand fragments of poetry, history and romance which lie before us, are still more touching, for death has closed the account. What noble purposes are here unaccomplished! Think of the unfinished poems of Shelley and Keats—of what they might have done had they not been cut off in the flower of their youth! Think of that great history which Macaulay was to have brought down to a period "within the memory of living men"—how the greatest of the land sorrowed with a not unselfish sorrow when they saw all that was mortal of that brilliant historian lowered into the vaults of the old abbey, the great desire of his life unfulfilled! Think of the sudden close, in the midst of their work, of the careers of those two great novelists who were delighting us, from month to month, with their humor and their pathos! Tidings of the death of Thackeray came to me through a newspaper placard on entering a market town in Somersetshire; and the death of Charles Dickens startled me in the same way as I was being driven through a townlet in Wales. I was taking a brief holiday on each occasion, and truly it may be said that I went on my way "a sadder and a wiser man." Each has left behind him a monument of an unaccomplished purpose—the one in "Dennis Doane," the other in "Edwin Drood." Was it for evil or for good? Was it better or worse for their memories that they died thus suddenly in the fullness of their fame—I mean for their reputation's sake? I do not think that any one had cause to write with respect to them those dreadful words: "Falling off." Yet it must come to all of us, some day, if we outlive the maturity of our powers. I have fifty volumes of Sir Walter Scott's novels on my book shelves—I could not put my finger on the volume whence the decline of power is to be counted. I think it would be rather early in the series, though there is nothing finer than the "Talisman," which now, in an operatic form, is the delight of the musical world. Still it is sad to think of his last days—of so eminently healthy an intellect in its youth, and its maturity coming to what it did at the last—those sad, servile attempts not wholly to forsake the old craft—not to confess the victory of age. I remember, many years ago, in the city of London, often to have seen a venerable, gray-bearded old man, apparently almost blind, turning about in a vacant sort of a way the handle of an empty barrel organ, which produced never a sound. Men's hearts soon get hardened in large towns by repeated impositions, and it is difficult to discern rightly between the reality and the sham. But, looking at it in its worst aspects, it was to me an exceedingly touching piece of acting. It brought many pennies and "four-penny bits" into the old man's palm. He was clinging to the old craft; he thought he was producing harmonious sounds out of that empty box. He seemed to be quite crazed. What his history was I never learned. But I thought of the many sad spectacles that I had seen in the course of my life, of which this soundless organ reminded me—of the broken down actors, singers, authors, of the old beaux living upon by-gone fascinations, the old diners-out on their old jests, and still thinking themselves irresistible. I was present at the last appearance of Edmund Kean on the stage—and a very painful thing it was. It is better, therefore, I think, that, at least as far as his own reputation is concerned, a great genius should be stricken down in the fullness of his work, with many unaccomplished purposes to his account. In all our English poetry there are no sadder lines than these:

From Marlborough's eyes the tears of dotage flow,
And Swift expires a driveler and a show.

But, apart from these great historical monuments of unaccomplished purposes, think, too, of the number of smaller unaccomplished literary purposes discharged into the great "limbo of vanities." For any man of active imagination to write all the books that he has purposed to write he must live twice over the longest life of the antediluvian period. Histories, philosophies, dramas, poems, romance, essays, whole libraries of a most comprehensive character—conceived, sketched out—written, indeed, "all but the chapters," and in no few instances many of the chapters actually written. Who, after a long literary life, exploring the contents of old drawers, boxes, baskets, portfolios, etc., does not come across unfinished manuscripts—"essay, poem or romance"—put aside under stress of more important business and forgotten, or never returned to for lack of time.—Cornhill Magazine.

A RAKE'S PROGRESS—Through a quantity of weeds.

The Jews

Some curious and in some respects surprising particulars have lately been collected and published in a French paper respecting the Jews. Although the Israelites hold such an important place in trade, commerce and finance, and are to be met with in every quarter of the world, it appears that they are to be found in least numbers in some of the most commercial countries, and in most numbers in some of the least prosperous and enterprising States. Moreover, widely as they are scattered, and numerous as they appear to be, it seems from the statistics in question that the census of the whole race falls short of five millions of souls.

In France, where there exists little or none of the stupid and barbarous prejudice against the Jews which prevails in some countries, and where one would think there was a wide field for the peculiar talents of the race, there are only forty-six thousand Jews. In all America, apparently a still more favorable country, there are only one hundred and twenty thousand Israelites. On the other hand, in wretched, unprosperous and down-trodden Poland the Jews are to be found in greatest number, one out of every seven of the inhabitants being a Hebrew. One can understand that there should be few Jews in Spain, but it is surprising that they should be almost as rare in Belgium. In Sweden there are comparatively few Jews; but they abound in Hamburg, Austria and Roumania in the proportion of one to every twenty-four inhabitants. In Hamburg and Austria there is abundant employment for their talents, but in Roumania there cannot be any great scope for their commercial and financial instincts. Ireland is always boasted of as being the only country in the world in which the Jews were never persecuted—and, indeed, whether at home or abroad, the Irish always manifest a certain respect for the Israelites—but Ireland has hardly had the opportunity of persecuting the race, for even at the present day there are not three hundred Jews in the whole country. Norway stands lowest after Ireland on the list, there only being twenty-five Jews in that country.

An interesting addition to these statistics (if it were possible to secure it) would be the amount of wealth in the hands of the less than five millions of Jews that abide upon, if they do not inherit, the earth. Considering the enormous wealth possessed by only a few well-known individuals of the race, such a return would doubtless show a high average per head.

GREAT BELLS OF THE WORLD.—The great bell of Moscow, called the Tsar Kolokol, or King of Bells, is the largest in the world. It is 19 feet 3 inches high, and measures around its margin 69 feet 9 inches. It is estimated to weigh 483,772 pounds, and the metal in it is valued at more than $300,000. The bells of China rank next in size to those of Russia, but are much inferior to them in form and tone. In Peking, it is stated by Father LeCompte, there are 7 bells, each weighing 120,000 pounds. One in the suburbs of the city is, according to the testimony of many travelers, the largest suspended bell in the world. It is hung near the ground, in a large pavilion, and to ring it a huge beam is swung against its side. A bell taken from the Dakon pagoda at Rangoon was valued at $80,000. Among the bells recently cast for the new House of Parliament, the largest weighs 14 tons. The next largest bell in England was cast in 1845 for York Minster, and weighs 27,000 pounds, and is 7 feet 7 inches in diameter. The Great Tom, of Oxford, weighs 17,000 pounds, and the Great Tom, of Lincoln, 12,000 pounds. The bell of St. Paul's, in London, is 9 feet in diameter, and weighs 11,500 pounds. One placed in the Cathedral of Paris, in 1680, weighs 38,000 pounds. One in Vienna, cast in 1711, weighs 40,000 pounds; and in Olmutz is another weighing about the same. The famous bell called Susanne, of Erfurt, is considered to be of the finest bell metal, containing the largest proportion of silver; its weight is about 30,000 pounds; it was cast in 1497. At Montreal, Canada, is a larger bell than any in England, weighing 29,400 pounds; it was imported in 1843 for the Notre Dame cathedral. In the opposite tower of the cathedral is a chime of 10 bells, the heaviest of which weighs 6,613 pounds, and their aggregate weight is 21,869 pounds.

THE DRUNKARD'S PATH.—One fine summer evening, as the sun was dropping into the west, a man was seen trying to make his way through the lanes and cross roads which led to his village home. I say "trying," because although he knew the way perfectly, and had traveled it, man and boy, for the last thirty years, yet that night he was confused and bewildered. Do you ask: "By what?" His flushed face and unsteady gait told the sad tale—drink.

Utterly puzzled, he called out with an oath to a passer-by: "I've lost my way. Where am I going?"

"To hell!" was the answer, sadly and quietly given.

A savage glare instantly sparkled in the drunkard's eyes; but after a moment or two, with a groan, he murmured: "I think I am."

"Come with me," said the other, kindly. "I'll take you home."

The next day came; the fumes of the liquor had passed away; but the two words by which his friend had answered him were striving in his heart. The arrow of conviction, launched by the Spirit's power, had struck home. "To hell! Yes, 'tis true, I'm going straight to hell, and I know it. O God, save me."

That man faced about; he was going straight to hell, as he said. But he truly repented of his sin, sought pardon and peace through Christ, and set himself on the way toward life.

WILLIE was disputing with his sister. "It is true," he said firmly; "for mother says so, and if she says so it is so, if it ain't so."

Religious Intelligence.

—According to the latest statistics of the Universalists of this country they have 37 State Conventions, 647 ministers and 30,905 members.

—The first meeting of the Alliance of the Reformed Churches Throughout the World, Holding the Presbyterian System, will be held in Edinburg in July, 1876.

—The Home Missionary Society of the United Presbyterian Church has stations in most of the Western States and on the Pacific coast. In the year 1874 $35,000 were raised for this work.

—What Emperor William and the Italian King will think about Ultramontanism, at their recent pleasant interview together, perhaps the "prisoner at the Vatican" may not quite like. The world moves.

—Rev. Mr. Wright, a Baptist evangelist of London, is equal to all emergencies. He has made a movable baptistry, which he carries about in the tent in which he preaches. Recently he immersed forty persons in it.

—The evangelical ministers of Ireland have resolved not to let the revival movement inaugurated by Messrs. Moody and Sankey pass away. A convention was held in Dublin on the twenty-second of October to devise methods whereby the work of awakening the great bulk of the people to a living interest in Christianity may be maintained.

—Notwithstanding the fact that missionary work at Acapulco, Mexico, was broken up by the murder of Mr. Stephens, and has not yet been resumed, zealous work has been carried on in neighboring towns, and several churches have been organized by Mr. Diaz, who at the time of the murder of Mr. Stephens was wounded. Mr. Diaz hopes soon to return to Acapulco.

—The Independent says: "The annual contribution of $5,000 from the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh has recently been received by the United Presbyterian mission in Egypt, in one of whose schools the Maharajah's wife was educated. For eleven years this gift has come to the mission, and by this time it has become the very substantial tribute of $55,000 to the value of the wife in whose honor it is given on each anniversary of the wedding-day."

—The Madura mission, Southern India, is doing a great work in the field of its operations. Additions are constantly made to their number, and a Brahmin youth of promise has recently been converted. Rev. Mr. Kendall writes: "The great work now in progress in Great Britain, under the direction of Mr. Moody, stimulates us here. Every account of revivals in England and America stirs us up to more diligent effort. May we soon see the power of God manifest from on high. We are now in the midst of the great annual Hindoo festival in honor of the goddess Meruteki. One hundred thousand persons have come from all parts of Southern India to attend this festival, and will return with some definite idea of Jesus, the only Lord and Savior."

—An English religious paper (the Christian) says: "Egypt is opening in a most remarkable manner to the gospel. Calls for missionary labor come from all directions, and the missionaries are greatly overworked. The Coptic converts are exceedingly active and successful. Eight candidates from the Theological Seminary were recently licensed, and one native pastor has been appointed. A new and more literal version of the Psalms is passing through the press. The schools are doing a great work. They have in all 1,170 pupils, of whom 642 are males and 528 females. It is expected that these successful labors among the Copts will produce a powerful effect on the Mohammedans, who are not altogether inaccessible, and some of whom are already feeling the influence of the gospel.

—Holston district, East Tennessee, seems to be a stamping ground for ecclesiastical moss-troopers. We have previously recorded the mutual recriminations between Presbyterians, North and South, about some churches which one party or the other has stolen or tried to steal; and now comes the similar difficulty between the two Methodisms. At Greenville a Southern Methodist Episcopal church was sold at auction on a lien held against it, and was bought in the interest of most of the families who had gone over to the Northern Church. They had spent $500 in repairs, when the courts gave it over on some claim to the Southern Methodists again. Then the Northern Methodists built a new church, and fondly hoped they were out of trouble, but were astonished to find that they are held for rent of the old church, and an attachment is now put on the new one, which is liable to be sold for the payment.

RELIGION AND EDUCATION IN PALESTINE.—A brief statement, translated for the American Lutheran from the Lutheran Kirchenfreund, gives an encouraging account of the progress of religion in the Holy Land, in response to the efforts of Dr. Tobat. Fourteen hundred children, it seems, are receiving religious instruction in the schools. The congregation at Jerusalem consists of 400 persons, and a growing Arabian evangelical congregation is also ministered to there by pastor Klein. There is a hospital under the management of deaconesses where 800 patients are annually treated, and in another institution over 100 are religiously educated. The number of inhabitants at Bethlehem has increased to 6,000, and there are 100 children in the Lutheran schools who are making commendable progress. The congregation at Nazareth, and the congregations and schools at Basilda, Nablus, Zebabdeh, Burten, Nandeh and Lydda, give the encouraging news that the number of native Protestants has increased to 1,000. A German colony from Wurtemberg, numbering 600, have settled near around Jerusalem for the purpose of agricultural pursuits, and are making progress.—Christian Intelligencer.

Our Young People.

A VISIT FROM SANTA CLAUS.

A jolly old fellow, whose hair is snow-white,
And whose little bright eyes are blue,
Will be making his visits on Christmas night;
Perhaps he will call upon you.

A funny old mouse has this funny old man,
(You can tell what it is, no doubt;)
He creeps down the chimney as fast as he can
And then just as swiftly creeps out.

His plump cheeks are rosy as red cherries ripe;
His nose, too, is red as can be;
You may smell now and then the smoke of his pipe,
But his face you never may see.

He carries a bag full of sweetmeats and toys,
And leaves them wherever he goes,
For the good little girls and good little boys—
So hang up your little white hose!

Little Folks.

Santa Claus and His Dealings with Bobbie.

Bobbie Young was a fine little fellow, on the whole, although he was spoilt by being the least little bit in the world selfish. He was the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Young, so there was a little excuse for it. He lived up in the north of Yorkshire, in a nice house in a town. In winter Bobbie always enjoyed himself very much, for he used to slide and snowball, and go to pantomimes and parties; but the night to which all his hopes and fears were directed, for at least a month before it came; was Christmas-eve, for then Santa Claus used to put in Bobbie's stocking all the things that Bobbie wished for. Oh! the delight on the next morning of disgorging the well-fed stocking of sundry articles—balls, tops, skates, sweets, and everything nice! Bobbie used to be in a good temper all day long on Christmas day. And this had happened ever since Bobbie was three years old, and had first discovered a lovely punch waiting for him. Now one Christmas eve Bobbie was making fun of the little kitchen maid, Betsy, who had only been a short time there. She, poor little thing, was dreadfully troubled with chilblains, and hobbled about in her "holey old shoes," as Bobbie called them, looking very miserable. She was looking forward to no Santa Claus (in fact, had that gentleman been benevolently disposed toward her, his intentions would have been frustrated effectually by the large holes in her old worn-out stockings,) and much as she wanted to write to her old mother she could not, because no one had even taught her how to write. Her poor eyes were full of tears when Bobbie came into the kitchen "for fun," as he said. He hobbled about just like Betsy, until cook said she was ill with laughing, and that "shure it wor as like Betsy's walk as two peas." Finally papa, hearing a great noise below, ordered Master Bob to bed, adding: "The boy is so full of spirits about Santa Claus that he can't keep still."

When Bobbie went to sleep he dreamed a fearful dream. He thought that an old man came down the chimney—Santa Claus, in fact. In one hand he carried a bag full of toys of all kinds, another large bag was over his shoulders, trumpets and drums and punches were suspended from all parts of his body, and upon his head was a three-cornered red cap. In the other hand, however, he carried the rod that turns red when Santa Claus is angry—i. e., when he goes into the room of naughty little folks, and, alas for Bobbie's hopes, the rod turned a most brilliant scarlet! The little man stepped briskly across the room to Bobbie's stocking, hung up just where every one could see it, and consulted with himself in a loud whisper:

"This must be a greedy little fellow; he hangs his stocking so that I can't possibly miss it. Well, never mind; every child does that." And Santa Claus was just popping into the stocking a lovely little brass cannon, just what Bobbie wanted, when unfortunately he glanced at the rod, which turned a still more vivid red. "Ah!" said Santa Claus, "that's because he teased that poor Betsy about her chilblains. But I'll serve him out! He shall have some as well as Betsy." And he picked out some large red lumps, chilblains, in fact, put them into the stocking, and suddenly disappeared up the chimney, while Bobbie lay transfixed with surprise.

When he awoke next morning, so vivid did last night's occurrence appear that he half expected to find some chilblains in his stocking; and he ran to see if it were really so. Imagine his horror! the stocking was empty! Our hero sat down upon the bed, and sobbed as if his heart would break. But he thought that if he were not dressed in time mamma or papa would come, and then he should be teased for being such a baby as to cry because his stocking was empty.

So he prepared right manfully to put on the stockings. But oh! when one foot got to the bottom there was something gave it such a bump—cold, round and hard. Bobbie screamed so loudly that papa and mamma rushed in from their room.

"What is the matter, love?" said mamma.

"The—the—chilblains," gulped out her hopeful son, pulling out his foot as though a serpent had stung him. But the foot had nothing the matter with it, and so he turned the stocking cautiously inside out, when lo! out rolled a bright new sovereign.

"There, Bob," said papa, "we thought you were too old for toys, so you may spend that just as you like, my boy; but what is the matter? What makes you so sad?"

Then out came the history of the dream, and how Bobbie had thought that the something cold in the stocking was a miserable chilblain, such as Betsy had. And papa talked to Master Bob about his unkind teasing with such effect that soon after breakfast the sovereign was spent in some boots and stockings and warm things for the poor girl, who quite forgave Master Bob all his tricks, and cried with joy and pride when she saw herself thus arrayed. And that very night Bobbie wrote, in large round hand, a letter for Betsy to her mother, and also began to teach Betsy herself the mysteries of pothooks. So, after all, she had reason to be thankful for Santa Claus' visit to Bobbie.—Little Folks.

Mince Pies and All About Them.

BY ELEANOR STREDDER.

Among the pleasant things which custom has associated with the Christmas season, the never-to-be-forgotten mince pie is really the most significant of them all; although in its present shape we can hardly see any connection between this little piece of pastry and the actual birth hour of the infant Christ.

To find out why it was and how it was the mince pie became associated with the greatest event the world has ever seen we must trace its history. Then we shall discover a long while ago the mince pie used to be called a mince crotch. Now crotch is a word that has dropped out of our language, but as we still keep "pot," "cradle" and "crutch," it is easy to see it is an older Saxon word from which these three have sprung. We all remember the mother of our Savior had no soft warm cradle wherein to lay her precious first-born, for the wise men found him

"In a rude manger laid to rest
From off her virgin breast"

In the far-away East, where the Bible tells us "their strength is to stand still," there has been very little change in the common things of every-day life since the time of Joseph and Mary. We find the traveler in the caravansary, or inn, as the gospels call it, still taking his rest beside the beasts of burden; and the manger, out of which the oxen and camels are feeding, is just the same sort of hole scooped in the earthen floor, not very deep, but oval in shape, so that when it was filled with the fresh dry fodder it was undoubtedly the most comfortable nook in the desolate caravansary where the new-born child could be laid to sleep. It is this Eastern manger, where the infant Christ was cradled, that the mince pie or "Christ crotch" was made to represent. Even now, in some old country houses, we might still find among the disused belongings of pantry and kitchen some of the odd little oval shapes in which the true old-fashioned mince pie was always made.

There is a receipt for mince meat said to have been used in the royal kitchen of Richard the Second. It was an established custom then, so there is no doubt left that the Christmas pie is an heirloom from the old crusading days, when many a red-cross knight returned to his baronial hall to die, and the weary-footed pilgrim, who had actually gazed upon the holy sepulcher, came back with his scallop-shell and palmer's staff to the friends of his childhood, to tell of that wondrous land where Christ was born. So that the English housewife in those early days knew many things about the East of which later generations were in ignorance. How carefully they treasured every relic from those sacred shores when so very few could read and fewer still could write! The people wanted something that could be seen and handled to make them realize the Bible's story. It was a rude kind of object-teaching, in its way, although it grew to idol-worship in the end. It was in this spirit the mince pie was added to the Christmas feast; and there is a deep and beautiful meaning in thus reminding every Christmas guest of the manger-cradle in which the hope of the whole world once lay sleeping.

So, in contrast to the bitter herbs with which the passover cake of the Jews was eaten, the little crotch was filled with the sweetest and the best the housewife of those primitive days could command. The fruit and the meat, the honey and the spice—for honey took the place of sugar then—all blended together to form that union of opposites we call mince meat. The top was afterward covered with a thin crust for the convenience of eating. I am afraid we should not know how to manage our dinner at all if our knives, forks and plates were taken away. In those old times they were too rare and too expensive for daily use. Few households had more than one or two for the master and his most honored guests; as for the rest, the loaf was cut into thick rounds, which were called trenchoirs, and on these the roast meat was laid. A finger-piece cut from the edge of the trenchoir served for a spoon, and most of the men used the knife they carried in their belt. We should think it a great waste to use bread in this way, for no one thought of eating up their trenchoir when the meat was over—these were gathered together and given to the poor; but the Christ crotch could be taken in the hand like a cake.

There is another saying about mince pies which one often hears: "So many different mince meats as one may taste at Christmas, so many happy months may one look forward to in the new year." The origin of the Christ crotch will help us to discover the true meaning of this curious superstition. As the promises of the world's future rested with the new-born infant in the Bethlehem manger, the very memory of which should fill our hearts with gladness and rejoicing, so by the association of ideas the little crotch became significant of all the germs of hope and promise that may gladden the dawning of the new-born year; and the more we sympathize in each other's joys the greater will our own become.

"Joy is an import, joy is an exchange,
Rich fruit, heaven-planted, never plucked by one."
Little Folks.

A PHILADELPHIA MAN has discovered that a house may be heated by reflection. We hail the discovery with joy, and hope to see the time when every man may sit down and reflect a few burning thoughts to warm up his domicile for the day, and then go down town and dance a jig of exultant defiance before the office door of the starving coal dealer.

FOUND a boy sufficiently and he will become a simple-ton.

The Christian Anniversary.

The birth of Christ is again to be noted in the calendar of the year. Christianity has finished another of its years, and we are this much nearer the final consummation. More than eighteen centuries have been numbered since that wonderful birth. It was to mankind the discovery of a new world of light and truth. In Christ's birth there was a new birth of the human race, and the beginning of a new life for all the ages. The power of Christ was never so manifest as now. His doctrines, his example, his regal authority, are more universally felt than at any time since the advent. This birthday of the Redeemer will be celebrated in all parts of the world. In every continent and on nearly every island of the sea people will devoutly recognize the day and adore the Savior. Each revolving year adds to the number of his worshipers, and the time is not distant when all the tribes of earth shall join in the refrain of the angelic song: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." For our own profitable meditation, and that of our readers, we give some reflections of Dr. William Hanna on the nativity:

By the manner of his entrance into this world Christ hath dignified the estate of infancy, has hallowed the bond which binds the mother to her new-born child. He, the great Son of God, stooped to assume our humanity. He might have done so at once—taken it on him in its manhood form. The second Adam might have stood forth like the first, no childhood passed through. Why did he become an infant before he was a man? Was it not, among other reasons which may suggest themselves, that he might consecrate that first of human ties, that earliest estate of human life? The grave, we say, has been hallowed—has not the cradle also—by Christ's having lain in it?

By the humiliation of his birth he stripped the estate of poverty of all reproach. Of all who have ever been born into this world he was the only one with whom it was a matter of choice in what condition he should appear. The difference, indeed, between our highest and our lowest—between a chamber in a palace and a manger in a stable—could have been but slight to him; yet he chose to be born in the stable and to be laid in the manger. And that first stage of his earthly life was in keeping with all that followed. For thirty years he depended on his own or others' labor for his daily bread; for three years more he was a houseless, homeless man, with no provision but that which the generosity of others supplied. "The foxes had holes, and the birds of the air had nests; but he had not where to lay his head." And has not that life of his redeemed poverty from all disgrace—has it not lifted it to honor?

As we bend in wonder over the infant Savior we learn the difference between the inferior and higher forms of an earthly greatness. On that night when Christ was born what a difference was there in all outward marks of distinction between that child of the Hebrew mother as he lay in his lowly cradle and the Augustus Cesar whose edict brought Mary to Bethlehem as he reposed in his imperial palace! And throughout the life-times of the two there was but little to lessen that distinction. The name of the one was known and honored over the whole civilized globe; the name of the other scarce heard of beyond the narrow bounds of Judea. And when repeated there it was too often as a by-word and a reproach. How stands it now? The throne of the Cesars, the throne of mere human authority and power, has perished. That name, at which nations trembled, carries no power over the spirits of men. But the empire of Jesus, the empire of pure, undying, self-sacrificing love, will never perish; its sway over the conscience and hearts of men, as the world grows older, becomes ever wider and stronger. "His name shall be honored while sun and moon endure; men shall be blessed in him; all nations shall call him blessed. This world owes an infinite debt to him, were it for nothing else than this: that he has so exalted the spiritual above the material—the empire of love above the empire of power.

Again we bend over this infant as he lies in that manger at Bethlehem, and, as we do so, strange scenes in his after life rise upon our memory. Those little tender feet, unable to sustain the infant frame, are yet to tread upon the roughened waters of a stormy lake as men tread the solid earth! At the touch of that little feeble hand the blind eye is to open, and the tied tongue to be unloosed, and diseases of all kinds are to take wings and flee away! That soft, weak voice, whose gentle breathings in his infant slumbers can scarce be heard, is to speak to the winds and the waves, and they shall obey it; is to summon the dead from the sepulcher, and they shall come forth! Who, then, and what was he whose birth the angels celebrated in such high strains? None other than he of whom Isaiah, anticipating the angels, had declared: "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." It was he, the word, who was from the beginning with God, and who was God; who was thus made flesh, and came to dwell among us. This is, in truth, the central fact or doctrine of our religion; the mystery of mysteries; the one great miracle of divine, everlasting love. Admit it, and all the other wonders of the Savior's life become not only easy of belief, they appear but the natural and suitable incidents of such a history as his. Deny it, and the whole gospel narrative becomes an inexplicable enigma. The very heart of its meaning taken out of it, you may try to turn it into a myth or fable if you please; but a credible story it no longer is. No; not credible even in that part of it into which nothing of the supernatural enters. Christ was either what he claimed to be, and what all those miraculous attestations conspire to establish that he was; he was either one with the Father, knowing the Father as the Father knew him, doing whatever the Father did—so direct and full a revelation of the Father that it could be truly said that he who had seen him had seen the Father likewise—or his character for simplicity and honesty and truthfulness stands impeached, and the whole fabric of Christianity is overturned.

Let those angels teach us in what light we should regard the birth of Christ, the advent of the Redeemer. They counted it as glad tidings of great joy that they gave forth when they announced that birth; they broke forth together in exulting praises over it, as glorifying to God in the highest, as proclaiming peace on earth, as indicating good will toward men. In that good will of God to us in Christ let us heartily believe; into that peace with God secured to us in Christ let us humbly yet gratefully enter. Those glad tidings of great joy let us so receive as that they shall make us joyful, that so Christ may be glorified in us on earth, and we be glorified with him throughout eternity!

Mississippi Conference.

This is the sixtieth session. The Conference was held in Canton, the daily sessions being in the Methodist church. Bishop Paine arrived on Tuesday, but a dispatch from home, informing him that his son-in-law had been dangerously wounded, and requesting his immediate presence, led him to return on the same day that he reached Canton. Conference was opened at nine o'clock on Wednesday morning, December 15. Rev. J. G. Jones was called to the chair, and the usual religious exercises were conducted by him. Rev. W. H. Watkins, D. D., was elected president. Dr. Watkins is an excellent presiding officer, and affairs moved on satisfactorily. Rev. C. G. Andrews, D. D., the patient and always courteous secretary for these many years, was of course re-elected. He had also the same experienced staff that has been in the service ever since we have been visiting the Conference, to wit: Rev. J. A. B. Jones, assistant secretary; John T. Cameron, Esq., recording secretary; Rev. J. J. Smylie, statistical secretary. The attendance was good at the beginning, and by the last of the week nearly every member was in his place. On Friday morning Bishop Marvin was in the chair, and presided during the balance of the session. Dr. Redford, our book agent, was present during the first three days, waking up a new interest in our publishing affairs by his addresses and intercourse with the preachers, and also preaching to the general profit of the people. Dr. R. A. Young was present throughout the session, preaching three times, making a missionary address, and doing a large business in the way of interest notes for the theological department of Vanderbilt. On Saturday morning at eleven o'clock the venerable John G. Jones delivered a semi-centennial sermon. It was largely autobiographical and historical, replete with entertaining facts and personal recollections of Methodism in Mississippi and the Southwest. We are glad to be able to say that Bro. Jones, though a little infirm, enjoys pretty good health, and that he preaches with the unction and power of other days. His is a serene and happy old age. Three volumes of his history of Methodism are already written and awaiting publication. A fourth volume, we believe, is under way, and will complete the work. This history should by all means be published, and as soon as possible. After the sermon Bro. Jones presented and read the memoir of Thomas Clinton and William McCormick, two venerable superannuated preachers who have died this year. The sketch of Father Clinton was specially admirable. This venerated patriarch was one of the noblest types of the Methodist itinerant. He was born in 1793, and had preached the gospel fifty-six years. The preaching during the week at the Baptist and Methodist churches was well attended. On Sunday the Baptist and Presbyterian churches were filled by Conference appointments. The eleven o'clock service for the Methodist church was transferred to a large, public hall, and this failed to accommodate the multitude that thronged to hear Bishop Marvin. There was a mass meeting of the Sunday schools in the Methodist church at nine o'clock A. M., and addresses were delivered by President Adkisson, of East Mississippi Female College, and by Rev. Dr. Marshall, of Vicksburg. Dr. Marshall also delivered the discourse at ordination of elders at three P. M. Sunday was a high day in Canton. Think of it! Marvin, Marshall, Young, all in a row, and very fair sermons elsewhere. The Conference proceedings were harmonious; the preachers never more cheerful and devoted to their work. There has been improvement in almost every respect, and since the war the prospects of the Conference have not been so bright as at the present. We left Canton on Monday morning, and were unable, for some reason, to obtain satisfactory statistics. About $200 were raised at the missionary anniversary on Saturday night. Over $2,500 has been raised for foreign missions. Admitted on trial: Malachi B. Sharbrough, Daniel W. McLean, Harry B. Denham, Green W. Brown, William D. Dominick. Remaining on trial: Vernon H. Nelson, Beverly Carradine, T. W. Adams, Charles J. Phillips, Joseph Q. Hicks, Charles W. Reid, Curtis D. Cecil, William W. Hopper, Thomas Cotton, George W. Davidson, Rutlin T. Davis. Admitted into full connection: Daniel C. Langford, Thomas B. Holloman, Charles R. Benson, Duncan A. Little, Alexander McBryde, Albert T. Tidwell, John W. Richey, Lewis R. Featherstun. The superannumted are: J. G. Jones, Barnabas Pipkin, William Spillman, Joseph Nicholson, J. G. Higginbotham, Levi Pearce, H. Copeland, James Long, Jesse McKay, William Flun. Deacons ordained: Daniel C. Langford, Thomas R. Holloman, Duncan A. Little, Lewis R. Featherstun, Benjamin L. Spruille. Elders ordained: James J. Smylie, Ulysses B. Phillips, David A. Given. The Conference probably adjourned on Tuesday. Appointments next week.

Louisiana Conference.

The thirtieth session of the Louisiana Annual Conference was held in the Carondelet Street church, New Orleans, Bishop McTyeire presiding. Conference opened at nine A. M. on Wednesday, December 15, and adjourned on Monday at two o'clock P. M. We were absent, much to our regret, but the reports from the brethren represent the Conference as having been every way pleasant. Not many lay delegates were present, but there was more than usually full attendance of preachers. The support of the preachers has been inadequate, but not worse than last year. The collection for Bishops was $685.20, leaving a deficit of $114.80. Collected for widows, orphans and superannuated preachers, $1,678.40; deficit, $351.60. Collected for foreign missions, $2,706.85; for domestic missions, $1,135.40. Admitted on trial: D. A. Boddie, Daniel P. Ward. Remaining on trial: J. F. Patterson, A. Hotfpauir, George T. Freeman. Discontinued: W. V. Taylor. Admitted into full connection: A. E. Clay, John T. Sawyer, W. R. Whatley. Readmitted: Lewis A. Reed, R. M. Crowson, Charles W. Hodge. Received by transfer: W. E. Munsey. Number of local preachers, 75; members, 13,310—an increase of over 1,000. Sunday schools, 119; Sunday school scholars, 4,896.

The book agent, Rev. A. H. Redford, D. D., was in attendance from Friday to the close, delivering an address at the missionary anniversary on Sunday night, preaching at the Dryades Street German church on Sunday morning, and effectively representing the interests of the Publishing House before the Conference. The Conference was delighted with his visit, and adopted the following resolution expressing their appreciation of his presence:

Resolved, That this Conference has been pleased with the visit of Rev. Dr. Redford, our General Conference book agent, that we have greatly enjoyed his efficient ministrations, and shall at all times be pleased to see him at our annual convocations.

Rev. Dr. E. E. Wiley, president of Emory and Henry College, Virginia, was also a welcome visitor. The old friends of Bishop McTyeire in New Orleans were rejoiced to see and hear him once more, and the Conference was, of course, most happy to greet him as their presiding Bishop, and to renew with him the associations of other years. But one preacher had died during the year—the loved, lamented, gifted John Wilkinson. At the missionary anniversary on Sunday night addresses were made by Rev. J. T. Daves and Dr. Redford. The collection amounted to $600.

The next Conference will be held at Trenton, La.

North Georgia Conference.

MR. EDITOR: Bishop Keener has won steadily upon the Conference from its first day. His method in "examining character" is new to us, but evidently not to him. When a man's name is called he rises in his place and reads his report, the Bishop keeping a watchful eye upon last year's minutes. Many of the preachers do the same thing. It is a trying, sifting process. A marked falling off in any of the columns of figures elicits inquiry from the chair, and explanation from the preacher, if there is any to be made. This comparative, if not "compellative," examination in some cases occasions embarrassment. Some preachers seem to feel awkward when reporting "no collection," or very small and meager amounts, for missions and the Conference fund. Some have learned lessons they will not soon forget.

The presiding elders have not said as much as is usual among us about the preachers; but the reports have told us more about each other than we ever knew before. If any are praised, "their works praise them." There must be good in this method. If it be continued for a few years we will come to guage men by their works—their fruits. Reputation without fruit is a vain thing in a preacher. Perhaps we will come, by and by, to change our estimates of each other. A mine, to be profitable, must yield. No matter how much is in it if it can't be got out. "How does the digging pan out?" is the question.

The presiding elders tell us that Bishop Keener is very painstaking in his cabinet work. We are not surprised at this. We hope the presiding elders will be as well satisfied when the appointments are read out as they are now. No doubt ours will be the common experience—there will be some dis-appointments. But disappointments are common to men; they are not peculiar to itinerant preachers. Other men have their "hard times" and short pay also. But we ought to have moral supports above all others.

On Thursday night, December 2, the board of trustees of Emory College held a meeting, at which one addition was made to the faculty. The slip inclosed, taken from the Atlanta Constitution, will tell you what they did. Emory is one of our oldest colleges. It has done well in the past, and has been a blessing to the Church and to the States. It is the joint property of the two Georgia and of the Florida Conferences, backed by a constituency—if you will allow this word in such a connection—of nearly 100,000 white members. If they will, these 100,000 can make Emory College as rich as she needs to be to be an incalculably greater blessing than she has ever been. May they have grace—the "Macedonian grace"—of true Christian liberality. We have no Vanderbilt—and we wish peace and prosperity in large measure to the institution that bears his name—but Emory has the love of 100,000 Methodists. We ask them for $500,000. We expect to get it. It may not be this year, nor next year; but "we go for the long run." We cannot afford to be impatient, but we can as little afford to be idle. Hard work, patience, persistence and faith will bring the college through and up. The Conferences and the churches in Georgia and Florida demand that Emory be endowed and furnished with every facility. This will be done. If those in charge cannot do it, others will be called to their place. There is great peace and unanimity among trustees and professors. The board and the faculty understand each other. They are going to do their best. If there is failure there will be also consolation—the consolation of knowing that failure was not the result of indolence. The retiring president did well, making hard work for his successor if he shall do as well. The outlook is good and our hopes are strong.

Our missionary anniversary was not a success. We dislike to write this, but we must tell the truth. Bishop Keener's sermon on Sunday morning was a success, measured by whatever standard you please.

H.

P. S.—The Conference adjourned on Monday night, December 6, at eleven o'clock. There are a few disappointments, but there is as general satisfaction as we have known. Bishop Keener's closing address was unique, beautiful, suggestive, useful. The increase has been larger than we supposed in a former letter—about 3,000. We are now—local preachers and members—54,111 strong.

One dear brother, the Rev. J. M. Parker, a good man and true, died, "in the flower of his age," while the Conference was in session.

Your correspondent will have his hands full.

THE Methodist Advocate, says the New York Methodist, reports the proceedings of the Alabama Conference with great delicacy. We italicise some words which carry double: "The Conference by a unanimous vote asked the General Conference to grant the privilege of dividing with a view to the more vigorous prosecution of the work, both among the white and colored people. This Conference is peculiarly situated, and the conviction of its members is clear and strong that all the interests of the church can be better served by a readjustment of Conference relations. There is no disposition to do less in any direction, but a purpose to become more efficient and progressive in all. * * * The colored people held a Conference camp meeting about a mile distant from the other camp, which was attended by a large number, and was an occasion of great interest. Preaching was had four times each day on both grounds, while the Conference business was transacted in a tent prepared for the purpose. A new impulse has, no doubt, been given to the work in both branches." We do not find fault with the Conference; our only objection is to the Advocate's effort to conceal the fact that, so soon as both colors are numerous, separation of colors is sought for. Everybody down there knows this; why attempt to create a false impression up here? The truth cannot hurt anybody.

OUR first visit to Canton, Miss., was last week, in attendance at the Conference. We were delighted with the general appearance of the place, and especially with the people whom we met. We have rarely if ever spent a pleasanter five days at the Mississippi Conference. We were most comfortably domiciled in the family of Judge J. A. P. Campbell, a home circle of refinement, intelligence and piety. We pray that Heaven's richest blessings may rest upon them all. Our companions in good cheer at the board of Judge Campbell were Dr. Marshall, Mr. Thomas L. Millen, of Natchez, and W. L. Nugent, of Jackson. Many thanks to the committee of arrangements for such distinguished and congenial fellowship.

PLEASE COPY.—Writers of obituaries often append this request for other papers to copy. This request is useless. We presume no editor reads the obituaries published by his cotemporaries. We never think of searching the obituary columns of our exchanges, and we imagine that the editors of other papers treat ours in the same manner. If you desire an obituary to be published in other papers, send a copy to each.

German Mission Conference.

This Conference closed its session on Sunday night, December 5. Peace and good will prevailed, and the brethren are buoyant with hope for the future. The statistical report shows an increase all around. The Conference was assessed $300 for foreign missions, and has collected and paid over to Dr. Redford $335. The Bishops' claim ($100) was paid in full. One of the preachers has died during the year—Rev. A. Albright. The committee on memoirs, J. B. A. Ahrens, chairman, paid a well-deserved tribute to his memory. The educational interests were prominently discussed and advanced. The Conference resolved to have and sustain a German American college at Fredericksburg, Gillespie county, Texas, and a high school at Industry, in Austin county. To the presidency of the college C. A. Grote, A. M., has been elected. Rev. H. Ebers, a member of the Conference, is principal of the high school. The latter has been and is now in successful operation. At Houston we have and amply sustain a congregational school, which, according to the report from the superintendent, Rev. W. R. J. Thoussen, is in a very flourishing condition.

Bishop Pierce presided over the Conference with his usual urbanity, and has won the affection of all the German brethren.

The publishing interests of our church were not neglected. The Christian Advocate at Nashville, and the Texas Christian Advocate, were especially recommended to the patronage of our brethren. Our German papers, edited by J. B. A. Ahrens, A. M.—Der Familienfreund, Der Kinderfreund—were literally covered with encomiums. Our German hymn-book, catechism and Sunday school song-book have been introduced in all our churches and Sunday schools. The brethren desire that Bro. Harp, in New Orleans, supply his book depot with a large variety of German publications and Sunday school requisites, in order that they may draw their supplies from him.

The services on Sunday were as follows: Bishop Pierce preached at St. James in the morning, and ordained the deacons after service. No service at St. James at night. At St. John's: in the morning, J. B. A. Ahrens, A. M.; at night, Bishop Pierce. At the German church: in the morning, Rev. J. A. Schaper; and Rev. C. A. Grote, Sr., at night. After the service at St. John's the Bishop read out the

THE RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.—The Louisville Christian Observer observes: "A new church cannot start better, nor an old church do better, than by seeing that a good religious paper is regularly placed in the hands of every member of the church and congregation. Every family can easily be furnished with such a paper by the exercise of a little tact and energy on the part of the minister and elders of the church. Some will plead inability; and those who are too poor to furnish their children with bread should be excused on this score, and an appeal should be made to the charitable persons in the neighborhood to supply them with a religious paper as well as with food. Those who can furnish their families with food can also supply them with a religious paper, if they can be convinced of the importance of feeding their minds and souls on sound, wholesome food. The usefulness of religious papers can hardly be overestimated. They are preachers who never tire, assiduous, and prompt in visiting the families who invite their attendance, preaching during the week, arguing, convincing and instructing on the subjects which the people are thinking and talking about."

"BE CHEERFUL," says the man who is easy in his circumstances, missing no loved face at the table, nor by the hearth. But does he ever consider how hard it may be to be "cheerful" when the heart aches, and the cupboard is empty, and there are little fresh graves in the churchyard, and friends are few or indifferent, and even heaven, for the time being, seems to have forgotten us, so desolate is our lot! How difficult for one man to understand another in such differing circumstances! How easy to say: "Be cheerful!" How hard he would find it to practice it were he stripped of all life's brightness!

ON OUR second page will be found the first number of a biographical sketch of the venerable Thomas Clinton, recently deceased. Bro. Drake has prepared the memoir by special request of the fami

This latest expression of the munificence of Mr. Vanderbilt makes his donations to the present date aggregate $700,000. We rejoice in the good fortune of the university, and in the increase of its ability to furnish the best educational advantages to the young men of the country. We pray that spiritual blessings in his old age, and forever, may be enjoyed by our wise and kind benefactor.—Western Methodist.

OUR BILLS.

We are sending our bills to subscribers. Many of them have assured us that they would remit as soon as crops were harvested. We have waited till now, hoping that by this time they could pay the small amounts they owe. Each subscriber may think his two dollars and fifty cents too small an amount to affect us; but if every subscriber should reason the same way, and withhold it, the sum total would be over twenty thousand dollars. We need every dollar due us—we need it badly. Will you send at once through your pastor, if convenient? If not, please remit directly to this office and greatly oblige the publisher.

MEDICAL.

I MUST OWN that your Simmons' Liver Regulator fully deserves the popularity it has attained. As a family medicine it has no equal. It cured my wife of a malady I had counted incurable—that well-nigh of our American people, dyspepsia. She desires that all nations and people might know the virtues of this God-given remedy. Hoping that the above will appear in your Almanac of 1876, and be of some use in extolling the virtues of your excellent medicine is the wish of your humble servant.

A. E. P. ALBERT,
Professor in Nicholas Public School,
Parish of Terrebonne, La.

I have used Simmons' Liver Regulator for two years, and recommend it as a very superior medicine for Dyspepsia and Liver Disease.

GEORGE W. SMITH,
Kentucky Conference,
Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Your valuable medicine (Simmons' Regulator) has saved me doctors' bills often. I use it for everything that it is recommended for, and never knew it to fail. I have used it in Colic and Grubs with my mules and horses, giving them about half a bottle at a time. I have not lost one that I gave it to. You can recommend it to every one that has stock as being the best medicine known for all complaints that horse flesh is heir to.

E. T. TAYLOR,
Agent for Grangers of Georgia.

Wampsville, Madison County.

Simmons' Liver Regulator doubtless is one of the best medicines ever compounded from the great botanic garden of nature, and contains no blood-destroying component hidden under some technical name, but is a purifier, rejuvenator and regulator not only of the liver, but of the whole system.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Profits of Bee-Keeping.

When honey-bees are properly managed, or even given the same attention that would be bestowed upon a cabbage patch or other cultivated crop, the profit from them will be large; and we venture to say there is no part of the United States where bee-keeping will not pay if properly managed.

In the Southern States each swarm will yield, on an average, fifty pounds of honey, worth $12.50. Three new swarms, from the parent hive, and one from the first swarm made, and one from the other two, making five swarms, worth $25; and thirty pounds of honey from the first new swarm, and fifteen pounds each from two of the others, making sixty pounds, worth $15, making $12.50. Deduct five per cent. for losses, and you have nearly six hundred per cent. on the investment.

In the most favorable sections named each strong colony, in properly constructed hives and properly managed, may be made to yield from $75 to $100.

These large profits are not to be expected by every one who engages in the business, for in this, as in most other occupations, it is only the well-informed, diligent and industrious who attain extraordinary success. The average will perhaps be found at about one-half these figures, or less, which should satisfy any one, for where is there a business that will yield such returns?

Many persons will pronounce these figures too high, but as they are based upon the supposition that the business is conducted under the most favorable conditions—only such as may be attained by the proper study and attention to business—I do not think they are far wrong. In proof of them I submit the following facts:

William Buelsch, of Texas, says: "A vigorous colony, in an excellent hive, and enjoying favorable seasons, will yield as much as two hundred pounds (of honey) a year." "The intelligent, practical bee-keeper can take care of five hundred (colonies,) and make part of the hives needed for new colonies. From two hundred to five hundred colonies may be sustained on the square mile." "With sufficient assistance the bee-master can keep one thousand hives, and even more.

Mr. Spangenberg, of Texas, had fourteen new swarms from two old hives; six of them escaped to the woods, but five out of the eight saved yielded "a considerable surplus of honey."

The editor of the American Bee Gazette, October, 1866, says: "Last year there was stored by a certain stock of bees, that we can name, in less than eight weeks, one hundred pounds of surplus honey, besides forty or fifty pounds in the body of the hive."—D. L. Adair.

HOW TO HAVE BEAUTIFUL HYACINTHS IN WINTER.—Late in December, after our full stock of bulbs were disposed of, we found a dozen or more hyacinths of various colors which had been overlooked. To keep them from spoiling they were hastily planted in four or five large pots, and these set away in an outbuilding, where they would be free from frost and have very little light. There they were left for three months, and nothing done except to water them occasionally. Expecting little or nothing from them, they were not noticed till leaf and flower-stalk were perfectly developed. The light had not been sufficient to color the flowers, and these were all of a dirty pale green. The pots were now brought to the sitting-room and placed in the full sunshine, and in a few hours each spike had assumed its natural tint. The effect was very beautiful. Not a bulb had failed—red, purple, yellow, blush and white were all large and perfect.

ABOUT BOILING EGGS.—There is an objection to the common way of boiling eggs which people do not understand. It is this: The white, under three minutes' rapid cooking, becomes tough and indigestible, while the yelk is left soft. When properly cooked eggs are done evenly through, like any other food. This result may be attained by putting the eggs into a dish with a cover, as a tin pail, and then pouring upon them boiling water, two quarts or more to a dozen eggs, and covering and setting them away from the stove for fifteen minutes. The heat of the water cooks the egg slowly and evenly and sufficiently, and to a jelly-like consistency, leaving the center or yelk harder than the white, and the egg tastes as much richer and nicer as a fresh egg is nicer than a stale egg, and no person will want to eat them boiled after having tried this method once.

GRAPES AS MEDICINE.—At certain towns in Switzerland grapes are grown solely as medicine, and vineyards are put to no other use. Instead of drinking water, as in other places, the patient is sent out to eat grapes, and must pick them himself from the vines. Where the doctor ordinarily instructs the patient to drink so many glasses of water, he is here instructed to eat just so many bunches of grapes, and no more. It is assumed to be dangerous to go beyond the doctor's prescription a single grape. As strange as it may appear, the invalids experience the best of good effects from the "raisin cure," or at least think that they do, and go away very well satisfied.

CARE OF HORSES.—Horses should have every attention that can ease their labors. It is not humane to turn a horse that has worked all day in the reaper into a poor pasture, to pick his feed during the whole night, or lie, and rest with a half-filled stomach. If horses are turned out at night they should first be well fed. Wash the legs with carbolic soapsuds. Give drink frequently. Fresh cold water from the well is highly injurious; the water should be as warm as the air, and a handful of finely-ground meal should be stirred in each drink.—American Agriculturist.

SAUSAGE.—Good sausage can be made better by mixing thoroughly one teacup of Indian meal to four pounds of sausage. Mix only enough to last four or five days at a time, as it might sour.

The Ointment excels everything of its kind I ever saw or tried.

P. A. SIFFORD, M. D.

N. B.—This Remedy speaks for itself. One bottle will satisfy the most skeptical. There is not a single symptom of CONSUMPTION that it does not at once take hold of and dissipate, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours.

MEDICAL.

DUCONGE'S

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP.

NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound. Its well-established virtue and its high reputation in all ailments of the Chest, Lungs, Breast and Bowels is so well known, and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage, that it would be superfluous, at this late day, to dwell at any length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Bowels, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial in all inflammatory disorders, such as Rheumatism, Diarrhœa or Dysentery and Summer Complaint, and especially in those cases of Cholerine which, for want of proper care, so often degenerate into confirmed Cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, verging on Consumption, it has been found most efficacious in preventing that most awful scourge whenever timely resorted to.

Besides its acknowledged certainty of cure, this truly extraordinary medicine has, over most compounds of the same nature, the decided advantage that, owing to its agreeable flavor, it can be administered without the least difficulty to children, and it requires no particular diet. It is also the cheapest, not only because the bottles contain more syrup than any other, but owing to its peculiar composition this Syrup will keep for years without fermenting, and it can be used in families whenever required by simply keeping the bottle well corked.

Directions for Taking the Syrup.—Grown persons can take from four to six spoonfuls in the course of the day, either pure or diluted in a little water, or a less quantity at intervals of three or four hours.

Persons much troubled during the night may take two tablespoonfuls of the Sirup on going to bed, when it will stop the cough and procure a good night's rest.

Children from three to five years old may take from four to six teaspoonfuls during the day, in suitable quantities, at intervals of three to four hours. For sale by

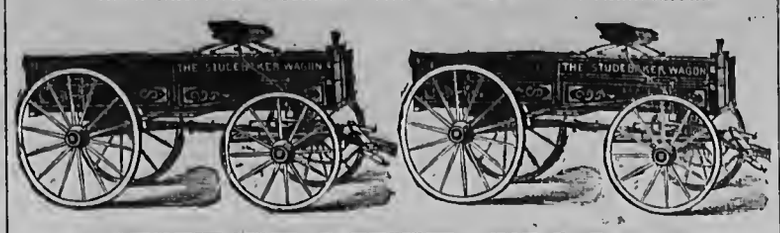
I HAVE RECENTLY ACCEPTED THE AGENCY OF THE CELEBRATED



STUDEBAKER WAGON.

FROM ONE TO SIX HORSE.

THE MOST SUBSTANTIAL WAGONS MADE!

There are several reasons why all should buy the above Wagon: First. They are made of the BEST SELECTED TIMBER, the same being cut at the proper season of the year, piled under sheds properly dated, and allowed to remain there from three to five years. Second. The wood-work is shaped by the latest improved machinery, put together by the BEST WAGON MECHANICS IN THE WORLD, and are the best ironed and painted Wagons in the market. Third. Their thimble skeins, made of select iron, are set by patent skein-setters, and weigh from four to twenty-five pounds per set more than any other, thereby making a perfect running Wagon, which will not break. Fourth. They are the only Wagon in which the SLOPE-SHOULDER SPOKE is used; hence they have the best wheel, which is actually the foundation of the Wagon, and should be carefully examined by persons purchasing. Fifth. They are sold only by responsible parties, and every Wagon is warranted; while the Studebaker Bros. are practical workmen, and attend to their business personally; hence the superiority of their work over all others.

SOUTHERN SHOE MANUFACTORY.

We hope all will follow the example of our friend. We have just made another visit to the Shoe Manufactory of our esteemed and enterprising fellow-citizen, Mr. JOHN HANSEN, 33 and 35 Canal street, and, notwithstanding the hard times, we find that he is employing one hundred hands, and thereby supporting at least five hundred persons. His work is of the best quality and is sold at the LOWEST PRICES, even below what the same goods can be bought for at the North. We advise all country merchants to call and see Mr. Hansen's stock before they purchase elsewhere, and thereby keep the currency at home.

Ladies and gentlemen who wish to make Christmas and New Year presents of Boots and Shoes should call on Mr. Hansen before purchasing elsewhere, as they can have the goods at wholesale prices, and of the same time sustain home-manufactured articles. de14 1m CITIZEN.

The river is 11 feet 1 inch below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals for the three days ending December 21:

Mississippi river and bayous	bales... 21,515
Red river	4,452
Ouachita river	858
Railroads	8,380
Lake	130
Mobile	1,262
Texas	3,158
Florida	7
Total	40,065

On Saturday the business during the morning did not exceed 2,500 bales, but later in the day factors offered their stocks rather more freely, and buyers came forward with a better spirit, taking 5,676 bales, making the total sales of the day 8,150 bales. Good staple kinds were held with unabated firmness, but the general run of the offerings were easier, without requiring any change in quotations, except a reduction of 5c. in the inside figures of middling and good middling. Average lists of middling sold at 12⅜c., while desirable and more even-running lists of the same grade could not be had under 12⅝c. On Monday the sales during the morning embraced 1,500 bales, after which, as factors evinced a disposition to meet the demand freely, buyers came forward with rather more spirit, and took in addition 5,600 bales, making a total of 7,100 bales. Good staple kinds fully maintained their previous position, middling headers, for example, commanding 12⅞@13c. On Tuesday the movement was quite active, and resulted in sales of 10,450 bales. Prices ruled at ¼ more in favor of buyers, excepting for good staple kinds, and the figures paid indicated a falling off in the general run of the offerings.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 25,700 bales, against 27,200 for the corresponding time last week and 21,709 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 358,627 bales, against 445,159 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 144,963 bales. The increase by the reports per telegraph is 159,871—2,008,499 against 1,848,628. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 80,751 bales to France, of 122,992 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 84,619 to Great Britain. We quote:

Advertisers' Directory

OF THE

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. MEDICAL.

DR. C. M'LANE'S CELEBRATED LIVER PILLS,

FOR THE CURE OF

LIVER COMPLAINT,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increase on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder-blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for a rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. M'LANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them A FAIR TRIAL.

U. S. Dealers and Physicians ordering from others than Fleming Bros. will do well to write their orders distinctly, and take none but Dr. C. M'Lane's Liver Pills, prepared by Fleming Bros., Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of base imitations. To those wishing to give them a trial, we will forward per mail, post paid, to any part of the United States; one box of Pills for twelve three-cent postage stamps, or one vial of Vermifuge for fourteen three-cent stamps. All orders from Canada must be accompanied by twenty cents extra.

DR. C. M'LANE'S VERMIFUGE

Should be kept in every nursery. If you would have your children grow up healthy, strong, and vigorous Men and Women, give them a few doses of

THE DYING YEAR.

BY C. C. FRASER TYTLER.

The year is dying, soberly the trees
Are mellowing—with a dull sad face
They look against the sadness of the sky;
The glory of the summer has gone by,
Gone is the smile of gladness from the place.

I sad to see the sun come later up,
And sad to see him pass betimes away,
And sad the pallid gilds he throws across
The leaf-strewn garden; sad the sense of loss,
The all-pervading fragrance of decay.

Yet at the open window, as I sit
With closed eyes, and hear the gentle rain
Fall on the damp green earth like lovers' sighs,
And feel the breath of earth uprise
From far and near, from hillock and from plain,

The same soft drip of lightly falling showers,
Upon the moss-greens growing everywhere,
The same strange stilly warmness in the air,
The cawing of the rooks, the gentle drift
Of odorous distillings in the air,

Daffodils growing on the field's green breast,
Buds all a-blow, and the enchanted breath
Of violets peeping in the dump hedgerow,
Kindled to being—O mystery, that so
Death looks like life, and life so like to death!

GALVESTON, December 21.—Advices from Eagle Pass state that three hundred Lipans, Julneois and Comanches, Indian warriors, are reported by Mexican traders at the Canon of San Roderige, forty miles above Remilo.

It is thought the object of the Indians gathering is depredations in Texas.

Dispatches from Fort Clark state that the Mexicans crossed the river twelve miles below San Felipe, surprised Pond's ranch, killed three men, and captured all arms and horses and six hundred cattle. Companies of citizens are organizing to follow them. Much trouble is apprehended.

A horrible massacre is reported near Atoks, Indian Nation. The bodies of four persons were found buried on the prairie, two of them females. Two were burned beyond recognition. The others were whites. A pony, with a lady's saddle, dog and gun, were found near. They had all been shot.

Three men were seen riding about nine miles from the spot, who are supposed to have done the shooting. The prairies were fired to destroy their trail.

NEW YORK, Dec. 21.—Mount Vesuvius is in an eruptive condition. Instruments in the observatory are in motion, and Prof. Palmieri predicts a long period of eruption.

BOSTON, Dec. 22.—An explosion occurred in South Boston, by which a large number of persons were injured and several killed. The large gas main running under Federal street bridge to South Boston, along the water's edge, under the pavement on Federal street, exploded with a loud noise, tearing the pavement a distance of one hundred and fifty feet.

The street was thronged with people at the time, and many are buried under the debris. Crosby's grain warehouse was badly shattered and will have to be taken down; the foreman was instantly killed. It is supposed several persons were blown into the water. Several dead bodies have already been taken out. The wildest rumors prevail.

NEW YORK, Dec. 22.—The New England Society had its seventieth dinner at Delmonico's to-night. About three hundred members of the society and guests were present. Mr. Bailey presided, having at his right President Grant and on his left Gen. Sherman. Among the distinguished guests were the Japanese minister to this country, Gen. Hawley, Prof. Hitchcock, Ex-Gov. E. D. Morgan, C. H. Depew, District Attorney Phelps, Collector Arthur and Hon. Thomas Murphy. Rev. Dr. Ludlow pronounced the blessing. After the viands had been disposed of President Bailey arose and welcomed the guests.

GALVESTON, Dec. 22.—Very heavy rains prevailed throughout southern and western Texas during the past two days. The rivers and bayous are higher than for years. No trains left for the North to-day on account of the unsafe condition of the trestles. The roads north of Houston are reported broken and trains blocked. Steamers could not leave Houston to-day on account of the flood in the bayou. It is feared much damage is done to different roads and bridges.

RICHMOND, VA., Dec. 23.—The shocks felt here last night were veritable earthquake shocks, and no mistake. No comparison can be made with any similar antecedent event, inasmuch as it was the first experienced hereabouts. The statements of persons residing in various sections of the city coincide in the main as to the vibrations, duration and force of the shocks.

A short time after the cessation of the shocks the streets were alive with frightened and excited people. Many made their way to the newspaper and telegraph offices to learn the extent of the phenomenon, while others of more nervous temperament remained in the streets for hours, not daring to re-enter their houses for fear of the repetition of the shocks; but the remainder of the night passed off without further disturbance.

To-day this remarkable epoch in Richmond's history was the general topic of conversation, it being discussed in all its phases, each one having his own experience to relate.

Telegrams from various points in Virginia report shocks similar to those felt here. In some places a greater number of shocks are reported than in others. None of the reports agree as to the direction of the oscillation.

As far as heard from, shocks were not felt south of Petersburg, west of Lynchburg, north of Alexandria, nor east of City Point or James river. Along the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad shocks were felt as far as Staunton, one hundred and fifty miles northwest of Richmond, and the Danville railroad, to the southern border of the State. The probability is that the shocks in Richmond were as severe as at any other point, and no damage worth mentioning is reported from any direction.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 23.—A dispatch from San Diego confirms the report of anarchy in Sonora, Mexico. A revolution is in progress and Yaquie Indians in revolt. Gov. Periquiera has levied a special tax to carry on the war. The revolutionary party, it is reported, are about to invade Sinaloa. Business is prostrated.

No further demonstrations have been made by the banditti at Campo. The presence of a posse from San Diego keeps them temporarily quiet. They threaten revenge for the shooting and hanging of their comrades in the recent raid. Cruse Lopez has been in command of the banditti since the death of Chavez. The Mexicans living on the border, with but few exceptions, are in league with the banditti. A cavalry company will leave here to-morrow for San Diego.

A dispatch from San Diego says a courier arrived from San Rafael, capital of Lower California, reporting that the revolutionists had attacked the place and killed Gov. Villagrena and twenty-nine others, and had possession of everything. The report needs confirmation.

WASHINGTON, December 27.—The whisky ring has found that its war on Secretary Bristow is too heavy an undertaking and has taken a sail.

Babcock indignantly denies any connection with the Chicago Inter-Ocean's publication of Saturday, charging, apparently upon the authority of Babcock, that Bristow had been guilty of complicity with the whisky frauds.

The publication of the fact that the President has the evidence in his hands of Fish's duplicity, for which his resignation will be demanded, creates great excitement in official circles. It is plainly evident that Fish stands in the President's way in respect to Cuban matters, and the President, intending to remove him, paves the way by publishing evidences of personal disloyalty to him, and will allege that as the cause.

Information has been received that several native tribes, encouraged by the success of the Greero tribe near Cape Palmas, made an attack recently on the settlers in another part of Liberia, but were vigorously repulsed. A private letter says that the peace of the republic is somewhat disturbed on the question of color. President Roberts is much embarrassed on this account, the fact of his not being of pure African blood being objectionable to many who are. An intelligent negro from the West Indies is the principal agitating spirit.

The more orderly of the Liberians would rejoice if they could be relieved of the leader in this piece of mischief.

BOSTON, Dec. 27.—At the Methodist preachers' meeting to-day an effort was made to have placed before the public a paper setting forth the views of the meeting with reference to the "third term" speech of Bishop Haven, but failed.

FOREIGN.

MADRID, Dec. 21.—Gen. Jovellar, minister of war, has been appointed Captain General of Cuba, in place of Valmaseda. Gen. Jovellar and Gen. Ceballas shortly leave for Cuba. Gen. Quesada will be appointed commander-in-chief of the armies of the North.

MADRID, Dec. 23.—The Epoca, of this city, says when the Carlist insurrection is suppressed an efficient army will be maintained in Cuba as a measure of precaution, and that heavy guns will be placed on the coast. At the same time Spain will propose to the United States a new and mutually advantageous treaty of commerce. Subscriptions have already been opened to defray the cost of manufacturing the heavy guns for the defense of Cuba.

CAIRO, EGYPT, Dec. 23.—It is rumored that the Khedive is negotiating for the sale of the Egyptian founders' shares in the Suez canal. The government of Great Britain, and M. DeLesseps, representing a combination of French capital, are the bidders. The latter has offered $9,000,000 for the shares.

BERLIN, Dec. 23.—It is stated the principal feature of the great powers' proposition relative to reforms in Turkey is that the embassadors of neutral powers at Constantinople shall exercise a permanent control in the execution of reforms in the provinces.

SINGAPORE, Dec. 23.—The British troops in Malacca arrived before Klutah, where the Maharajahs, Ismal and Leh, oppose them with a considerable force, and Gen. Colborne has asked for re-enforcements.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—The Prince of Wales landed at Calcutta to-day, and had a magnificent reception.

PARIS, Dec. 27.—The statue of Napoleon was replaced on the newly finished Vendome Column to-day. A large crowd assembled in the Place Vendome and Rue de la Paix and other adjacent streets to witness the proceeding. There was no ceremony.

LORD LYTTLETON, speaking at Oxford, said the income of the two great universities, including their colleges, amounted to the annual sum of £770,000, nearly $4,000,000.

Texas Conference.

Dr. John, editor of the Galveston Christian Advocate, writing of the Conference, says:

The Texas Conference met in the Methodist Episcopal church, Brenham, December 8, 1875. Bishop Pierce was in the chair. Rev. H. V. Phillpott, D. D., was elected secretary with Rev. R. T. Nabors. We are indebted to their courtesy for the following statistical items, which indicate more clearly than any other information at command the status of the Conference. There were reported 6,732 members, 57 local preachers; 458 infants baptized and 348 adults; 45 Sunday schools, 360 teachers and officers, 2,741 scholars; 9,247 books in library, 821 visitors taken, and $2,124.90 expended in the Sunday school work. We have 661 churches reported, valued at $175,755; 6 parsonages, valued at $5,760. There were raised on Bishops' fund, $365,80; Conference collection, $745.60; domestic missions, $1,205.75, and $1,437.67 for foreign missions; $324 for the poor. The preachers' claims amounted to $30,490, and their receipts $23,830. Some items in the above are worthy of note. While the preachers have been as well paid as in the other Conferences, yet their receipts fall below their claims $6,660. This is over twenty per cent. of their claims, and is certainly a large amount for the preachers to pay toward the supply of our people with the blessings of a gospel ministry.

LAST SUNDAY, says the Pacific Methodist of December 17, was a day of rejoicing in St. Paul's church. After the sermon ten persons united with the church. In the evening another was presented for admission, making eleven adults. The services of the church are in a high degree spiritual, and there is developing a religious power which must tell for good on the community. The Sunday school is increasing in efficiency and influence, and everything denotes great prosperity. We rejoice.

Another $100,000 for Vanderbilt University.

The Nashville American contains the following interesting item, which we believe is correct:

We understand that, for the purpose of completing the plans already projected, Mr. Vanderbilt has very lately increased his donation, previously made, by nearly $100,000, thus making in all about $700,000 that he has already given to establish in the South a first-class university. This is a princely donation from a citizen of the North to the people of the South, and is gratefully recognized as such.

Acts of generosity of this character, more than any mere acts of legislation, tend to produce, and are producing, a genuine restoration of kindly feeling between the two great sections of the country.

As the children of the South, in their elementary education, found so munificent a benefactor in the late George Peabody, whose name, by reason of his noble generosity, will ever be held in the highest esteem throughout the entire country, so are we greatly encouraged that the cause of higher university education in the South has found so generous a supporter in the person of Cornelius Vanderbilt. One gift was necessary to supplement the other. While the young children scattered throughout the Southern States receive the inestimable benefits of the Peabody fund, the young men of the South who desire an education of the highest order this country or any country affords will recognize in Mr. Vanderbilt their great benefactor.

It requires a large amount of money to establish a university—one in fact, and not in name only. The South needs such an institution, and we hope that, by the combined efforts of the friends of the Vanderbilt, the day may not be far distant when she may boast of an income of over $200,000 per year, and thus become the Harvard of the South.

If we embrace error we reject truth, and the rejection of truth then necessarily involves in it the rejection of the God of truth.

Alabama Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The Alabama Conference adjourned about eleven o'clock on Sunday night, December 14.

After your departure the following items of business were disposed of:

Question 27.—What amount is necessary for the superannuated preachers, and the widows and orphans of preachers?

Answer.—$6,500.

Question 28.—What has been collected on the foregoing account, and how has it been applied?

Answer.—$4,289.05 divided among the claimants.

$1,205.70 were paid on the Bishops' fund, being in excess of the assessment.

At ten o'clock on Monday Dr. L. M. Smith, president of the Southern University, addressed the Conference in the interest of the University, bringing out in a forcible manner the merits of that institution as to its location, faculty, buildings, apparatus, etc., its importance to the church, and the necessity of sustaining it by liberal patronage.

Credentials were restored to Timothy W. Matthews, deacon, and to W. R. Talley, elder; and the orders of Alfred J. Miller, formerly an elder in the Methodist Episcopal Church, were recognized.

The following assessments were made for the ensuing year: Conference fund, $6,500; Bishops' fund, $1,250, divided as follows:

	Conference fund.	Bishops'.

The memorial exercises were solemn and impressive. The following members of our Conference died during the year: J. Scaife, R. F. Perdue, W. C. Robinson, E. V. LeVert, J. Hamilton, all of them fathers in Israel. Appropriate memoirs were read by Dr. A. S. Andrews, chairman of the committee, and the Conference was led in prayer by the venerable Zaccheus Dowling, the oldest member of the body.

Question 30.—Where shall the next session of the Conference be held?

Answer.—Greensboro.

J. M. MASON,
Assistant Secretary.

SPRING SESSION AT RANDOLPH MACON COLLEGE.—Mr. Editor: If no intrusion upon your columns, it will greatly oblige me and gratify many persons if you will allow me, in answer to numerous inquiries, to say: Not the first of January, but the fifteenth of February is the beginning of the spring session at Randolph Macon. Students entering before that time have to fall into advancing classes at great disadvantage; but on the fifteenth of February they can enter classes just formed. Board is very cheap—from $10 to $15 per month. Forty-eight dollars will pay all tuition fees from February to the last of June—the end of the session. Those who desire to enter college at the beginning of the spring session will please correspond with the proctor major, W. A. Shepard, at Ashland, Va.

JAMES A. DUNCAN,
Pres't. Randolph Macon College.

REV. E. E. WILEY, D. D.—As we noticed last week, President Wiley, of Emory and Henry College, Virginia, was present at the session of the Louisiana Conference. The Conference passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That this Conference is gratified at the visit, and have enjoyed the company and ministrations of our brother, the Rev. Dr. Wiley.

Resolved, That while we recognize the obligation of first patronizing our own institutions of learning within our bounds, if our people, for a change of climate or other reason, should desire to send their sons elsewhere, we cordially recommend to them Emory and Henry College, Virginia, of which our Bro. Wiley is the distinguished president.

The Children and Missions.

From California to Virginia, here and there through the church, the spirit of systematic giving upon the part of the children for the cause of missions seems to be aroused. A score and more of letters say: "We have, through the children's contributions, done more than the whole church was accustomed to do before." Why is it that this spirit is only here and there, instead of being universal? Why a church and Sunday school at work in one town or neighborhood, and in an equally wealthy and populous church in the vicinity nothing doing? Generally it means one pastor has the missionary fire, the other has it not; one pastor has faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, the other has a profound respect to circumstances. Thank God, in some instances the laymen are getting worried waiting for pastors to reach the point of missionary zeal commensurate with the demands of the Christian light of the age, and are organizing and creating in their individual churches societies for systematic effort. May their number be a thousand times greater than it is! The right key is struck when the child's heart is touched, and, if coupled with the emotion of the hour, the principle of giving becomes inwrought. You have secured for that child blessings from earth and heaven which no adverse fortune can ever sweep away. We publish the following letter to Dr. McFerrin, which reached the office in his absence, from a layman whose deeds are worthy of Virginia:

"REV. J. B. MCFERRIN, D. D.—Dear Doctor: I send you a copy of our little paper, giving an account of the operation of the Missionary Society of our Sunday school, and, after having tried it for two years, find the results gratifying and remarkable. We have raised in that time more than was raised by our church here in the preceding six years; and the beauty of it all is that no one feels it. Suppose that every Sunday school in the connection would adopt the system—the collections would be doubled without calling on the churches. Dr. Chalmers and his coadjutors organized and built up the most remarkable ecclesiastical establishment of modern times by means of these little-and-oftens. Why can't we adopt the same system to carry forward the missionary enterprise of our church, and place her where she ought to be?

"We have remodeled our little church since you were here, nearly doubling its sitting space, and it is as nice and tasty as any in the valley. I hope to hear you preach in it before I die. Yours truly,

JAMES CHALMERS.

SALEM, VA., Dec. 4, 1875."

The following is the printed article referred to in the letter. Reader, you can help in this work. Will you?

D. C. K.

"The operations of the Missionary Society of the Salem Sunday school have been so successful that we recommend the plan to all the Sunday schools of the district. The machinery is at hand. All that is necessary is to put it in operation.

"The officers of the society are the officers of the school. Each scholar contributes five cents, and each teacher ten cents, monthly; this is the least expected. Envelopes are distributed to the teachers, who collect from their scholars, and hand in their envelopes the last Sunday of the month. On the following Sunday the treasurer reports the amount paid in by each class. The average amount collected monthly is $9. We have 30 Sunday schools on the Roanoke district, embracing 250 officers and 1,600 scholars. Suppose the simple plan above mentioned were adopted generally on the district—the result would approximate a total of $1,250, which is nearly twice the entire amount of the missionary assessments for home and foreign missions on the district. Some people have an idea that it damages the interest of our missionary enterprises to commit them so largely to our Sunday schools. We entertain just the opposite view. No surer way, in our judgment, could be devised to awaken the deepest concern among our mature members on that important subject than that of securing systematic and constant effort among our children. Indeed we should not object if every dollar the church asks should come through the children. They could be trained to beneficence in no nobler channel. Such a spectacle would stimulate the church, would astonish the heathen, and be pleasing to God. May it soon appear!"

REV. I. J. HENDERSON, D. D.—We learn with sorrow, says the Southwestern Presbyterian, the sudden and unexpected death of Rev. I. J. Henderson, D. D., formerly pastor of the Prytania church of this city. At the time of his death he was pastor of the Presbyterian church at Annapolis, Md., and engaged in the active duties of a devoted and self-sacrificing ministerial life. His last sermon was delivered November 28, on the words: "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store as the Lord has prospered him." Soon after he was seized with typhoid pneumonia, and after an illness of ten days expired, December 8, aged sixty-four years.

DIED, In St. Louis, Mo., on the fifth instant, of acute laryngitis, Col. John C. Humphrey, of Claiborne county, Miss., in the fifty-fifth year of his life.

The Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1875.

SALVATION SOUGHT.

BY LADY HUNTINGDON (1707-1798).

O when my righteous Judge shall come
To fetch his ransom'd people home,
Shall I among them stand?
Shall such a worthless worm as I,
So sinful, and unfit to die,
Be found at thy right hand?

I love to meet among them now,
Before Jehovah's feet to bow,
Though viler than them all;
But who can bear the piercing thought:
What if my name should be left out
When he for them shall call?

Dear Lord, prevent it by thy grace;
O let me see thy smiling face,
In this my gracious day,
Thy pardoning voice O let me hear,
To still my unbelieving fear,
Nor let me fall away.

Among thy saints let me be found,
Whene'er the archangel's trump shall sound,
To see thy smiling face.
Then loudest of the crowd I'll sing,
Till heaven's resounding mansions ring
The riches of thy grace.

Rev. Thomas Clinton.

With what success this first year of his ministry was attended can only be inferred from his own reminiscences—its record is on high. Reasoning according to the wisdom of this world, we would conclude that the unlettered youth, fresh from the brickyard, would not accomplish much toward the enlightenment of the world. But the same process of reasoning would apply with equal force to Simon Peter, and Andrew, his brother. Incidents related by himself show that he labored diligently, not only in the pulpit, but while in the house and while in the way. He would go to the "clearings," where the settlers were at work belting timber or burning brush, get into conversation about their affairs—the productiveness of the land, the hardships of their lives, and how they were getting along in the new country. The man would become interested—tell him of his plans and hopes of success. Then would come the question: "Brother, how is it with your soul? What are your plans and prospects for that undiscovered country to which you must soon emigrate?" "Bless God," he would say, "we got a great many of them that year." He said he could always tells the backsliders—they were shy of him, and tried to keep him at a distance. But his persevering earnestness, tempered with prudence, usually broke down the barriers, and gave him access to their hearts.

How contrary to all the established rules of hermeneutics and hierology was the success of these unlearned, untutored men, who planted Methodism and religion in the Southwest, whose songs and exhortations woke the echoes of the forests simultaneously with the ax and rifle of the settler! Unlearned and uncultivated in the mysteries of the schools, like Thomas Clinton, most of them were when they began their ministry. But no plan of education, no college or theological curriculum was ever devised so well calculated to lead out and quicken all the mental and moral resources of the man as the Methodist itineracy, when faithfully carried out and diligently pursued. The universities and gospel mills of the world combined have not produced such a roll of intellectual giants as the Methodist preachers of America. Taken rough from the quarry by the hand of the Master builder, carved and polished into pillars of strength and beauty by this inimitable system of training, they stand forth the Jakin and Boaz of the earthly temple. The sheep-skin gentry, with uplifted eyebrows, twaddle continually of the ignorant circuit riders. Without intending to disparage other denominations, or to depreciate those who have become great and useful despite their so-called early advantages, we would modestly suggest that they compare, as a body, with the machine-made clergy, for strength and usefulness, as the forest oak does with the hot-house plant—as the ornamental facade under the eaves to the ponderous marble block beneath. A friend who has been a prominent lawyer and politician, accustomed to lead and mold the opinions of his associates, attended our last General Conference as a lay delegate. On his return home he remarked that it was the first assembly he was ever in where there was no possible occasion or opportunity for him to utter a word—that he realized the sensations of the pigmy at the feast of the giants. These men, with few exceptions, were the product, the alumni, of our peculiar institution.

Into this model normal school Thomas Clinton entered with ardor and determination. As he traveled on horseback from one distant appointment to another he diligently conned the lessons assigned him. By the light of the pine-knot fire at night, unmindful of the wearisome day's journey, he pored over his books, and as new thoughts and ideas were acquired they were put into immediate practical use, and thus indelibly fixed in his memory. The open book of Nature, too, silently breathing its lessons of sublimity and wisdom, was ever open before him; and the human heart, with its many sides, was constantly revolving before him. No wonder, then, that his mind, stimulated by the thirst for knowledge and the desire for usefulness, advanced with rapid strides and developed symmetrically in every direction.

In 1821 and 1822 he labored on the Marion circuit, Cahawba district, Rev. John C. Burruss, presiding elder. Many of us remember, with love and veneration, this Melanchthon of Southern Methodism. Few now living knew him in the zenith of his power. In some respects the counterpart of Thomas Griffin, he possessed the polished manners of the true gentleman, a voice of such sweetness, compass and power that it still rings in the ears of those who have heard it, the diction and style of the accomplished orator, and withal a disposition so loving and genial that few could resist its fascination. Two years of the association and supervision of such a mentor did not fail to leave a permanent impress on the character of the novitiate. One of the chief duties and purposes of this office was to superintend the studies of the young preachers—to direct their minds into right channels of thought and of reading, to remove their doubts and difficulties, and with fatherly tenderness to point out and correct their faults and imperfections. No one was ever better fitted to exercise these delicate and important functions than John C. Burruss, and in Thomas Clinton he found a willing and eager pupil.

At the close of the year 1822 the Mississippi Conference was held at McRay's camp ground, on the Chickasawha river, in Alabama. About fourteen preachers attended, and, no Bishop being present, Rev. William Winans was chosen to preside. The territory of the Conference then embraced most of the States of Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana, with an indefinite commission to carry the gospel to the regions beyond. The fishermen of Galilee had scarcely a more stupendous task before them than this handful of heroic men as they looked out over the vast field and proposed to subjugate it to the dominion of their Master. The last of that devoted cohort, so feeble and insignificant in the eyes of men, has rested from his labors, and their works do follow them. "The little one has become a thousand, and the handful of corn on the top of the mountain doth shake like Lebanon." The country then parceled out among this score of pioneers is now occupied by four or five large Conferences, with as many hundred ministers, with thousands of worshiping congregations, and hundreds of Methodist schools, colleges and church edifices. The aggregate value of all the church property of that day would hardly build Carondelet Street church. Half a century has garnered all this fruit from the seed then scattered. Glory belongeth unto God for the abundant harvest; but all honor to the noble instruments of his providence.

At this Conference Thomas Clinton was elected to deacon's orders, but, owing to the absence of the Bishop, was not ordained until some time after. The history of his next year's labors is best told in his own graphic language, but must be left for another article. H. W. D.

The Relation of Our Children to the Church.

II.

In the next place we would inquire upon what condition infants are made partakers of the saving power of the Holy Ghost.

1. As before stated, it must be upon some well-defined plan of salvation inseparably connected with the great remedial system as given to all men; for in Christ alone is salvation from a sinful nature as well as practice to be found. Matthew i, 21: "Thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins." Such, then, being the case, it follows that infants do not receive grace from any state or relation other than the relation they sustain to God through the atonement; and it also follows that if the dying infant sustains this salvable relation to God through the atonement, the living does as well; because this relation must exist by reason of the death of Christ for them, and not because of any mere accident in life.

2. To illustrate this point: Here are twin infants, A. and B., born of the same parentage, partakers of the same nature, and incapable alike of sin or faith. A. dies, receives the Holy Ghost and is taken to heaven. Now why may not B. receive the Spirit as well as A.? Death could not prepare the heart of A. to receive the Holy Ghost. If so his salvation would be of death, and not of Christ. No; A. received saving grace by reason of his relation to Christ, through the vicarious sacrifice he made of himself for the "sin of the world," and not because he was A., and was dying. If, then, dying infants receive the Holy Ghost by reason of a well-defined provision made for them in the atonement, how are we to account for that administration of divine justice which withholds grace from living infants whom all agree are equally included in the sacrificial offering for sin?

3. Some attempt to answer this question by affirming that God does grant saving grace to the dying and withholds it from the living infants, and that death is not made the cause of giving on the one hand, nor life of withholding on the other, but that the determinate will of God to take the one out of the world doth cause him to give grace to prepare the soul for the higher state to which it is called, and that his determinate will to let the other live to adult age doth cause him to withhold grace from the living. This is poor logic and worse Scripture:

1. Because it predicates an argument of a premise that the author himself rejects.

If we admit that there is such a thing as a person receiving salvation upon the mere determinate will of God, we must also admit that there are facts connected with, or circumstances surrounding the person, or that there are facts existing in the divine mind, or circumstances bearing upon the moral universe, that make it necessary and perfectly compatible with divine justice to bless that person, and withhold the blessing from another.

Now what facts could exist, either in the dying infant, the moral universe or the divine mind, that would cause God to grant the blessing of regeneration to the dying and withhold it from the living infant? The only rational answer to be given is: One is dying and the other is living. So death, the very fact denied in the argument, is made the condition of salvation at last.

2. This theory is defective in its representation of the Scripture doctrine of salvation, which nowhere conditions the salvation of any upon the mere arbitrary will of God; except, indeed, as his will is expressed in the gift of his Son, and in the desire that all men should be saved. That our salvation is a gift is true; but it is such a gift as all will receive who occupy a salvable relation to God through the atonement, and not to those living or dying as such.

III.

But do the Scriptures teach that all infants are regenerated? We assume they do.

1. The Scriptures affirm of John the Baptist (Luke i, 15,) and of Jeremiah (Jeremiah i, 5,) that they were both filled with the Holy Ghost from their birth. Now if these two were converted thus early, why should not all infants be as well? It cannot be argued that these were converted because of a determinate will on the part of God to take them out of the world, for they both lived to mature manhood.

We know, however, that some would try to meet this argument on the ground that these were extraordinary persons, called to perform an extraordinary work. But such a conclusion is worse than folly; because, if Jeremiah was converted in infancy because of the important prophetic office to which he was called, then must all the prophets before and since his day have been likewise converted, for their trust was as great as his; and if John the Baptist was converted because of the importance of his work, then are all Christians converted in infancy as well; for Christ said of him (Matthew xi, 11:) "He that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he."

But why argue this point, since it is wholly a gratuitous assumption? one without support in either Scripture or reason; for God can accept no one except by reason of his relation to him through the atonement. As soon would I expect to learn on the eternal shores that God had thrown wide the gate of heaven to the sainted Wesley because he had founded a great church, and closed the gate on our beloved Bishop Andrew because he only had the oversight of one branch of that church, as to expect to learn that God converted John the Baptist and Jeremiah the prophet in infancy because they were to hold offices of trust in his church, and withheld the same blessing from their mothers because they were to be numbered with the common people. Never, never, no never, could such a modus operandi take place in the economy of grace while a just God deals with man.

2. In Romans iv, 11 Paul tells us that Abraham "received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had, yet being uncircumcised." Now if circumcision was a sign and seal of Abraham's righteousness at the age of ninety-and-nine years, what was it to Isaac at the age of eight days? Did it signify to Abraham that he was righteous, and to Isaac his need of it? Impossible! Such ambiguity would have rendered the ordinance a mere nudum pactum. And, worse still, if, as Paul states, circumcision was given as a sign and seal of righteousness, how are we to account for the deception practiced on the Jewish people by causing them to circumcise persons who were not righteous? We know that some would try to evade the force of our argument by saying that circumcision was given as a sign of the promise of Canaan. But this involves a controversy between them and inspiration; and we must be excused for deciding to take the word of God as the man of our counsel; and as that says it was given as a sign and seal of righteousness, and as all infants were to receive both the sign and the seal, we conclude, therefore, that all infants are righteous.

Again, in Romans v, 18 Paul says that "by the offense of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." Now in the first instance we give the "all men" its broadest scope, so as to include each individual under this condemnation. Then by what rule of criticism shall we be justified in so limiting the scope of the second "all men" as to deny the justification of every person through Christ? Any other conclusion than that this text teaches a positive justification from the guilt of original sin is irrational, and therefore cannot be received. Then, if infants are in a state of justification, can any one give a reason why they should not be regenerated? It can be no fault of theirs; for, as Dr. Summers expresses it in his first argument on infant baptism, "they are all the subjects of redeeming grace, and they do not place any bar to the blood-bought privileges of the gospel to exclude themselves from participation in them."

3. Here they are in a state of justification from the only crime alleged against them, and offering no resistance to the divine government; and why doth not God receive them as the trophies of the cross that they are? In Revelation iii, 20 Jesus says: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." Is the affirmation that Christ stands at the door of every heart and pleads for admittance, and that he will enter every heart where no resistance is offered, true? If so, why does he not enter the heart of every infant and sup with them? Inspiration gives no reason why. Man cannot, he dare not; therefore he must enter and give them joy. J. M. WEEMS.

OBITUARIES.

WILLIAM EMORY, eldest son of Rev. John B. and Nancy H. Holloman, was born in Jasper county, Mo., May 16, 1842, and died at his residence in Satartia, Yazoo county, Miss., October 21, 1875. His disease was inflammation and congestion.

He came with his parents to Mississippi in the fall of 1852. Soon after he professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Mount Olivet, in Yazoo county. He was always an ambitious student and a prompt attendant at Sunday school.

He volunteered early in the late war. During the time he was a soldier he was twice badly wounded. He went through, and came out as he went in—a consistent Christian. When the struggle was over he took a short rest; then, with only a ten-dollar bill—given him by his father, who, like many others, was reduced, as it were, to poverty by the ravages of the enemy—he started out to make his own fortune. After spending two or three years in teaching school he went into the mercantile business. Strict honesty was his policy and motto. He rigidly practiced it, and required all connected with him to do the same. By so doing he gained the perfect confidence of all, both white and black. He set out in business determined to eschew whisky, an article which many told him was necessary to success, and without the taking of which into his business he would fail. But he believed he could succeed without it, and he did.

He was married to Miss Ada Wildy, of Yazoo county, on the twenty-ninth of April, 1874.

He was for several years an official member of the church, which position he filled to the best of his ability, both with his time and means. He never compromised his church or church duties. His heart and feelings went out much after his brethren in the ministry. Truly the good brother said in preaching his funeral sermon: "He paid all he could, collected all he could, and sympathized all he could."

He had an uncommon mind, and it had been well cultivated by hard study. While fond of secular reading, he was especially so of theological. He had been taking the Southern Quarterly Review for several years, and I presume no preacher nor layman devoured its contents more eagerly or prized it more highly. During Dr. Bond's life-time he was a great admirer of his articles.

A large concourse attended his funeral, among whom were a goodly number of blacks. As he was known to be a great favorite with them, after his friends and relatives had taken a last look, they were permitted to do the same. The loss they felt was shown by their great weeping.

The public, the church, the poor, and especially the widows and orphans, feel they have sustained a great if not irreparable loss. He was a son of affectionate and tender feeling, a loving and attentive brother, and a most devoted husband and father. He leaves parents, one brother, three sisters, wife and sweet babe to mourn his loss. But we mourn not as those without hope. He lived right and died peacefully. His end was tranquil. He breathed his life out sweetly, without a struggle or a groan—went out as one going into a deep sleep.

HIS ELDEST SISTER.

DEPARTED this life, in great peace, on the thirty-first of October, 1875, in Natchitoches parish, La., JOHN T. ROACH, who was born near Mansfield, La., March 29, 1855.

Half an hour before he died the writer called to see him. He at once asked to be prayed for. Not being understood fully, he asked again: "Will you get down on your knees and pray for me right now?" Again he asked: "If I believe that Jesus died for me, will that be sufficient to save me?" He was told that if he would ask God to have mercy upon his soul, and believe it with his whole heart, that God would answer his prayer. He repeated these words in great earnestness, and then exclaimed: "All is light, all is light. All is right now." He then wished to know if all in the room had their sins forgiven. So natural now to wish to know this! Only some having answered in the affirmative, he appealed to them to be Christians. His mother kissed him, and he told her to kiss him again, saying: "I am a Christian now, mother."

He was a faithful teacher of a class of little girls in the Sabbath school at Allen, three miles from his home. Just before he died he spoke of how he loved the Sabbath school, and how he had prayed for its prosperity. His promptness to be there at nine o'clock every Sabbath morning, rain or shine, was of itself enough to make us love him. His last words were: "I am in heaven;" and he died instantly, without a struggle.

John T. Roach was what the world calls a moral young man, free, open-hearted, without a known enemy, and yet he did not feel on his deathbed that he was a fit subject for heaven until God, for Christ's sake, pardoned his sins. Then the angel of glory came for him, and as he entered its portals we heard him say: "I am in heaven!"

HIS S. S. SUPERINTENDENT.

DIED, on Thursday, November 18, 1875, in the city of Vicksburg, Miss., after a protracted and painful illness, Mrs. GEORGIANA Q. HARRIS, a native of Boston, Mass., and relict of the late Judge J. G. Harris, of New Orleans, La., aged fifty-nine years and ten months. She leaves five daughters and numerous friends to mourn her loss.

Much might be said in praise of Mrs. Harris as a pure, unselfish Christian woman. For more than fifteen years the writer of this notice was acquainted with her, and knew her to be a consistent Christian. She united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South (Cadiz Street station, New Orleans) about the time of its organization, and she always seemed delighted in meeting with the people of God in the public congregation, prayer and class meetings. We learn that she bore her afflictions with patience and resignation to the will of God, and that her end was calm and peaceful. May her bereaved children and many loved ones meet her where parting is unknown.

J. D. PARKER.

DIED, near Liberty, Miss., September 1, 1875, of congestion, little ELLA, youngest daughter of Rev. John B. and Julia E. Ritchey, aged three years, two months and twenty-six days.

Sad indeed was our heart while standing around the death-bed of sweet little Ella. Kind and gentle as a little zephyr, her name was the household word with all who knew her. It was the writer's privilege to be an inmate of our pet's home from the fifth of July until her death, and when I was introduced to the little children of that now broken band her mother said, "This is papa's pet," as she called herself; and I found she was the idol of all who knew her. We thank our heavenly Father for so precious a gift loaned to us for only three bright summers, and we give her back in humble trust and love to the dear Jesus, to whom she prayed nightly.

THE undersigned, having been appointed by the fourth Quarterly Conference of the Delhi circuit, Delhi district, Louisiana Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, "to draft resolutions touching the matter of the death of WILLIAM A. SCOTT," who died at his home in Rayville, La., August 30, 1875, beg leave to report as follows:

Our worthy brother, William A. Scott, having been a member of the church in the bounds of this circuit and a member of this Quarterly Conference, we bear our affectionate testimony to his many virtues as a citizen, a husband and a father; to his devotion to the church in all her interests, and to his great excellence as a Christian; and we offer our sympathy to the members of the church at Rayville, and to the much-bereaved widow and orphan children of our departed brother.

H. P. WELLS,
W. W. COMPTON.

MATTIE, daughter of Nathan E. and Isabella Sellers, was born December 24, 1860, and died July 11, 1875. She joined the church at Reboboth, in Pine Level circuit, Alabama Conference, in 1869, and there she was laid to rest. Though she died so young, she was not surprised by the messenger, nor taken away in youthful sin and folly. The summons to go found her ready. For four long years she had been a sufferer, and her departure was a kind release. Death was to her without terrors. Her faith in God was calmly triumphant. When asked, in her last hours, if she wanted to get well, her reply was: "I leave that with God. I am willing to submit to his will." The little emaciated sufferer overcame, by faith, the king of terrors, and quietly passed away.

HER PASTOR.

DEATH often selects the brightest mark at which to shoot his fatal darts. So it was in the case of MARY ADDIE CLAY, wife of George Clay, and daughter of David and Sarah J. Hughes. She was born in Leake county, Miss., February 15, 1858; joined the M. E. Church South in September, 1873; was married in July, 1874, and died November 16, 1875. She told her weeping husband and mother, but a short while before her death, that she was ready and willing to go. Her father preceded her to the better world but a few months. She leaves a husband, mother and five little sisters to mourn her loss. But their loss is her eternal gain.

THE CLOSING SCENE.

BY T. B. READ.

Within the sober realms of leafless trees
The russet year inhaled the dreamy air,
Like some tanned reaper in his hour of ease,
When all the fields are lying brown and bare.

The gray barns, looking from their hazy hills,
O'er the dun waters widening in the vales,
Sent down the air a greeting to the mills,
On the dull thunder of alternate flails.

All sights were mellowed, and all sounds subdued,
The hills seemed farther, and the streams sang low,
As in a dream the distant woodman hewed
His winter log with many a muffled blow.

The embattled forests, erewhile armed with gold,
Their banners bright with every martial hue,
Now stood like some sad, beaten host of old,
Withdrawn afar in time's remotest blue.

On somber whigs the vulture tried his flight;
The dove scarce heard his sighing mate's complaint;
And, like a star slow drowning in the light,
The village church vane seemed to pale and faint.

The sentinel cock upon the hillside crew—
Crew thrice—and all was stiller than before;
Silent, till some replying warder blew
His alien horn, and then was heard no more.

Where erst the jay, within the elm's tall crest,
Made garrison treason round her unfledged young;
And where the oriole hung her swaying nest,
By every light wind like a censer swung;

Where sang the noisy martins of the eaves,
The busy swallows circling ever near—
Foreboding, as the rustic mind believes,
An early harvest and a plenteous year;

Where every bird that waked the vernal feast
Shook the sweet slumber from its wings at morn;
To warn the reaper of the rosy east;
All now was sunless, empty and forlorn.

Alone, from out the stubble, piped the quail,
And crisked the crow through all the dreary gloom;
Alone the pheasant, drumming in the vale,
Made echo to the distant cottage loom.

There was no bud, no bloom upon the bowers;
The spiders wove their thin shrouds night by night;
The timid dawn, the only ghost of flowers,
Sailed slowly by—passed noiseless out of sight.

Amid all this—in this most dreamy air,
And where the woodbine shed upon the porch
Its crimson leaves, as if the year stood there,
Firing the floor with its inverted torch;

Amid all this—the center of the scene—
The white-haired matron, with monotonous tread,
Plied the swift wheel, and with her joyless mien,
Sat like a fate, and watched the flying thread.

She had known sorrow—he had walked with her,
Oft supped and broke with her the ashen crust,
And in the dead leaves still she heard the stir
Of his dear mantle trailing in the dust.

While yet her cheek was bright with summer bloom,
Her country summoned and she gave her all;
And twice war bowed to her his sable plume;
Regave the sword to rust upon the wall—

Regave the sword, but not the hand that drew,
And struck for liberty the dying blow;
Nor him who, to his sire and country true,
Fell 'mid the ranks of the invading foe.

Long, but not loud, the droning wheel went on,
Like the low murmur of a hive at noon;
Long, but not loud, the memory of the gone
Breathed through her lips a sad and tremulous tone.

At last the thread was snapped—her head was bowed,
Life dropped the distaff through her hands serene,
And loving neighbors smoothed her careful shroud,
While death and winter closed the autumn scene.

Home and Society.

The home may exist almost without contact with society; but society depends absolutely upon the quality of the homes of the people. Young men and women carry out into society their quota of influence, and they carry it from the homes where it is shaped. Fifty young men sent out from fifty homes, brought into any form of associated life, influence each other mutually. Each contributes his share and receives the combined influence of the other forty-nine, and they are only conductors by which he is put into vital communication with the ruling influences of their forty-nine homes.

Between what the child finds at home and what he meets coming from other homes, his life is molded. He may make combinations for himself; he may choose between diverse elements; but he cannot be anything but a combination of some of the tendencies, more or less, better or worse, which are found in the homes among which he moves. If it happens that his own home is more attractive than other society, and its influence predominant, then his future in this life will depend almost wholly upon its quality. If he escapes early into the influence of the outer world, then he may meet forces which will counteract and nullify all that has thus far shaped his life.

The terrible contingency in the rearing of children is that out of multitudes of unknown families there pour these streams of influence which make up the character of society; and in the aggregate the outer world has mastering power to enforce decrees which seem irresistible, through tendencies which are often inscrutable. It is sometimes said that by the child you may know the home; and that would be true were it not for the fact that children are educated by the neighborhood not less than by the parents and teachers.

The modern inventions of philanthropy are of slight advantage, because, for the most part, they ignore the source of our evils and blessings, and attempt to work upon masses of men from the outside. The security depends almost entirely upon the theory and practice which shall prevail concerning the life of the family. The modern devices to escape the legitimate responsibility and care of the household are commonly vicious, and the result of vicious conditions of society. The family life, in which the choicest virtues of the people are nourished, is threatened, because we live too fast, too richly, too expensively; we pitch the scale of respectability too high; we must all be rich, or seem to be. The result is late marriages or none, struggles to live beyond the means, over-work, excessive anxiety, misery, ill health, mutual disgust, premature old age and death. In such vicious conditions of life the young, who have their fortunes to make, find it difficult to keep to the old-fashioned virtues.

Men and women belong to that family; whoever tends to keep them out of it in large numbers helps an unwholesome state of things, which tend to vice if it be not vicious. Women have no rights more sacred than to fill the offices for which nature designed them. It is not a reform which makes woman independent of and careless about the home-life for which she is fitted. In that place she ought to reign, equal in all things, but bound by her desires and her duties to the faithful fulfillment of her functions as wife and mother. If there be social necessities and an unequal distribution of the sexes in any country, which compel her to seek an independent livelihood, such a state of things should be treated as an abnormal condition, to be accepted temporarily and made the most of; but not to be elevated into a desirable precedent. To do otherwise is only to encourage young men to the unmanly belief that they have a right to evade the responsibilities of the household, and get such pleasure as they may out of the society of women, virtuous or vicious, without discharging the duty of a man in providing for them honorable positions in happy homes.

For both men and women no ordering of the details of social life can be wholesome or conducive to social purity which tends to keep them apart, to build up separate interests, or to make it difficult for them under ordinary circumstances to enjoy all the legitimate pleasures of mutual fellowship and mutual dependence. A narrow, well-guarded and fruitful home-life is the nursery of public virtue and civic purity. Seclusion and privacy do not tend necessarily to selfishness, nor to a narrow mind. Civilization and the highest culture tend to a minute subdivision of interests, and such concentrations of influence as are favored by the life of the home.—Liberal Christian.

Carnivorous Plants.

Dr. Darwin has recently published a work on "Insectivorous Plants." He has been experimenting especially with Droseras, and it is thought has settled some mooted points.

His observations have been mainly made on D. rotundifolia. Some have contended the glandular hairs, which undoubtedly lean in toward a captured insect, are simply drawn there by the struggles of the captive. Mr. Darwin proves this to be wrong. The slightest touch of a gland, even by a substance so minute that the finest sense of touch in the human being failed to find it, would be sufficient to draw the surrounding glands toward the disturbed one. Water does not disturb it, but other inanimate substances will. Fine dust from powdered glass will produce the motion. Mr. Darwin, however, finds no motion in any part of the leaf but the glands and connecting hairs, and in this respect fails to corroborate Mrs. Treat's (of Vineland) observations. She found the leaf of Drosera filiformis turn from side to side according as animal matter was placed on either side, getting up to the matter in little over an hour. Mr. Bennett's notice reads as if Mr. Darwin experimented with the D. filiformis, as Mrs. Treat did, but it seems to have been with D. rotundifolia, and the two species may not have exactly identical powers. In connection with this matter, we may note that some recent observations on Droseras in their native places by Mr. Meehan before the Philadelphia Academy of Natural Sciences are reported in the daily papers. He found one solitary specimen of D. filiformis with an insect caught near the apex of the leaf by its coiling over and thus holding it in its folds.

Mr. Darwin has tried to settle the question of digestion in these plants. That the animal matter rapidly disappears after being caught by the leaves is set clearly at rest by the observation of Canby and others that it is quite clear that this destruction is by a process similar to digestion. Mr. Darwin has called in chemical aid, and finds the decomposing power similar in all its phenomena to that of digestion, and he does not hesitate to say they are the same. If, now, only organs can be found, as in animals, through which the digested material is carried into the system for nutritive purposes, the evidence would be complete. Leaving out, however, all consideration as to how these observations of Mr. Darwin's will help certain theories, the long and patient investigations which have resulted in this work entitle the author to the gratitude of lovers of science, who always welcome facts of every kind.

That the Dionea and other insect-catching plants have the power of inducing rapid decay in their captives is fully proved; but that these are digested, as we would say if the plants were animals, is not proved to the satisfaction of all naturalists. Observations on this point are, therefore, still going on. Prof. Balfour, of Edinburg, has recently noted some which he thinks favor the affirmative. A piece of meat placed on the leaf of another plant became putrid and offensive; another piece on a leaf of a Dionea seemed to dry up and was always inodorous. This is a strong point. Then Dr. Balfour observed that plants kept under bell-glasses, and by inference free from insects, did not thrive so well as those left free to catch insects to their hearts' content. But this would not be regarded as so good a point as the last, as plants confined under glasses would not be expected to thrive so well as plants exposed to the atmosphere.

An English gardener who is cultivating Pinguiculas is "bothered" to know if Mr. Darwin's idea that this plant is an insect-eater is correct, why the plant does not feed on the Aphides which infest it? Mr. Darwin is of all men one of the most carefully correct in his facts, whatever may be said of his deductions, and it would be strange if he should be found wrong in regard to Pinguicula. Still it cannot be denied that it is infested with Aphides.

THE FORCE OF PRAYER.—Prayer does not directly take away a trial or its pain, any more than a sense of duty directly takes away the danger of infection; but it preserves the strength of the whole spiritual fiber, so that the trial does not pass into the temptation to sin. A sorrow comes upon you. Omit prayer, and you fall out of God's testing into the devil's temptation; you get angry, hard of heart, reckless. But meet the dreadful hour with prayer—cast your care on God, claim him as your father, though he seem cruel—and the degrading, paralyzing, embittering effects of pain and sorrow pass away, a stream of sanctifying and softening thought pours into the soul, and that which might have wrought your fall but works in you the peaceable fruits of righteousness. You pass from bitterness into the courage of endurance, and from endurance into battle, and from battle into victory, till at last the trial dignifies and blesses your life. The force of prayer is not altogether effective at once. Its action is cumulative. At first there seems no answer to your exceeding bitter cry. But there has been an answer. God has heard. A little grain of strength, not enough to be conscious of, has been given in one way or another. A friend has come in and grasped your hand—you have heard the lark sprinkle his notes like rain-drops on the earth—a text has stolen into your mind, you know not how. Next morning you awake with the old aching at the heart, but the grain of strength has kept you alive—and so it goes on; hour by hour, day by day, prayer brings its tiny sparks of light till they orb into a star; its grains of strength till they grow into an anchor of the soul, sure and steadfast. The answer to prayer is slow; the force of prayer is cumulative. Not till life is over is the whole answer given, the whole strength it has brought understood.—Stopford Brooke.

A Word for the Women.

We do not hesitate to say that the average woman, educated in the better class of schools in this country, is a better scholar, and a more capable and accomplished person, than the average college graduate of the other sex. What we want is cheaper schools of an equal excellence. The farmer's boy goes to college, finds cheap tuition, wins a scholarship perhaps, boards in commons, earns money during vacation and gets through, while his sister stays at home, because the only places where she can get an equal education are expensive beyond her means. There is no college that needs to be so richly endowed as a woman's college. Women are not men, quarrel with the fact as we may, and they cannot get along so cheaply and with such self-helpfulness as men while going through the processes of their education. If we are to have women's colleges we must have well-paid professors, philosophical apparatus, cabinets, collections, art galleries, laboratories, and they must be provided for by private munificence. Provision should be made for the poor, so that high education shall come within the reach of all. There is not a woman's college, or an advanced public institution for the education of women, that is not to-day in need of a large endowment for the purpose of bringing its advantages within the reach of those whose means are small.

Now we commend this matter particularly to rich women. There are many, scattered up and down the country, who are wondering what they shall do with their money when and even before they die. To all these we beg the privilege of commending this great object: Let the boys alone. They have been pretty well taken care of already, and the men will look after them. It is for you, as women wishing well to your own sex, and anxious for its elevation in all possible ways, to endow these institutions that are springing up about the country in its interest, so that the poor shall have an equal chance with the rich. You can greatly help to give the young women of all classes as good a chance as their brothers enjoy, and you can hardly claim a great deal of womanly feeling if you do not do it.—Dr. J. G. Holland, in Scribner.

PERIL AND PENALTY OF SUCCESSFUL LABOR.—Do you think that what are called the lower classes labor only? There is no greater mistake than so to suppose. On the contrary, it is more true to say that, in proportion as you mount higher and higher in the scale of society, the more you will find that individuals labor, the more anxiety attends their labor, the less have they the command of their own time; they may have higher rewards, they may not be constrained by such immediate pressure as to food and raiment; but, I repeat it, they labor, or they have labored, more severely, and they have been subject to more severe checks and disappointments. Who do you think toils most severely, the clerk in a merchant's counting-house or the merchant himself? Who has the most time for rest and repose? Who has the least of that anxiety of heart which forbids him to rest, indeed, when he lies down at night? Depend on it, that often and often when the clerk sleeps soundly, and wakes lightly and refreshed at morn, his master has been wearing out the hours of the night in complicated accounts or toilsome correspondence. One naturally turns to what one knows by experience; there is no profession so much envied, or I may admit, in some senses, so well rewarded as my own; yet look at successful lawyers, how many fall victims to the toil and anxiety they undergo; with broken health and shattered constitutions, how many retire from the field, while not a few perish in the prime of manhood. It is a common observation that chief justices of my own court are always worn out before their time by the continued labors of their office. It was only a short time ago that in a conversation I had with an officer of the House of Lords, he said to me: "I have seen now four lord chancellors on the Woolsack, and watched the effects of office on their health. Every one in turn has felt them—the countenance changes, the strength is impaired, and it becomes clear that nothing but rest or resignation saves them from sinking under the incessant labor."—Sir J. T. Coleridge.

SOME of the Jews in London are inquiring as to the teaching of the Scriptures respecting Christ, and some have embraced the truth.

Religious Intelligence.

—The largest Swiss Sunday school is at Berne, and has 600 scholars and 180 teachers.

—Rev. John H. Chandler, for thirty years a missionary in Siam, will come to the centennial next year, as commissioner from the King of that country.

—The Lutherans of Russia are following the example of the Mennonites to escape military service. A large number are on their way to Wisconsin to found a colony.

—There are now fewer Baptist churches and members in New York than the city contained twenty-five years ago, though in the interval the population was nearly doubled.

—At the revival of religion in Moonta, Australia, in about six weeks not less than two hundred and sixty persons professed to be converted, and it is believed the results will be permanently beneficial.

—During the last five years, or since the union of the two General Assemblies of the Presbyterian Board of Church Erection, 902 congregations have been added, securing church property thereby worth $4,550,000, and affording accommodation to 307,000 worshipers.

—Cardinal McCloskey assisted at the commencement of the Catholic University in Dublin, November 11. He was presented with an address, to which he replied that the establishment of a Catholic university there was an example for America and all other countries.

—The Independent (English) speaks of the greatly depressed condition of the English Congregational clergy. Of 2,000 pastors it says that 2,000 receive less than £200, inclusive of rent where parsonages exist, and they are "socially in a position of humiliation which dishonors and discredits the ministry."

—According to the census returns of New Zealand there are one hundred and twenty-seven denominational distinctions in the colony, the appellations of some of which are very quaint. Take the following, for instance: "Bible Thumpers," "Unleavened Brethren of Christ," "Progressionists," "Old Identity," "Evolutionists," and "Calathumpians."

—A missionary of the Presbyterian Board, writing from Ningpo, mentions the recent conversion of a young man engaged in a large silk house belonging to his uncle. The convert endured much from the insults of his fellow-clerks, was threatened by his uncle with the loss of his place, and after his baptism was actually dismissed. This, as the missionary remarks, is a representative case. It fairly brings to view the difficulty of the work in China. Profession of Christianity in very many cases means loss of business and of support.

—The introduction of popular secular airs into the service of song in religious assemblies is not confined to the revival assemblies of England and America. In Baboo Chunder Sen's journal, the Indian Mirror, we read: "Popular tunes, such as one hears in the streets, are being introduced in a large measure into the Brahmo Somaj. We have also lately noticed the adoption of such musical instruments as the ektara, etc., used by the lowest classes of Hindoo mendicants. This is significant, as showing a new direction of missionary efforts."

JAPAN.—Twelve missionary societies, English and American, work in Japan. One hundred missionaries, including the ladies employed, are residing in Yeddo, Yokohama, Kobe, Osaka, Nagasaki and Hakodadi. In five of these cities Christian churches have already been organized whose united membership is about two hundred. A restriction still exists which prevents the missionaries from journeying more than twenty-five miles from a treaty port; still the Scriptures and religious works are sent without restriction over the land, carrying light and salvation to many hearts. Christianity is taking a strong hold of the people, and must triumph in that country.

—The late moderator of the Scotch Free Church Assembly was Dr. Stewart, who for more than a quarter of a century has labored among the Scotch Presbyterians residing at the Italian port of Leghorn. His attention was early drawn to the religious needs of the Italians around him; but it has only been in latter years that the police restrictions upon his work have been removed. His plans of evangelization have been carried on in connection with the Waldensian Church. As the result of the toil of his wife and of himself, there are now at Leghorn, besides his own church, a Waldensian congregation and six schools, with about five hundred pupils. The schools are described as being in an excellent condition. They are taught by Waldensians, and have already become important feeders for the Waldensian ministry.

—When in the early days of West African missions one laborer after the other was cut off by the deadly pestilence, the home committee in England resorted to prayer after each receipt of the disheartening news. And now Sierra Leone has become a bright gospel light, the shinings of which have been seen at many places on the West African coast. It was the wish of Sir Henry Lawrence that the heroic deeds at Lucknow, India, during the mutiny, should be commemorated by the establishment of a Christian mission in that center of Mohammedanism. Although he did not live to see his wish carried out, he may be regarded as the real founder of the mission, which has been greatly prospered under the care of the Church Missionary Society. The native congregation has now two hundred and fifty members, of whom ninety-three are communicants, and they meet a great part of their current expenses. It is now proposed to build a church for them, in memory of that noble Indian administrator who, at a time when the government was not so kindly disposed toward missions as it is now, was not ashamed of the gospel.

Our Young People.

A MORNING SUNBEAM.

A nestling in the little crib,
A soft hand laid upon my head,
A gentle whisper in my ear:
"Mamma, I'm gittin' tired."

"O no," I said, "'twill never do;
Now shut those little peepers tight,
And sleep and dream till morning breaks,
Then you may come—when come the light.

Again a nestling in the crib,
As down to rest my little lay,
I listened, for I thought she spoke—
"Had it up, light," I heard her say.

Then all was still. We slept again
Till dawn lit up the eastern sky;
Then sang my birdie, sweet and clear:
"Now light has tum, and so has I."

TOM SINKLE'S YARN CONTINUED.

MY DEAR CHILDREN: Tom Sinkle, or Porpoise Tom, you know we called him—and if you are patient you will find out why some time before you do How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest—said that his Aunt Molly continued her story thus:

"Well, Tom, they were married and went off to sea together on the Tokay; and, though I knew it was right, yet somehow I could not feel in my heart that your father had been true to his promise to me. The Tokay was bound for Calcutta by way of London, and it was nearly two years before she returned; but at last we saw her arrival in New York, and looked for your father and mother home again.

"I never can forget that night, Tom, the longest day of my life. My father and mother, not thinking they would reach home for a few days, had taken our little boat, well loaded with provisions, with them, and gone over to our cove on yonder island for another fishing party, such as we had the night your mother was thrown ashore. It was just another such a night as that, Tom, and I know I felt a chill come over me as I thought: What if James and Flo should take a notion to come to Castine in Capt. Brown's cutter from Portland, and be out in this terrible storm? The thought was a dreadful one, but I did not mention it, as I knew that father did not expect them for a whole week yet. Tom, do you know I believe there must be twins among the days and nights, for this night was the very twin of the one so long before—just such peals of thunder and brilliant flashes of lightning; and, yes, just as we sat down to supper there came sounding above the tempest the boom of the alarm gun, and my father started up and exclaimed, in almost the very words he had used before: 'Oh, my God! There is a ship, and she will certainly get on those rocks off Deer's Leap!' and, just as before, we all rushed out of our cove with fire brands and made for the point, waving our signals. It was not a ship this time, but, as we soon saw by the lightning flashes, a small cutter, which then made regular trips between Castine and Portland. 'It is Brown's cutter,' said my father, 'thrown half out of water on those rocks, and he knowing the coast by heart; and God have mercy on them. She is full of people.'

"There were more people living on the island than were there sixteen years before, and they were better prepared to render service to vessels in distress than at that time; and it was not long before the signals from the cutter were answered by a gun on shore, and a shot with a small cord attached was thrown across the vessel, and a rope drawn on board. And now the question was: Could the poor creatures manage to cling to the rope and make their way ashore in such a sea? Oh, how glad we were to think our dear ones were not there; and we stood near the shore—my father and the other men as far out in the water as they could get, ready to render what aid we could to those who should be so fortunate as to come within our reach. God helped us, Tom, and gave the poor creatures strength, and nearly all were saved. But just as we were hoping all were on shore, judge of our horror, Tom, when we saw a man and woman with an infant child struggling in the water near the cutter; they did not even have hold of the rope, but the man was making most desperate efforts, while holding the infant with one hand above the roaring sea, with the other to shove the woman toward the rope. I felt it in my heart, Tom, that man was my twin brother James. Oh, how I prayed God to deliver him, as, almost frantic with anxiety, I rushed around among the men and called upon them to go to his relief. I knew not what I asked, for the attempt would have been madness. But God heard my prayer, at least in part, for all at once the men set up a shout that he had gained the rope, and soon they were almost in reach of the stalwart arms that were stretching out from the water for their reception. I never can understand it, Tom, to my dying hour. I saw your mother drawn from the water, and passed from man to man toward the shore, and I saw by the bonfires that were blazing all along the coast you too, the baby boy of only a year old, thrown as by a last frantic effort from your father's hands into those of the man nearest him in the water, and the same moment a wave strike over your father, and when it had passed he no longer had hold of the rope, nor was he ever seen again.

"I cannot describe our agony, nor need I describe our efforts to console and strengthen poor Flo, who came back to us with the shadow of death on her. All our efforts were in vain, Tom. She died the next day, and left you to me, and asked me, for the love I bore your father, to take care of you for her, and be a mother to you. Haven't I done it, Tom?"

"I told Aunt Molly that she had been as kind as a mother could be to me, and that I would be a most ungrateful wretch to leave her; but for all that I did leave her not many days after, when I had sort of got over her story, and went to sea on the Pauline, as I said. It was awful wicked in me, I know, messmates, but you see I was only fourteen years old. Well, as I was saying, I had come back again, after many years, well enough off, and had gone down to the old place, determined to make her as comfortable as I could in her old age, and then is the time I thrashed that man at Blue Hill."

"I expect, grandpa, you had better let the children go to bed, and tell that story to-morrow night."

Good-night, my little ones. Be sure to ask "our Father" for his care. GRANDPA GOODALE.

From Our Little Friends.

PATTERSONVILLE, LA., Dec. 21, 1875.

DR. L. PARKER: I see so many little girls writing to you, and it pleases us to know you have a column for us little children. At present I am five years old, going on six. I have written once to my papa when away from home. My second one is to you. I am a regular Sunday school scholar. I love the Sunday school, and love to sing. We love our pastor, Rev. R. A. Davis, very much. He has been so kind to arrange for his little flock, since he has been here, the second Christmas tree. I have a nice little speech to recite at our exhibition, which will be with the Christmas tree. I lead prayer every morning and evening at our family altar, and read my Bible. I am trying to be a little Christian. I have collected $5 for the widows and orphans. I will try and collect $5 more for the missions. I wish you a merry Christmas and a happy New Year.

From your little friend,

HATTIE MAY KERN.

[A happy New Year to our little correspondent.—EDITOR.]

LOG SPRINGS, WILKINSON CO., MISS., December 4, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I have been thinking I was too young to write to the ADVOCATE, and my sister, Nannie Preston, might do the writing for us both, as she is quite two years older than I am; but I concluded I could get mamma to write it for me, and tell her what to say, you know, for I cannot write well yet. Sister Nannie said we ought not to ask any more how Barney milked the bays' nest, but you see, Mr. Editor, I do want to know so bad. Why it has been nearly a year, I think, since Grandpa Goodale commenced about Barney, and here we are almost where we began. Mamma says if I suggest anything rude she will stop writing; so I will drop the subject. Let me add, though, that I love the ADVOCATE dearly, think the Child's Corner charming, and am trying hard to become able to write you a letter myself, when you will hear from me again. Till then good-by.

Your little friend,

GEORGIE SEYMOUR WOOD.

NEAR DESOTO, MISS., Dec. 1, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I feel encouraged to write to you, as I see so many other little boys and girls writing. Like all the others, I too read the Child's Corner, and like it so much, especially Grandpa Goodale's stories, and am so anxious to hear "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest." I think Hunter Thatcher is right when he says he thinks it a bee-hive. We all know that Barney is an Irishman, and says bay instead of bee. Grandpa Goodale must not keep us waiting longer than Christmas before he tells us. I am a little boy eleven years old. I live with my mamma and grandma. My pa is dead. Your little friend,

COLIN HYDE.

IT WAS after dinner, and it was dull; the conversation did not seem to start in the least. Then the cynic said: "Will nobody go home, that we may have a fine opportunity to tear him all to pieces as soon as he leaves?"

Turning Over a New Leaf.

This is the purpose of thousands as they reach the new year. For some reason people wait for an epoch from which to date their reformations. There must be a point from which to start, and it is imagined that there will be something morally helpful in connecting a new departure with the virgin date of January 1, 1876. The very coincidence will strengthen our resolutions, and we shall never be at a loss about the exact time when our better life began. The old year has vanished, and our evil ways have somehow vanished with it, and now it will be easy to put on white garments and keep them clean. We have been gathering courage and fortifying ourselves with arguments for months. We have thrown dams across the streams to husband the forces which we expect to turn on at the appointed hour. With the accumulated momentum, and with the garnered-up power of a cherished purpose, we expect to overcome all resistance and to thrive in all goodness. How many will actually begin, and how many will hold out, we can only conjecture.

There are those who have been leading dissolute lives—slaves to intemperance and other vices—who are to forsake their sins. They have determined that these shall die with the old year, and that henceforth they will be free. Others who have been idle, wasteful, improvident, are only waiting for the dawn of the new Anno Domini to gird up their loins and to begin a course of enterprising and thrifty industry. All the broken and marred undertakings, the material, moral and mental failures of the past, are to be mended and retrieved. The mistakes, negligences and blunders of the past year are by no means to be carried into the next.

Christians have been looking forward to the new year. They are going to do better. The backslidings, omissions and dissatisfactions of the late year press hard upon their consciences. If they had died, what an account some of them would have to render! With the watch-night services they will renew their vows, and cleanse themselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit. Not forever at this poor dying rate are they willing to live. Now they will press along the mark, and fight the good fight of faith.

Perhaps they will. But wherefore have all these purposes been put off for a future day? Herein is the trouble. Is there any mysterious and hallowing power in the end or beginning of a year? What are these but arbitrary and imaginary lines drawn in the calendar for our convenience? Surely they have not power to transfigure the sinner into a saint, or to translate the soul out of darkness into the kingdom of light. To delay the right for an hour is always dangerous. Hence the cause of failure lurks in all these reformations and amendments which have for their consummation some future time. To postpone duty is to trample upon principle, to evade the convictions of truth and conscience, and thus to carry with us to the appointed hour of repentance the self-imposed delusion which has kept us in our sins hitherto. The facility with which the voice of God has been silenced will be so strengthened as to be more than an offset against the dubious and shadowy committals of vows that are abundantly cushioned with mental reservations. Turning over a new leaf is well enough at any time if we will only do it.

It may mean the opening of a new account, the settling up of the old business, and striking a balance sheet to show how things stand. Or it may mean that we have dwelt long enough in our primmers and primary lessons, and that we must move on to advanced and higher forms. Or it may signify for some that they have lingered too long over the soiled and defiling pages of ungodly pleasures and worldly dissipation, and that they are now to open upon the more serious and instructive pages of living truth. There are those who have conned only the page of affliction; it has been wet with their tears, and every line has been dark with sorrow. God may permit them to look upon a brighter chapter—one illuminated and illustrated by the pencils of his promises and consolations.

Many, however long they have lived, have scarcely passed beyond the title page and preface of life. They have wasted years upon the mere binding; while the contents, the real lessons and meaning of life, have never been so much as glanced at. To them turning over a new leaf is to begin to live in earnest, to measure their responsibilities and strive to meet them, and to realize the grandeur and dignity of their mission and destiny as redeemed and immortal beings. In the order of events we enter upon new relations and duties. The boy has become a man, and he must put away childish things. The girl has entered womanhood, and she must adjust herself to the circumstances. The young men and maidens of last year are the husbands and wives of this. The conjugal tie and the parental bond, new home circles, and new conditions of society and pursuit, press upon us with their joys and cares. Whether we will or no, we are passing through the volume to the index and the finis of the last day.

In our turnings over let us be sure that it is a new leaf, that old things have passed away, and that all things are become new—not an old parchment from which one writing has been rubbed out to make place for another. The soul often exhibits the phenomenon of the palimpsest—the new text fades and the old starts into life. We must aim at a new creation, to enter upon a new life, to put off the old man with his deeds, and to put on the new man. A man, like a good book, should grow better as he advances, not largely made up of pretentious binding, margins and ily leaves, but of solid, useful and inspiring contents. And in turning over the new leaf of the year let it not be done with much rattle and rustle of paper and paper cutters, but with the quiet and prayerful studiousness of those who have learned in the school of Christ.

An Indiscreet Bishop.

Good Bishop Haven is the fast boy in the family, and he gives his brethren and the Northern Methodist household a great deal of trouble. They are sorely at a loss how to apologize for his wayward course, and it occupies much of the space and time of acute editors and the more politic church leaders to explain away his antics, and to maintain the decency and respectability of the connection. Gil. is a sad dog indeed, a constant worry to the more circumspect brethren, and constantly putting his foot in it, manger all their solemn warnings and admonitions. They have labored with this erratic brother long and patiently, but to little purpose. He will write about the limbs and busts and fascinations of the "tinted Venuses," and go into raptures over miscegenation, whereby the impoverished blood of the degenerate Caucasian shall be enriched and ennobled. Then he is very spiteful toward the South, and tells hard stories about us, just as we are ready to fall into the fraternal arms of the Round Lake company. While the common sense of his church is at the conclusion that whites and blacks do better in separate houses and Conferences, he will have none of this cowardly compromise.

In fact he is a marplot everywhere, a thorn in the side of our sister church, and always stirring up strife. In electing him Bishop they thought he was a good fellow, they liked his Radicalism and Southern phobia, and doubtless believed that the dash and spirit which they so much admired would, in this great office, become tempered with some degree of prudence. But not a bit of difference has his elevation to the episcopacy made in him. Prince Hal mended when he became king, and even snubbed the valorous Sir John and other companions of his youthful riot. But Gil. is Gil. in spite of the dignity that doth hedge about a Bishop. He goes off at half cock on all subjects indifferently, and says things at times and in ways most inopportune.

Judging from the buzz and clamor created by it, the last deliverance on the third term has been the worst of his offending. It was at a meeting of preachers in Boston, where Bro. Ives, of strychnine memory, was so loudly applauded, that the speech was made. This is the substance of the offensive utterance:

There was one class of people in the South who had been recognized as a nationality by the Pope, and they would welcome his followers to these shores; but the race freed by the people of the North will never strike a blow against constitutional liberty. Bishop Haven said that there is to be a tremendous political battle this year, beginning with the election of a Democratic speaker of the national House of Representatives. He said that the ministers of Boston are in the field of battle, their words are reported, and the Southern papers comment on them. The question is: "Shall the Northern people rule the nation?" "Shall the Puritan or the Cavalier be the ruler?" "Shall Boston or Charleston be the center?" The Methodist Episcopal Church is the only institution in the South to-day that represents the American nation. You must, he said, stand by your church. There are in the South nearly three hundred thousand members of the Methodist Episcopal Church who know what they believe just as well as the people of New England, and better. They appreciate liberty, and those who gave it to them; they never will be betrayers, and let the people of the North never betray them. The malcontents of the South know that they were defeated by one man; that man is President Grant, and if the people throw him overboard, at the command of politicians, they will rue it. Pray, brethren, that President Grant may be re-elected. Pray for the true people of the South, and you will find that thus you will be able to keep down kindred threatening powers—the slave power and the power of the papacy.

After such a mild-mannered speech as this the hue and cry is raised. The audience—Methodist preachers more than two hundred strong—did applaud to the echo. It was just what they had all thought and felt, and could not help cheering. Then came from the press censure or attempts to explain. The Advocate of New York knew the Bishop had been misrepresented, the Methodist protests that he does not represent the Northern Church, Dr. Vincent washes his hands of the matter, and tells us that the Sunday school and Tract Society had nothing to do with it, and Bishop Simpson comes out in a card to clear his skirts and those of the church.

Bishop Haven in all this has been badly treated. He said what the most of his brethren believed to be truth, and what the greater number is working for, tooth and nail. Northern Methodism wants Grant, and they are determined to have him. Especially for their Southern work they need a man who will not scruple to override the civil law and use bayonets freely in carrying the elections. Their three hundred thousand members—mostly negroes—are so many votes for Grant. They can be manipulated and wielded to political advantage and to perpetuate Puritan rule—that is, carpet-bag domination—in the South. The Bishop in his Boston speech simply let the cat out of the bag, or showed that she was in the meal tub. He is not a politic man, and in his rash and outspoken way uncovered the real convictions and policy of his people. He told his audience and his constituents what was in their hearts, and for this he must be apologized for by some and censured by others! The thing was well enough, but it ought not to have been spoken at that time. It is a shame to go back on a man—a Bishop especially—in this way. In spite of all the disclaimers and fretting of the Bishop's more reticent and wary brethren, we must commend his courage, candor and consistency. He does not stab in the dark, he does not fight under cover, but unfurls his banner in the open field, and marshals his forces in the light of day. The men who most severely condemn are likely to be those who have the same convictions with himself, but who regard their expression as inexpedient or untimely.

What our Northern friends are to do with their wild colt of a Bishop we do not know. If he could be impounded in some distant field, as Mexico or Alaska, or if he could be kept close to his work in Georgia, it would be well for them, but we fear that he is utterly irrepressible—a spirit that no man can tame. His tongue and pen are an unruly evil.

A Bishop's Wife in California.

In the Pacific Methodist of December 17 we find a very entertaining letter from Sister Kavanaugh. Her descriptions make us feel like transferring. We quote as follows:

That beautiful valley of Santa Clara still holds the palm, in my estimation, all advantages and disadvantages considered. It has as pleasant a climate as need be; its improvements are elegant and tasteful, its citizens social and refined, and its productions—but I have so often spoken of its fruits I will spare my friends a recapitulation, and only say that, as we were leaving our pleasant home at Dr. Caldwell's, one morning, to attend Conference, we were met by a merry-faced cousin, a daughter of Dr. Caldwell, who presented us with a beautiful bunch of grapes, so large that a large-size dinner plate could not hold it, so thickly set with perfect grapes that a very small part of the stem was perceivable; so luscious and perfect a bunch we had not seen, and we hastened to the dining-room to place it upon the scales and ascertain its weight—three and a half pounds; pretty good eating for that day for Bishop and myself. The Conference session in our new church at San Jose was very pleasant. I attended every morning session, visited in the afternoon, and went to church at night, without feeling any degree of weariness or fatigue. I was gratified to meet very many of the wives of our preachers at this Conference, and all looking well and happy. It was a very pleasant reunion to me to thus meet them after an absence of three years. I have attended many Conferences in company with my husband, and I have always found those Conferences where the wives accompany their preacher husbands the most agreeable and well-to-do Conferences. The near approach of the Los Angeles Conference hurried our departure from San Jose to San Francisco, where we embarked on the twentieth of October for Los Angeles.

This is a rapidly growing city, more extensively and handsomely improved than we expected to see. We were very kindly received and entertained at an elegant private boarding-house, called the Humboldt House. Here we were associated with the very agreeable and intelligent Dr. Lucky and other friends of earlier years. After spending three days, including the Sabbath, thus pleasantly situated, worshiping in our new church, a tasteful and elegant edifice, we left for Los Nietos, the place of our Southern California Conference. There we were promptly met by the kind brother to whose home we had been assigned during our stay. Bro. Barnett and his gentle, kind-hearted wife did all in their power to make our stay with them comfortable. Other thoughtful friends and members of our church paid us all the attention we had time to receive. Conference continued its session of six days, and adjourned on Monday night.

A few days rest for Bishop, and then a ride was proposed to see something of the surrounding country, &c, in company with Bro. Frank Adams and his wife, we were taken on a four days' tour through the country. We spent two nights and a day with a very enterprising family, members of our church. A family of ten children, all at home, agreeable, obedient and useful, from the eldest son to the little girl of six years. Here was an instance of a well-governed family. The father and mother looked young, cheerful and happy, the sons energetic young men, assisting the father readily in all his duties, and the daughters, from sixteen down to six, performing all the duties of the house and kitchen actively and pleasantly, while the father and mother accompanied us on our visit, a distance of seven or eight miles, to the Newport of Los Angeles county, which is a bay of sufficient depth for the landing of ships. Returning with this kind family to their home, we passed the second night with them, and on the morning of the seventh of November, it being Sabbath, proceeded with our company to Santa Anna, a distance of six miles, where Bishop Kavanaugh preached to a large and attentive congregation, assembled under the shade of a wide-spreading oak, on the well-cultivated ranch of Mr. Stafford, formerly of Petaluma. Being invited to dine and spend the night with Mr. Stafford's family, whose acquaintance we had made before they left Petaluma, we were surprised to see the great improvement that had been made in the short space of time they had occupied their place. There we saw superior stock, both horses and cows, handsome fowls of any number, thrifty bees, orchards of coming oranges and lemons, and a vineyard, some of the grapes of which we ate, the finest in size and flavor of any we had tasted in California.

Returning to Los Nietos, we passed three days more, resting at night with the kind family who had the care of us, and dining each successive day with other beloved friends. The country around Los Nietos is certainly the most wonderful for production of any we have visited. I forbear to tell all I have been told, but this much I may venture: I saw a sweet potato that weighed fourteen and a half pounds, and was on the ground on which an acre produced onions that yielded to the owner $625. We dined with a widow lady, whose oldest son, a little boy of eleven years of age, was gathering the seed of the black locust, which he was shelling out and putting up in bags, for which he could realize $1 per pound. He had by his own industry, in selling seed and the remains of the grape crop, already realized nearly $40, and more yet to sell.

The Conference adjourned on Tuesday, December 21. The next session will be held at Natchez. We are indebted to the secretary, Dr. Andrews, for a copy of the

It will be seen by referring to our rates in the first column, fourth page, that we reduce the subscription price of the ADVOCATE to TWO DOLLARS. We trust that every subscriber will make the effort to send us at least one new subscriber at the beginning of the year, and that our agents will be able to increase our list to a sufficient extent to sustain us in the movement to reduce.

BISHOP KAVANAUGH.—The Bishop, accompanied by Mrs. Kavanaugh, arrived in this city last Monday, having spent a week at Santa Barbara and Carpenteria. They are both in fine health, and speak rapturously of our delightful southern coast. They went immediately to Petaluma, from whence the Bishop will return to San Francisco to supply the pulpit of St. Paul's church until he can provide a permanent pastor for the congregation. We anticipate a season of rare pleasure. Mrs. Kavanaugh has kindly given us a letter, which will be found in another column, and which will be read with great interest. We hope to have others from her pen.—Pacific Methodist, December 17.

AMONG the lay delegates to the Mississippi Conference we were glad to meet our old and esteemed friend and brother, Robert Babington, of Franklinton, La. Bro. Babington is alive to all the interests of the church, and one of the best agents of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

MR. NICHOLAS MILBURN, father of Rev. W. H. Milburn, died at Jacksonville, Ill., November 20, 1875, aged seventy-eight years.

Dedication of the St. Charles Avenue Church.

The new church announced by us some months ago as in process of building is now completed, and will be opened on next Sunday, January 2. Thus far the enterprise has been carried forward mainly by the generous efforts and devisings of our brother, R. W. Rayne, who has given to it not only his money, but a great deal of thoughtful care at every step of the work. The edifice is of Gothic architecture, built substantially of brick, with an imposing tower and graceful spire, and is altogether a handsome and stately building, an ornament to that part of the city in which it is located, and scarcely excelled in beauty by any church in the city. It is situated on St. Charles avenue, in the Sixth District, and in one of the finest neighborhoods of that delightful and growing section. The interior is handsomely finished. A gallery extends across the front end, capable of seating one hundred and fifty persons, besides giving ample room for organ and choir, should it be found desirable to place them there. The seats are made of cypress, with walnut trimmings. The seating capacity, exclusive of the gallery, is for something over five hundred. Altogether there is room for say, at the most, seven hundred persons. Rev. W. E. Munsey, the recently appointed pastor, reached the city last week, and enters at once upon his pastoral work. The dedicatory sermon will be preached by Dr. Munsey at eleven A. M. There will also be preaching at three and at seven P. M.

Rev. Calvin Brewer.

It is with sorrow that we have heard of the death of the Rev. Calvin Brewer, of Wilbraham, Mass. He died at Wilbraham, November 29, aged ninety years. He was one of the founders of the Wesleyan Academy at Wilbraham, and a man venerated and beloved for his faithfulness as a minister, and for the purity and sweetness of character which marked his long and useful life. He was a brother of Mrs. S. B. Thomas, a venerable lady still living in our midst, and well known and esteemed. A son, Mr. Lorenzo D. Brewer, and a daughter, the first wife of W. H. Foster, of New Orleans, died years ago in Louisiana. A widowed daughter, Mrs. C. H. M. Newell, is the only survivor of his family. We had the pleasure of knowing Bro. Brewer personally, and there are none whom we more sincerely loved and revered. He was always a considerate friend of the South. Southern Methodism had a warm place in his heart, and in his death we feel that we have been bereaved of a father in Israel. His spirit was sunny and cheerful to the last, and, though bending under the weight of ninety years, his mind was clear and active. In a green old age, and full of years, he died—peacefully, tranquilly passing to his heavenly rest, "in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in in his season." Among his last words were these: "I know whom I have believed."

OUR Bro. A. J. Briggs, of the Alabama Conference, has met with a sad bereavement in the death of his little daughter. To him and to the stricken mother we tender our sympathies. Rev. R. S. Woodward, writing, Summerfield, Ala., December 19, says:

"Dear Bro. Parker: It becomes my painful duty to record the death of dear little Mattie, third daughter of Rev. A. J. and Mrs. Martha Brewer Briggs. She was born in Prattville, December 2, 1866, and died suddenly, of congestion, at the district parsonage, in this place, at one o'clock this morning, aged nine years and seventeen days. She was a child of unusual promise, being possessed of rare personal attractions and brilliant intellect. She was remarkably gifted in vocal and instrumental music. Her voice was unsurpassed for sweetness and compass; but she now tunes her lyre to make melody in heaven. I received her into the church a little more than a year ago, and the last time she attended church she quietly kneeled by her mother and took the holy sacrament. The little lamb is safe in the fold—the star has not set, but gone down to rise in immortal splendor."

WE WERE gratified to meet, at the late session of the Mississippi Conference, Rev. D. D. Moore, president of the Grenada Female College. President Moore represented the institution as well organized, and with everything to encourage the hope of a prosperous future. The school is under the patronage of the North Mississippi Conference.

THE Rev. Dr. Deems, pastor of the Church of the Strangers, New York, was, at his own request, granted a location at the recent session of the North Carolina Conference.

OUR CENTENARIAN.—The venerable Rev. Henry Bœhm, whose centenary year was completed and duly celebrated on the eighth of June last, says the New York Christian Advocate, not only still lives, but is in excellent health. During the summer, and subsequent to the centenary ceremonies, and his sermon in the old John Street church, he was ill, and blind for some time, and when better in physical health did not regain his previous mental vigor. His prostration was attributed by his family and by his physician to the great strain upon him caused by the excitement incident to the extraordinary scenes through which he had just passed. In order to obtain greater quiet he was taken into the country, where, at the residence of a granddaughter, he soon began to recuperate his wanted strength, both in mind and body. A grateful note from his daughter, Mrs. Emley, informs us that "he is now himself again," and even better than for several years past. His friends will not be disappointed if he should look in upon the next General Conference in Baltimore (where he attended a General Conference in 1800,) and upon the national centennial in Philadelphia.

SPECIAL CALL.

AGENTS WANTED

To sell the New Patent Improved EYE-CUPS. Unequalled to be the best paying business offered to Agents by any house. An easy and pleasant employment.

The value of the celebrated new Patent Improved Eye-Cups for the restoration of sight breaks out and blazes in the evidences of over 4,000 genuine testimonials of cures, and recommended by more than 1,000 of our best physicians in their practice.

The Patent Eyed Cups are a scientific and philosophical discovery, and as Alex. R. Wyeth, M. D., and William Bentley, M. D., write, they are certainly the greatest invention of the age.

Read the following certificates:

FELIX SON STATION, LOUIS CO., KY., June 6, 1875.

DR. J. BALL & CO., OPTICISTS—Gentlemen: Your Patent Eye Cups are, in my judgment, the most splendid triumph which optical science has ever achieved, but, like all great and important truths, in this or in any other branch of science and philosophy, have much to contend with from the ignorance and prejudice of a too skeptical public; but truth is mighty and will prevail, and it is only a question of time as regards their general acceptance and indorsement by all. I have in my hands certificates of persons testifying in unequivocal terms to their merits. The most prominent physicians of my county recommend your Eye-Cups.

I am, respectfully, J. A. L. BOYER.

William Bentley, M. D., Salvisa, Ky., writes: "Thanks to you for the greatest of all inventions. My sight is fully restored by the use of your Patent Eye-Cups, after being almost entirely blind for twenty-six years."

Alex. R. Wyeth, M. D., Atchison, Pa., writes: "After total blindness of my left eye for four years, by paralysis of the optic nerve, by my after using those of your Patent Eye-Cups restored my eyesight permanently in three minutes."

Rev. S. H. Falkinburg, minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, writes: "Your Patent Eye-Cups have rest and my sight, for which I am most thankful to the Father of mercies. By your advertisement I saw at a glance that your invaluable Eye-Cups performed their work perfectly in accordance with physiological law—that they literally fed the eyes that were starving for nutrition. May God greatly bless you, and may your nature be enshrined in the affectionate memories of multiplied thousands as one of the benefactors of your kind."

Horace R. Burnet, M. D., says: "I sold, and collected future sales liberally. The Patent Eye-Cups—they will make money, and make it fast too; no small celebrity affair, but a superb, number one, upstart business, and premises, as far as I can see, to be lifelong."

Mayor T. C. Ellis wrote us, November 16, 1875: "I have tested the Patent Young Eye-Cups and am satisfied they are good. I am pleased with them. They are certainly the greatest invention of the age."

Hon. Horace Greeley, late editor of the New York Tribune, wrote: "Dr. J. Ball, of our city, is a gentleman and responsible man, who is incapable of intentional deception or humbuggism."

Prof. W. Merrick writes: "Truly, I am grateful to your noble invention. My sight is restored by your Patent Eye-Cups. May Heaven bless and preserve you. I have been using spectacles twenty years. I am seventy-one years old. I do all my writing without glasses, and I bless the inventor of the Patent Eye-Cups every time I take up my old steel pen."

Adolph Bjornberg, M. D., physician to Emperor Napoleon, wrote, after having his sight restored by our Patent Eye-Cups: "With gratitude to God, and thankfulness to the inventors, Dr. J. Ball & Co., I hereby recommend the land of the Eye-Cups on full battle to all and every one that has any impaired eyesight, believing, as I do, that since the experiment with this wonderful discovery has proved successful on me, at my advanced period of life—ninety years of age—I believe they will restore the vision to any individual if they are properly applied.

ADOLPH BJORNBERG, M. D."

Commonwealth of Massachusetts, Essex, ss.

June 5, 1875, personally appeared Adolph Bjornberg, made oath to the following certificate, and by him subscribed and sworn before me.

WILLIAM STEVENS, J. P.

LAWRENCE CITY, MASS., June 9, 1875.

We the undersigned, having personally known Dr. Adolph Bjornberg for years, believe him to be an honest, moral man, trustworthy, and in truth and veracity unspotted. His character is without reproach.

M. ROONEY, Ex-Mayor.
S. E. W. DAVIS, Ex-Mayor.
GEORGE S. MERRILL, P. M.
JOHN H. HAWKSHURY, City Treas.

MEDICAL.

I MUST OWN that your Simmons' Liver Regulator fully deserves the popularity it has obtained. As a family medicine it has no equal. It cured my wife of a malady I had counted incurable—that scourge of our American people, dyspepsia. She desires that all nations and people might know the virtues of this God-given remedy. Hoping that the above will appear in your Almanac of 1876, and be of some use in extolling the virtues of your excellent medicine to the wish of your humble servant,

A. E. P. ALBERT,
Professor in Nicholls Pelagie School,
Parish of Terrebonne, La.

I have used Simmons' Liver Regulator for two years, and recommend it as a very superior medicine for Dyspepsia and Liver Disease.

GEORGE W. SMITH,
Kentucky Conference,
Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Your valuable medicine (Simmons' Regulator) has saved me doctors' bills often. I use it for everything that it is recommended for, and never knew it to fail. I have used it in Colic and Grubs with my mules and horses, giving them about half a bottle at a time. I have not lost one that I gave it to. You can recommend it to every one that has stock as being the best medicine known for all complaints that horse flesh is heir to.

E. T. TAYLOR,
Agent for Grangers of Georgia.

Simmons' Liver-Regulator should be in the house of the best medicines ever compounded from the great botanic garden of nature, and contains no life-destroying component hidden under some technical name, but is a purifier, rejuvenator and regulator and only of the Liver, but of the whole system.

Mulched Strawberries.

Many of our readers have noticed on fruit stands the difference in the appearance of fruit, some having a peculiar glossiness that rendered them exceedingly attractive, while others would have a dull, dead appearance, that was unattractive. The first-named was quickly sold at paying prices, while the last "went begging" for purchasers. "What is the reason for the glossiness?" you ask. Simply that the plants were heavily mulched, and perhaps watered. Not only does mulch keep the fruit clean, but, keeping the surface of the ground moist and cool, it prevents the reflection of the sun's rays from a dry, hot surface from burning or scorching the fruit, and giving it a dull, dead appearance. We have before referred to a plantation of Wilson's Albany grown by a farmer living near South Bend, Ind., a few years ago, not only in reference to the large yield, but the fine size and peculiar glossiness of his fruit, which sold his entire crop quick at twenty-five cents per quart. We never shall forget that year. No rain from the middle of May to the last of June—just at the time when strawberries most needed it. Our strawberries not grown in matted rows, notwithstanding they were mulched some in the rows, were about like bullets for size and hardiness, and we obtained from twenty to twenty-five bushels to the acre, getting in all between three hundred and four hundred bushels from some eighteen acres, while this farmer picked at the rate of over one hundred bushels to the acre, and that, too, from a part that had rather poor care the year previous.

After August first he got tired of tending them, and let them run helter-skelter, without even cultivating them. Having read that it was a good plan to scatter straw over the entire surface, he drew out a number of loads through the winter, and scattered it over them, so as to hide them and the entire surface from sight. Being very busy in the spring, he did not do as he was intending to do—draw off the straw from over the main rows—but left it and went on about his farming work. Soon the plants commenced to grow up through the straw, and the fruit stems to put forth their blossoms and fruit, until the field was one mass of green foliage and white blossoms.

The result was that in that exceedingly dry spell he picked one of the largest crops of fruit, and the best fruit we ever saw, and from his plantation got as much money as from all the rest of his farm.—Small Fruit Recorder.

THE IMPROVED POULTRY.—It is now pretty generally admitted by most Western farmers that the improved poultry pays as well in proportion as the improved breeds of hogs or sheep—that is, on general principles. Of course the great mass of poultry is raised and sold by farmers. The car loads of poultry and eggs shipped from all parts of the West come from the farmers, and since the introduction of the improved breeds the supply is rapidly increasing. No farmer can longer afford to raise the common chickens. If you can't have all full bloods, get a thoroughbred rooster, either a Cochin or a Brahma, and you will be so well pleased with the cross that you will soon work into full bloods. They mature quicker, grow larger, sell for more money, lay more eggs, but require a little more care. With warm, clean, comfortable quarters, a variety of food, not too much corn, eggs may be had all the winter, as well as all summer.

Enterprising farmers who have not already got the improved breeds of poultry on their farms should now prepare suitable quarters for a few of these popular and profitable pets; for you will be sure to get the poultry fever if you attend the fall fairs; but when you get the improved breeds don't try to get fancy prices unless you propose going regularly into it, and take five or ten years to learn how to breed them successfully, and get a reputation as a successful breeder. It will pay better to leave that alone to the professional breeders, but as farmers to raise poultry and eggs to sell. But you don't like to kill these fine chickens; only keep out the best of them for breeding, and sell them just as you did the others, and you will find it will pay you one hundred per cent. better to raise the improved breeds of poultry for market than the old barn-yard variety.—Western Agriculturist.

HOW TO EXTINGUISH LAMPS WITH CHIMNEYS.—A correspondent of the English Mechanic says: "Turn the flame up to full power, then blow a sharp puff horizontally across the top of the funnel, when the light will not only be extinguished, but there will be no after-smoke—the formerly ignited wick will be extinguished by its own carbolic acid gas. On leaving my office at night I thus turn up the flaming wick, and, with grateful gladness that the desk labors of the day (and night) are over, give a side wave of the hat past the chimney, which draws up the flame from contact with the wick, and the light is gone, and with no after-smell."

TO KEEP HERBS.—When herbs are hung up to dry in loose bundles they soon lose their odor. They should be thinly spread out, shaded from the sun, and when dried pressed together tightly, and put into paper bags. It is an excellent plan to strip off the leaves, rub them fine, and put them into wide-mouthed bottles labeled. Equal proportions of sweet marjorum, tarragon and sage, dried and rubbed together, and kept in a wide-mouthed bottle, make a good seasoning for soups and stuffings.—Correspondent of Country Gentleman.

SHEEP on a farm yield both wool and mutton. They multiply with great rapidity. They are the best of farm scavengers, "cleaning a field" as no other class of animals will. They give back to the farm more in proportion to what they take from it than any other animal, and distribute it better with a view to the future fertility of the soil.

IN EUROPE cattle are stabled and horses run out—here, the reverse. Horses can stand exposure the best, but neither should be compelled to stand it.

BELL PEPPERS make very fine mangoes, stuffed just as you would muskmelons, omitting pepper and substituting celery seed.

MEDICAL.

DUCONGE'S

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP.

NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound. Its well-established virtue and its high reputation in all ailments of the Chest, Lungs, Breast and Bowels is so well known, and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage, that it would be superfluous, at this late day, to dwell at any length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Bowels, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial in all Inflammatory disorders, such as Rheumatism, Diarrhœa or Dysentery and Summer Complaint, and especially in those cases of Cholerine which, for want of proper care, so often degenerate into confirmed Cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, verging on Consumption, it has been found most efficacious in preventing that most awful scourge whenever timely resorted to.

Besides its acknowledged certainty of cure, this truly extraordinary medicine has, over most compounds of the same nature, the decided advantage that, owing to its agreeable flavor, it can be administered without the least difficulty to children, and it requires no particular diet. It is also the cheapest, not only because the bottles contain more sirup than any other, but owing to its peculiar composition this Sirup will keep for years without fermentating, and it can be used in families whenever required by simply keeping the bottle well corked.

Directions for Taking the Sirup.—Grown persons can take from four to six spoonfuls in the course of the day, either pure or diluted in a little water, or a less quantity at intervals of three or four hours.

Persons much troubled during the night may take two tablespoonfuls of the Sirup on going to bed, when it will stop the cough and procure a good night's rest.

Children from three to five years old may take from four to six teaspoonfuls during the day, in suitable quantities, at intervals of three to four hours. For sale by A. CARROUCHE,

Agent for New Orleans, 730 Chartres St., And by all druggists. mh1 1y

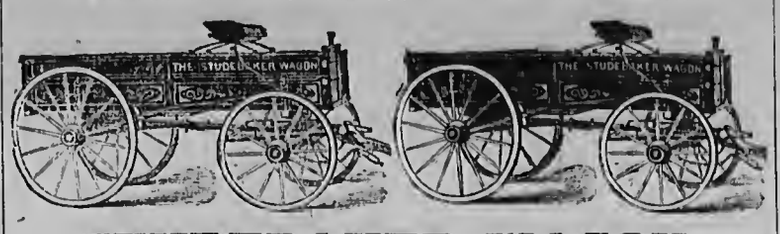
D. M. HOLLINGSWORTH'S PATENT DOUBLE SCROLL

The greatest improvement of the age on the old Concord Buggy. Twelve Bolts, instead of four, to build the Springs and raise them up, so they cannot strike the axles at the end.

I HAVE RECENTLY ACCEPTED THE AGENCY OF THE CELEBRATED



STUDEBAKER WAGON.

FROM ONE TO SIX HORSE.

THE MOST SUBSTANTIAL WAGONS MADE!

There are several reasons why all should buy the above Wagon: First. They are made of the BEST SELECTED TIMBER, the same being cut at the proper season of the year, piled under sheds properly dated, and allowed to remain there from three to five years. Second. The wood-work is shaped by the latest improved machinery, put together by the BEST WAGON MECHANICS IN THE WORLD, and are the best ironed and painted Wagons in the market. Third. Their thimble skeins, made of select iron, are set by patent skein setters, and weigh from four to twenty-five pounds per set more than any other, thereby making a perfect running Wagon, which will not break. Fourth. They are the only Wagon in which the SLOPE SHOULDER SPOKE is used; hence they have the best wheel, which is actually the foundation of the Wagon, and should be carefully examined by persons purchasing. Fifth. They are sold only by responsible parties, and every Wagon is warranted; while the Studebaker Bros. are practical workmen, and attend to their business personally; hence the superiority of their work over all others.
